70,000 Overseas Within a Month

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, May 29.—Canada will have an army of 70,000 men overseas by July 1st, according to a memorandum issued yesterday. A warm tribute is paid to the bravery of the Canadians in action.

The memorandum reads: 'Up to the present time nearly 56,000 officers and men have been despatched overseas by the Canadian Government. It is anticipated that by July 1st the number will reach approximately 70,000. More than 500 nurses have also gone forward. The recruiting enlistment and organization of additional forces is steadily proceeding, and is the more necessary by reason of the very heavy casualties, which have been sustained by the Canadian division during the past five weeks in the fighting near Langemarck and its vicinity The gallantry, resourcefulness and tenacity of the Canadian troops during these battles have never been surpassed."

Austrians Flee in Disorder Before the Italians

THE GERMANS MEET WITH DEFEAT ON THE SAN RIVER

Russians Capture 7,000 Prisoners and Seventeen Guns

Enemy Has Lost Thirty Miles---Forced to Defensive After Failure of Initial Advance---Berlin Admits a Reverse

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, May 29.—The Russians have administered a severe check to the German and Austrian forces advancing towards Peremysl on the San River front in Galicia. It was officially announced from Petrograd last night that 15 cannon, including six heavy guns, have been captured from the enemy and 7,000 prisoners taken in this fighting, and both Berlin and Vienna officially admit that a reverse has occurred. The Austro-German reports ascribe the setback to the arrival of fresh Russian forces from the north. Berlin says that six guns were lost, and Vienna adds that the force defeated consists of a body of Hungarian troops that were cut off on the east bank of the San during a withdrawal to the west bank.

It appears from the Russian official statement that the victorious troops consisted of reinforcements not from the north, but from the Caucasus, where recent successes over the Turks have made it possible for some of the Russian forces to be withdrawn.

BALTIC INVASION.

The Daily Mail's Petrograd correspondent says that the military authorities in Russia are inclined to attach to the German invasion of the Baltic provinces greater importance than those operations have hitherto indicated.

The Germans are now steadily reinforcing their troops in the Baltic provinces. They have sent seven divisions of cavalry and six divisions of infantry, in three main bodies, with weak connecting lines to Libau, Rossieny and east of Ehavli, and are daily increasing the strength of this force.

It is said that Gen. Falkenhausen, who is in command of this campaign, took with him to this front troops from the west.

The Germans in the last fortnight have lost ground, in some places to the extent of 20 or 30 miles. Their original idea to fight on a short front with massed forces to drive a wedge has been compelled by Russian strategy to extend over a wider front. They lost the initial advantage, and were soon on the defensive, struggling vainly to maintain their positions.

ON EAST PRUSSIAN FRONTIER.

Their renewed activity near Ossoviece and the East Prussian frontier was clearly designed to prevent the Russians from sending troops northward. Similarly, attacks on the Warsaw front have as their object the checking of any flow of reinforcements. In the Opatow region the Russian offensive which resulted in the defeat of the Austrians ten days ago still threatens the enemy's flank. The Germans realize they cannot be secure on the River San while this threat remains, therefore they are reading way to the confluence of the San and the Vistula.

"In the Shavli region our troops have captured the strongly fortified position of Rubie, taking more than a thousand German prisoners. On the Lower Dubyssa there has been stubborn fighting.

"In Galicia the fighting on the San continues with the same intensity. On the night of May 27 our troops opened an energetic offensive against the enemy positions north and east of Sieniawa, inflicting on the enemy heavy losses. In the course of the day we captured his fortifications on the Pigany front, where the 3rd Caucasian corps captured 4,000 Austrians and Germans and six heavy guns and six field guns.

"According to the latest information, the 3rd Caucasian Corps, resuming the offensive on the night of the 27th, carried Sieniawa by assault, took an additional thousand prisoners and captured five guns.

"On the south and east of Radymno the enemy, profiting by his considerable superiority in artillery fire, gained a certain amount of ground on both banks of the San. East of Gousskow, near Klotkowice, the enemy, after furious fighting, which lasted several days, succeeded in capturing fresh trenches from two of our battalions.

Rapidity of Italian Advance Has Paralyzed The Forces of the Enemy

Italians Have Taken Three Passes as Well as Fourteen Villages on the Enemy's Frontier---Great Clash Soon Expected.

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, May 29.—With the occupation of the town of Grado, on the Gulf of Trieste, the Italian front in the advance over the eastern frontier stretching from Cappretto, on the left flank, to the sea. The farthest advance into Austrian territory is at Monfalcone, on the railway to Trieste, the Italians being this within 22 miles of that port.

The Italian forces which invaded Tyrol from the southern frontier of that region have advanced as far as the mouth of the Chiese River in Lake Idro, occupying all this rugged terrain between the lake and Lake Garda, to the east. There have been artillery engagements at the Tonole Pass, where very strong Austrian forts bar the progress of the Italians, and on the Asiago plateau, on the eastern frontier of Tyrol, toward which the invaders proceeded up Val Sugana.

Italian gunboats on Lake Garda gave effective support to the troops operating on the eastern shore of the lake, enabling them to occupy several strategic points around Monte Baldo, of which an important peak, Monte Altissimo, 5,690 feet high, was captured Thursday. The objective of these troops is Mori, on the railroad connecting Riva and Arco with Rovereto and Trent, thus cutting off from the rear the Austrian garrison at Riva and the Austrian forces at the mouth of the Adige.

ON SOUTHEASTERN FRONTIER.

In the high mountains overlooking the Val D'Agno, on the southeastern frontier of the Trentino, an Italian lieutenant and 35 men held at bay for an hour a company and a half of Bavarian troops, armed with maxim guns. Italian artillery was finally hauled up the steep slopes and the Germans fled. The Italian lieutenant had been killed.

The Italians report success also in the attacks on the passes leading into Carinthia, three of which are now in their hands, as well as 14 frontier villages. At one point in this region Italians and Bavarians have been in conflict. An Austrian battery at this point was silenced.

The Italian newspapers warn the public that the rapid advance into Austrian territory cannot be kept up indefinitely. They say the Austrians have undoubtedly a strong fortified line behind the mountains stretching from Goritz to Gradisco, and thence southeasterly to Nabresina, and that it will be a difficult task to force that line.

Martin Donohue wires to the London Chronicle: "In Trentino and Friuli provinces of the Austrian Empire the Italians are pushing forward and maintaining their vigorous offensive action, overwhelming the enemy on all sides. During the latter phases of the action on these two fronts the Austrians, paralyzed by the rapidity of the Italian advance, have fled in disorder, abandoning tolerably strong positions to the invincible Italian army. There has been a continuous advance ever since the Italian Bersaglieri, who were first to set foot on Austrian soil, planted the tri-colour of Italy on the tower of the parish church of Cormons, an Austrian frontier town on the Udine-Goritz-Trieste Railway. There has been no respite for the harassed and beaten enemy. They have been pushed back on all sides with an energy that speaks well for the splendid organization and fighting qualities of our Italian ally. Thanks to her swift advance in the enemy's territory, Italy now enjoys incomparable strategic advantages which the configuration of the terrain Thursday gave to the Austrians. The Italian army yesterday dominated the important heights from which four days ago the Austrian army menaced the smiling plains of Lombardy, while the battle for the six thousand feet of the highway of Ionale proceeded, and while King Victor's troops advanced northward beyond Lake Idro and the bridge of Caffaro and along the Condino road and the Chiese Valley of Cindicavia, which further on turns eastward to the north of Lake Garda to Rovereto and Trent. On the Austrian Adige there have been successful operations also to the east of Lake Garda.

"Headquarters yesterday announce a fresh triumph of the Italian arms. After considerable resistance the Austrians were driven from their position, which was strongly fortified. The enemy suffered considerable loss, and retreated in some confusion in the direction of Trent, leaving the Italians masters of the field. The victorious Italians have pushed forward, and are now, according to the latest bulletins, occupying the heights of Monte Baldo, overlooking the Valley of Adige and commanding the railway from Verona to Trent. From the top of Monte Baldo Italian outposts looking northward can obtain a distant view of Trent, the Austrian stronghold, 25 miles away in Southern Tyrol, with its ruined castles, ancient crenelated walls and its ring of modern forts. Trent is the Mecca towards which the eyes of all Italian soldiers are turned. The Italian successes have practically defeated any effectual offensive attempt on the part of the enemy, who, pressed vehemently from two sides, is now being driven back to the shelter of the guns of fortified Trent.

AN AUSTRIAN SUBMARINE IS SUNK

By an Italian Torpedo Boat in an Engagement Yesterday—Italian Destroyer is Lost

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ROME, May 29.—It is officially announced that an Austrian submarine boat was sunk by Italian torpedo boats in an engagement yesterday.

TORPEDO BOAT BATTLE.

'On May 24 Austrian torpedo boat No. 88 approached the Porto Corsini Canal and came under the fire of masked land batteries. She was seriously damaged, and was towed to Pola. The destroyer Scharfschuetze, which was supporting the torpedo boat, was also damaged, and a number of her crew were killed and wounded. She saved herself with the aid of the scout ship Novara, which was hit at the water line. A lieutenant on the Novara and a number of her crew were killed and others were wounded.

ITALIAN DESTROYER LOST.

"After the preceding brilliant action we regret exceedingly to announce the loss of our destroyer called Turzino. She was built in 1891, and was of approximately 220 tons. The latter, during the morning of May 24, while on a tour of reconnaissance, sighted an enemy destroyer and gave chase. The chase lasted half an hour, when four other enemy war vessels appeared, including the light cruiser Helgoland. The Turbine immediately turned about to return to her naval base, but was struck twice in her boilers, thus reducing her speed. She continued the battle for about half an hour, although fire had broken out aboard and there was a lack of munitions. Then the commander ordered the water intake valves opened in order to avoid capture. The Turbine commenced to sink, with all her men gathered at the stern, the enemy keeping up their fire all the while.

"The commander, who had been wounded at the beginning of the battle, ordered his men to jump overboard. As soon as the Austrians saw the manoeuvre they launched small boats, in order to save as many of the men as possible. Meanwhile the squadron to which the Turbine belonged was seen approaching on the horizon, and the enemy left the small boats in the water and departed.

AUSTRIAN SHIPS DAMAGED.

"Our squadron fired several times at the retreating enemy vessels, and an enemy ship of the same type as the Tatra and also the cruiser Helgoland appeared to have been struck.

"Nine men of the Turbine were saved by our fleet. From Austrian communications we learn that 35 more were picked up by the Austrians, including the commander."

DESTROYS AUSTRIAN BARRACKS.

The detailed report of the commander of the Italian destroyer Zeffiro, which bombarded Porto Buso, on the Gulf of Trieste, says that the destroyer entered the port unseen and destroyed the barracks and steamship landing.

Value of Hay and Clover Crops

Quebec produced hay and clover in the same year valued at $51,837,560.

Ontario's hay and clover yield and Quebec's hay and clover yield were of greater commercial value than the wheat crop in any one of the great grain-growing provinces of the West.

Ontario's hay and clover crop in 1914 was greater by $16,662,560 than the wheat yield of Manitoba.

Ontario and Quebec's hay and clover crop in 1914 was greater by $4,135,000 than the combined wheat crop of Alberta and Saskatchewan.

The hay and clover crops of Ontario and Quebec in 1914 had a value of $117,765,000 which was $25,109,280 less than the value of the combined wheat crops of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

In 1911 these crops were $1,901,000 of greater value than the combined wheat crops of the West, and with the increased amount of adaption which is now being devoted by agriculturist lands in Ontario and Quebec, the likelihood that the hay and clover crops will be of greater value than the wheat crop, is not unreasonable to expect.

Will Fail To Satisfy The United States

In the Opinion of Ambassador Gerard, Germany's Reply to American Note Will Not Be Satisfactory

INCREASING NERVOUSNESS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, May 29.—Evidences of increasing nervousness over the German situation are manifestly visible in official circles today. The German reply probably will reach here on Monday. In Ambassador Gerard's opinion as communicated to the State Department, it will fail to satisfy the United States, although it will be couched in the friendliest terms and will insist the last thing Germany desires is interruption of friendly relations between herself and America. It is understood, however, that the Kaiser will insist his submarine campaign is justified on the basis of issues raised by the United States. If he does so without making any concession to American note's objection to submarine destruction of merchant vessels, a sharp rejoinder from Washington is certain.

On this point officials closest to President Wilson declare his mind is fixed. He has taken the position that unless visitation and search precedes action by submarine commander, followed by time for passengers and crew to take boats, the sinking of such craft is a flagrant breach of underlying principles of international law. Officials here who know the President's mind say that if an argumentative reply comes from Germany, even though it should be offensively friendly it will be answered immediately by demand from the President that Germany immediately agree to an absolute suspension of her submarine activity, so far as merchant vessels are concerned, until matters in dispute can be adjusted. The failure to accept such a request will result in so acute a situation as seriously to menace amicable diplomatic relations between the two countries.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

"He won't get on your nerves," sez Jim. "As soon as he's turned the place over to me, that's the last you'll see of him about here unless he has business. He lives on Red Deer Creek just where my north line strikes it, and he is all right. He's a little peculiar, but he is all right."

"What time this week is he likely to come over and say howdy to you?" sez I.

Jim whistled a signal that had six notes in it and was mighty musical, and the next minute the old one began to uncoil himself. When he got close to us, I saw that he sure was worth lookin' at. He topped me by at least two inches, and while he was gaunt, he looked nervy as an old wolf. He wore moccasins and walked like an Injun chief. When he got close to Jim, he said: "You haven't lost a thing, and I now turn the place over to ya."

"Won't you stop in for supper?" sez Jim.

"Nope," sez he. "I'm goin' home right now. This is a better lookin' outfit than the one you left with."

"I think so myself," sez Jim.

"I never expected to see you again," sez Josiah Cornell. "Good-by."

He went into the bushes and pretty soon I saw him lope away on a grey pony, with two wolf-like dogs trottin' at his side. He didn't use a saddle but was forked over a blanket, and he made a queer-lookin' picture, sure enough.

"Do you mean to tell me that he did all the watchin' without any help?" sez I.

"He used to live with the Comanches," sez Jim, "and he gets a few young bucks whenever he wants 'em. Don't waste any time tryin' to pump him because he knows better 'n any one else what he wants to tell."

So that was the way we came to the Lion Head Ranch, and I could hardly wait till next day to give it a look-over.

CHAPTER XI.

MR. FOSTER GIVES A LESSON.

We were easy-goin' up at the Diamond Dot, and between rush seasons we lolled around purty much as we pleased; but this Lion Head exhibition of faith made me wonder if, after all, it wasn't a waste of time to be long-headed and crafty. Here, Jim had turned over his place to an ex-squaw-man who didn't even ride on a saddle, and when he came back the ex-squaw-man had handed it all back to him with less conversation than would do Red in the passin' of a cup o' coffee.

We all et together in an outside mess-hall, and then I went in to look over the map of the place. The north and east lines were each ten miles long and straight, the south line was twenty miles straight, and the west line was about sixteen, followin' Red Deer Creek. The ranch house was three miles from the north line and four miles from the east, and I told Jim that we'd take the outfit and ride around the place beginning the next mornin' so the boys could learn the signs. He was in favour of restin' a few days, but I couldn't see it, and he gave Monody orders to get a light waggon ready. Then he glanced over at his books which stood in a home-made rack, and I excused myself. Books did have an awful pull with that boy those days.

When I stepped outside, I saw Isaac come in from a walk, his pup friskin' alongside and his umbrella doin' duty as a cane. He had been so tickled to reach the end of his journey that he had hardly taken time to eat his supper, though when he had stopped to think of it, he had found that Mrs. Cooper's medicine had fitted him out with the friendliest sort of a feelin' for food. I hardly knew just where Isaac belonged. Jim hadn't took any more notice of him than he had of Flames and it was some time before I could see through this side of Jim.

I had been accustomed to dividin' men into two groups, heads and hands; but it seems the' was still another group, which more nearly resembled stomachs than airy other part of the body. The stomach delegates the hed to see that the hands do their work properly and then the stomach gets busy at idlin' the time away. I've found out since that we've got a good many just stomach-folks in this country, but when I first began to savvy Jim I thought they must all be nobility.

I decided that I'd turn Isaac loose in the bunk-shack and let the boys devil him into a desire for a new boarding-house, so I told him to get his plunder and prepare to make himself as much at home as possible. There was plenty of room in my shack, but I'm so tender-hearted to put the snuffer on another man's conversation, even when he begins to talk on my time, so I steered him into the bunk-shack and let him pick out a nice, roomy bunk. Shorty fixed his gaze on him when he came in and kept it on him while he was spreadin' out his blankets and all the time Shorty's lips kept goin' rapid. Red got up and helped Isaac arrange his stuff, but the others just sat by the little fire in the big fireplace and smoked.

We chatted about how cool and nice it was there in the grove and one thing and another until finally, Isaac said if we'd excuse him, he'd get ready to retire. They all told him to help himself and he proceeded to take off his outer garments. When he'd got down to the loose and comfortable, he began to bend over and touch his toes, then straighten up and stretch himself, all the time blowin' his breath in and out with a whistlin' noise. Shorty looked at him in wonderment, but he didn't say a word until Isaac got into bed and began to wriggle and twitch his arms and legs and to sigh prodigious.

"You got fleas," sez Shorty, "or don't the mattress suit ya?"

"Oh, I am most comfortable," sez Isaac.

"Well, if you act that-a-way when your comfortable," sez Shorty, "you'd better go out and flop in the little corral. The hosses are used to rollin' around, but it makes me nervous, and the nervouser I become the more quick-tempered I get."

"I am quite sure I do not wish to disturb any one," sez Isaac; "but I find it most helpful to relax my muscles and adjust my organs before attempting to sleep."

Well, that was about the way they carried on for about an hour. Red was so built that most of life was fun to him. Shorty never saw into what the gosnin' of fun was, and Isaac felt it was his duty to instruct his fellow-humans as thought they were all blind, deaf and dumb.

Isaac was a puny little whisp of a man with arms like the tail of a calf and a neck like a hatchet, while Red was a big feller havin' the strength of a four-year-old bull; but Isaac was as serious as a horn-toad in teachin' Red how to do exercises which would build up his constitution and make him strong, and Red called him Mister and asked questions which a bird-dog could have answered.

I've allus held views on a lot o' things I didn't know much of, and especially on book-edication unbacked up by practical experience. A heap o' folks whose education sticks out like spikes on the fightin' collar of a pet dog, remind me of a fat city hoss with a bobbed tail, a clipped hide, and a gaudy fly-net, puttin' on airs over a wire-nerved range-pony, because he hadn't no defence again' insect-pests except the hair and the brush the good Lord had give him for a birthday present.

I remember one female professor who drifted out to the Diamond Dot one time to fish for fossil rep-tiles with a stone hammer. She toted around a little book with her to read out of whenever her walkin' muscles got tired enough to thank her for givin' 'em a taste of exercise; and once she spread this book on her knees and looked down at a herd o' cows who were chewin' their cuds to kill time—as she supposed—and she sez to me: "What a pity it is that the poor dumb animals cannot read. They have so much waste time on their hands."

"Yes, ma'am," I sez to her, as much like the representative of those poor dumb brutes as I could speak it, "it is."

But inwardly I grinned at her and winked at the poor dumb brutes. She could crack up a lot o' hardpan and read out of her book what was the Chinese name for the whirlagig she found inside of it; but I tried to read that book on the sly once, and I had to admit that as far as taste in readin' went, I threw in with the poor dumb brutes. They have heroes and lovers and wild adventures in their stories, and that's about the only kind to keep me sittin' up and warmin' by a fire that's burned itself out two hours before; while she was a perfect pest to have on the place when you are unfoldin' a real story.

It allus irritates me to work up to a regular climax and then to have some hair-splitter wake up and begin to ask questions about directions, and this was her long suit.

Finally one day I got to tellin' some o' the boys about a little jamborie me and old Spike Williams had had when neither one trusted the other, him thinkin' me still a weanlin', and me estimatin' him to be dotin' around in his third or fourth childhood.

Well, the she school-master slumbered along peaceful while I pictured a regular map of the whole locality, and had just got to the point where me and old Spike were back to back with two outlaws facin' each of us and Careless Pete just steppin' out from behind a crag at my right.

It was just when real trouble began and my heart got to beatin' the same as my kid heart had beat on that day long before, and I was slippin' in the fine points just as they came with old Tank sittin' in front o' me and checkin' off each point with a grin or a chuckle or a slap on the knee, when in pipes the female professor.

I came to the surface as soon as I recovered from the shock and struggled manful to make it clear, but she cross-examined all the sense o' direction out o' me by similin' gentle and then sayin': "But then, don't you see, it must have been on the brigand's right."

When it got so that I had to swallow teh or a dozen range-words before findin' one I felt would be polite to use on her, I arose and moved to the door. "Lady," sez I, "you are right—and you are also left," and with that I slammed the door, swung into a saddle, and didn't return until three weeks after she had gone back to her own range.

THE CHARM OF MOTHERHOOD
Enhanced By Perfect Physical Health.

The experience of Motherhood is a trying one to most women and marks distinctly an epoch in their lives. Not one woman in a hundred is prepared or understands how to properly care for herself. Of course nearly every woman nowadays has medical treatment at such times, but many approach the experience with an organism unfitted for the trial of strength, and when it is over her system has received a shock from which it is hard to recover. Following right upon this comes the nervous strain of caring for the child, and a distinct change in the mother results.

There is nothing more charming than a happy and healthy mother of children, and indeed child-birth under the right conditions need be no hazard to health or beauty. The unexplainable thing is that, with all the evidence of shattered nerves and broken health resulting from an unprepared condition, and with ample time in which to prepare, women will persist in going blindly to the trial.

Every woman at this time should rely upon Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism.

In many homes once childless there are now children because of the fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound makes women normal, healthy and strong.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Tattooing in Burma.

Tattooing on the thighs shows that a Burmese boy has reached manhood. The designs are always of animals, each one surrounded by letters or words so that it stands out separate from the other patterns. The dye used in Burma are red and blue, but the former fades quickly, leaving only the blue showing.

SPRING AND SUMMER BLOUSES

TRIMMINGS USED SPARINGLY.

Practical Models Are to Be Favored, Especially in Lawn, Batiste and Voile. White and Black and White Combinations to Be Popular.

The more practical waists for spring are of lawn, batiste, voile, French duque, various corded cottons, fancy shirtings and madras, says the Dry Goods Economist. Among the sheer materials georgette crepe is by far the most fashionable and is particularly effective in the new neutral shades of tan, gray and blue. The vogue for tailored effects is favorable to the use of linens.

The new waists of fashionable type are simple in line, but exceedingly smart in effect—just the kind of waists that are most difficult to make. The designs must be just right, with neither too much nor too little trimming. Many models have been spoiled by an excess of ornamentation.

Sand and Putty Shades.

Crepe de chine has a very prominent place, particularly in the new shades of sand, putty, Dutch blue and battleship gray. Black and white combinations are also in line with the style tendencies, while all white, it is anticipated, will dominate.

For the more exclusive waists, faille and plain and fancy taffeta are expected to find the readiest sale. In point or these silks there is sufficient dressing to adapt them to the new fashion requirements, which necessitate flared and puffed out effects in the boleros, sleeves and collars.

Chiffon and Taffeta Models.

The newest chiffon models are exceedingly smart, as the chiffon is combined with flowered taffeta or other materials which give both crispness and color contrast. Chiffon is also combined with net and with lace, the stiffer qualities of the latter materials giving the added smartness which is required on account of the simplicity of the designs.

The use of simple jet trimmings or touches of jet beaded embroidery is well thought of for the waists in white or in pastel shades. White lace waists over flesh colored lining are still seen.

Neutral Colors Favored.

Although white is the most practical in the showy shadow patterns, color is sometimes introduced in the form of cuffs, tuckers, or crepe de chine. The venise lace patterns and fillet nets are still counted among the desirable materials for dressy models. Chantilly laces in black and in white are also fashionable for wear with dressy suits.

The semitailored blouse here illustrated is of dark blue and white messaline. The trimming consists of rows of hemstitching and blue satin covered buttons. The inset sleeves are of white with deep cuffs banded with blue and a white sailor collar.

Shirring Is Popular.

Shirring is one of the methods of trimming. Heavy velvet is held in place by shirring over cords, and this method of arranging the fullness answers the twofold purpose of trimming and of making the fabric more weighty.

HOUSE SLIPPERS.

A Great Variety of Comfortable Shoes Suitable For Hours of Ease.

The kid house slipper is really little different from many evening slippers and street shoes. It is a pointed shoe with a high French heel. Sometimes it is decorated with a chiffon pompon, sometimes with a satin bow, sometimes with a buckle of metal, enamel or stones. Again it is tied about the instep and ankle with ribbons. Little satin slippers in black and colors also are worn with house frocks, and, like other shoes, they are usually worn with white or colored stockings.

Mules, with and without heels, are perhaps the most comfortable of all boudoir slippers. They are made of cretonne or ribbon, of quilted satin and of kid. Some of them, too, are made of the lovely embroidered Japanese and Chinese fabrics that are used in various sorts of slippers.

* * *

Almost as easy to adjust as the mules are the straw sandals usually made with two cross straps of red cotton that come from China. In spite of the fact that they are as troublesome to get into as mules are easy to get into, all sorts of ribbon slippers persist. They are pretty, that is granted, and that assures them permanency. Sometimes they are shirred at the instep over a piece of elastic, and sometimes they are straight at the heel and sides, stiffened with canvas and fitted over the toes. This kind is perhaps the most comfortable, and the addition of ribbons to tie about the ankle makes them more comfortable still.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID H. REEDER

Disease or Bullets: It has been estimated that before the war in Europe is over, 20,000,000 men will be lined up with the most deadly weapons they can devise for the purpose and object of killing one another. These men are the best physical specimens to be found in their respective countries. It is almost unbelievable and yet it is a fact, these men are killing one another, and the man who can show that he is the most daring and efficient in killing his fellow-man is decorated with badges of honour. It is said to cost, however, nearly $4,000 to kill a man with the weapons used. The weaker men, the women and children, and the crippled and exhausted men who return from the war must pay the $4,000 in the form of war taxes, and yet there are but few, if any, of them that personally would be willing to pay even $4.00 to have one of the citizens of the opposing countries killed.

In most of the large cities we have what we call Gunmen, who will kill a homeless stranger for a few dollars. Now, if we could transport all of these to the front, we would not be particular which "side" of the front. Thirty millions of men seems like an almost incomprehensible number, and we speak of this war as the world's greatest calamity, and yet the number that will be killed is small compared to the deaths caused annually by some of the preventable diseases that afflict humanity. Just think of this for a moment. The population of the whole earth is slightly over 1,900,000,000, which is an increase of 140,000,000 over the population of four years ago. Now, if there were some means of killing all of the men engaged in the European war, all of them at one stroke, the population of the earth would still be 110,000,000 more than it was four years ago.

The best efforts of the brainiest men of the world are directed toward stamping out and overcoming disease and increasing the longevity of man. Laws are in force everywhere that are designed to encourage procreation and make criminals of those who seek to prevent it, and yet, at the present rate of increase of population, standing room for fighting will ultimately be at a premium and wars such as the present will be looked upon by our descendants as a mere backyard scrap.

If man life continues to multiply, and it will, animal life must ultimately disappear to make room for man and his machines. In time we will recognize the fact that only the physically, mentally and morally fit should be granted the privilege of parenthood, and even that privilege will be limited.

Disease is more deadly than bullets and we are slowly but surely conquering many diseases that were thought to be incurable. Disease kills the weaklings, and the aged, bullets kill the young and strong. In spite of all the wars and in spite of all disease, the population of the earth continues, and will continue to increase. In time, quality not quantity will be the question for statesmen to solve, otherwise, as science conquers the diseases which kill the weaklings in time of peace, the physical struggle of the strong in wars for bread and elbow room will reduce humanity to a population of weaklings, and the upward struggle will again begin at the bottom.

A COMPLETE WRECK

From the After Effects of Pneumonia Followed by Diptheria

Frequently the after effects of illness are more serious than the original trouble. This was the case with Mrs. James B. Moir, Mutana, Sask. Mrs. Moir says: "Some years ago, while we were still living in Nova Scotia, I was taken down with a severe attack of pneumonia. I had sufficiently recovered to be around, but had not been able to go out when I was attacked with diphtheria. In my weakened state it took a terrible hold on me, and neither my friends nor neighbours thought I would recover. I did, however, pull through, but was a physical wreck. The muscles of my throat were paralyzed, so that even a sup of water would flow back through my nostrils unless they were held closed. My voice was almost inaudible, and my eyes so badly effected that I feared I was going to lose my eyesight. I could only walk with assistance and it looked as though I would be a helpless cripple. Medicine after medicine was used, but did not help me. Then a neighbour advised Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I began taking them but had the utmost difficulty in swallowing them owing to the condition of my throat. However, after a couple of boxes had been used I found it easier to take them, which was a sign they were helping me, and I felt greatly cheered. I do not know how many boxes I took, but I continued their use until I was as well as ever, much to the surprise of all who knew me, as all thought I could not get better. Since then I have several times taken the Pills when run down and have always been greatly benefited by them."

For the after effects of fevers and all wasting diseases there is no medicine can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. They enrich the blood, build up the nerves, restore the appetite, and brings back complete health and strength. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

CHOICE RECIPES

ONE-EGG MUFFINS

One and a half cups flour, 1 tablespoonful sugar, 3 teaspoonfuls baking powder, 1-2 teaspoonful salt, 1 egg, 1 cup milk, 1 teaspoonful butter.

Mix the sifted flour, the baking powder and salt. Beat the egg until light. Stir in the melted butter, then the milk. Pour the liquid mixture upon the solid. Stir rapidly with a tablespoonful for four and a half minutes, until light and bubbly. Bake until well browned on top.

DROP BISCUITS

Two cups of flour, 1-2 teaspoonful sugar, 1-2 teaspoonful salt, 2 teaspoonfuls baking powder, 1 tablespoonful butter, 1 cup milk.

Sift and mix the dry things. Add the wet. Beat thoroughly for five minutes. Put them into the cake.

CHOCOLATE CAKE

Two tablespoonfuls butter, 1 cup sugar, 1 egg, 1-2 cup milk, 1 1-3 cups flour, 3 tablespoonfuls breakfast cocoa, 1 teaspoonful essence of vanilla.

Pour the cocoa into the milk and stir until they are well blended. They should be stirred until thoroughly smooth, with no bits of cocoa remaining. Add the melted butter, then the sugar. Then the baking powder and flour. Beat until smooth and light. Bake fifteen minutes.

With this cake I use either plain or cocoanut icing.

COCOANUT ICING

White of 1 egg, 1-2 cup water, 1 cup sugar, 1 box of cocoanut.

Boil the sugar and water until the liquid strings. That is, when stirring it with a fork, and you hold up the fork, the liquid drops from it in stringlike form. Drop the cocoanut into the beaten white of an egg. Mix well. Drop the liquid into it, or at least pour very slowly from a cup held in the left hand while beating vigorously with the fork held in the right.

SCALLOPED POTATOES

Grease a pan with butter. Choose the potatoes that are so big or misshapen that you would not want to use them for boiling or baking. Cut them in thin slices. Spread them in a pan in a layer an inch thick. Sprinkle with pepper and salt to taste. Dot with butter here and there, perhaps a half teaspoonful for each layer. Repeat the layers of the raw potatoes until the pan is full. Cover them with milk. Place in the oven and cook for one hour.

Proper Care of the Teeth.

The teeth should be cleaned before breakfast and after each meal, especially before retiring. This mouth wash will be found very purifying to the breath: Antiseptic mouth wash—Benzoic acid, 45 grains; tincture of eucalyptus, 4 drams; alcohol, 25 drams, oil of peppermint, 4 minims.

Following is a recipe for a splendid tooth paste: Orris root powder, 8 ounces; myrrh powdered, 8 ounces; oil of cloves, 2 drams; oil of lemon, 2 drams; oil of rose, 30 drops. Use solution of carmine sufficient to colour, and honey enough to form a paste.

MODES OF THE MOMENT.

Cape effects prevail among evening wraps.

Petticoat flouncings are coming into favor again.

Fashion has lost none of her affection for sashes.

Black silk waists appear with high or low collars.

The sleeves of the cloth dress should be made of chiffon.

WHY BOILING MAKES EGGS HARD

Most good housewives know that if you want to poach an egg so that the white will be firm, a few drops of vinegar in the boiling water will do the trick. But very few know why. So far as that goes, it isn't so easy to tell just why the white of an egg that has been boiled turns from a transparent liquid into a firm white.

Most substances when subjected to heat turn liquid. When ice is heated it turns to water, and when heated still more it turns to steam. But the more you boil an egg the harder it gets. Even the hardest metals, if heated hot enough, melt. But the liquid white of an egg gets solid.

The white of an egg is almost entirely albumen. This is a compound belonging to living matter, or an organic compound, as it is termed, and it is coagulable. All organic compounds are made up of so many things that they are unstable, they change their forms very easily. Blood clots very quickly when exposed to the air, for example, and milk becomes quite firm when even a trifle of rennent is put into it.

All the allumious compounds, such as the white of egg, are quickly acted on by acids. An egg will become as hard by being put into vinegar as though it were boiled. If there is a little vinegar in the water, then, when an egg is to be boiled the acid starts to act on the albumen and hardens it enough for it to keep its shape. This is valuable in serving, because if the water boils too hard it will break up the white of the egg into little flakes and a great deal of it will be lost.

HOUSECLEANING

With the Household Editor

THE word "housecleaning," at one time, was one of the most distasteful words in the English language. Such a word implied that a sort of cyclone had struck the home, from cellar to garret. All the rooms were upset at once, and papering, painting and whitewashing was the order of the day. And the meals! Well, the men-folk didn't look forward to having any fancy dishes during housecleaning time; in fact, a cold lunch that could be served in a hurry was often all they had to look forward to. During this time of confusion, the family were not in any too pleasant a frame of mind. The men and children disliked this season heartily, and the mothers and grown-up sisters didn't see why those who did not have to help with the housecleaning should raise any objections to the condition of things.

We don't clean house that way nowadays, though; we live in a more enlightened age. None of us are perfect, however, and suggestions passed on from one to another are always acceptable. For even in these days of various household improvements and labor-savers, things often crop up to tax the patience of the housewife to the uttermost.

How many of us pause to consider why we clean house anyway? Is it not that we may make life healthier and happier for the members of the home? We often lose sight of why we do things and thus allow our work to become distasteful to us. When we realize the principles on which we are working, our next thought will be to try to do our housecleaning in the easiest way for ourselves and with the least disturbance possible.

A practical suggestion for the up-to-date homemaker is to consider the annual spring housecleaning as the annual stocktaking instead. It is necessary in every home to go over the household stock and decide where things can be eliminated, and where renovations are needed. If we are very businesslike, we will sit down and estimate the cost of these needed repairs and improvements and then choose between the absolutely necessary things and those that can wait over until some future time.

Of course, it is impossible to lay down hard and fast rules to be followed by all housekeepers at housecleaning time, for everyone has to adjust their work to suit their own circumstances, or as the old proverb reads, "They must cut their pattern according to their goods." Here are a few general principles, however:

Let us try to do just a reasonable amount of work in one day and not rush into housecleaning with the determination to strive with might and main to be finished before our neighbors. "Cook up" in advance so that the meals may not be neglected and yet will not require much preparation. Let us not be afraid of trying new ways of doing the work and try to get as much pleasure out of it as we possibly can. We should also plan to add working equipment each year, for as one writer has said, "anything that saves the strength of the homemaker and oils the machinery of home life, should not be looked upon as a luxury."

FRENCH INVENT A GRENADE CHARGED WITH CHEMICALS

Fumes from Missile, While Not Deadly, Have Overpowering Power.

GOOD BOMB THROWERS AT A SMALL EXPENSE

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, May 29.

The widespread use of trenches in the present war, writes a correspondent with the French army, has brought the opposing armies into closer proximity than ever had been considered possible since the development of firearms, and the result has been that new methods have had to be devised to deal with unexpected conditions.

"At first," says the correspondent, "the Germans were probably better prepared for this kind of warfare. Their 'minenwerfen' are excellently made and well designed, as I have been able so assure myself by the examination of some of those captured on the Champagne front. There is no suggestion of improvisation about them. On the contrary, they are, if anything, over-complicated. Experience has shown that they are far too heavy. The largest of them, indeed, are cemented into the trenches, so that they cannot be removed, and none of them is nearly so effective as the simple weapons that the proverbial ingenuity of the French has invented under the pressure of circum-[illegible]

"The Germans have been scoring to a certain extent by the use of asphyxiating bombs in utter defiance of the obligations they had accepted under The Hague Convention. The French have not been long in finding a reply to these weapons. If the Germans mean to use poisonous gases in warfare, the French are ready to retaliate with a weapon which should prove very effective, though it in no way contravenes the regulations accepted by all civilized nations except Germany.

"This weapon consists of a hand grenade filled with certain chemicals which when released produce gas that has no deadly effects but is quite powerful enough to paralyse a man for several minutes. As an experiment two of these grenades were thrown into a narrow lane between two walls that might fairly be taken to represent a trench. When the gases had been released a company of infantry was ordered to advance up the lane, and I accompanied them.

"When the first ranks came within the zone of the fumes they stopped suddenly and beat a hasty retreat, fighting their way through the men behind them, absolutely blinded by the tears running down their cheeks. The smell of the fumes is not unpleasant. It is suggestive of pear drops combined with very strong ammonia, and it produces such violent smarting of the eyes and nose that it would be hopeless to try and use a weapon while under its influence. These bombs have not yet been used, and will only be employed if the Germans make any further use of asphyxiating gas.

French Hand Grenades.

"Besides the newly invented gas bomb the French have various forms of bombs and bomb throwers for use in the trenches. The hand grenades are of two kinds. The larger kind, which looks like a rocket with a stick sawn off short and a very large head, contains more than a pound of explosives. These explosives are contained in a black steel case closed by a wooden cap, with a fuse at the bottom end. The man who is to throw the grenade breaks off the seal which covers this fuse and sets light to it with a match or cigarette. When the fuse begins to splutter he has five seconds before the explosion, and with a good swing can throw it twenty-five to thirty yards. Men of all arms are being trained to use this weapon, and the experiments which I have been permitted to witness were carried out by a number of infantrymen just back from the front. Its effects are very deadly, as it will sweep an area of fifteen yards, and though we were fifty yards away from the point where one of them exploded it was advisable to take cover behind a tree, as several splinters reached us.

"When the trenches are 25 to 200 yards apart the range is too great for hand grenades. For this work a bomb thrower called the 'crapaudlet' has been devised. Its name is derived from crapaud, a toad. It is a squat, toadlike thing, painted gray and consisting of a wooden stand and a part of a German shell case mounted on it. The German shrapnel cases have only to be shortened and to have a touch hole bored in them. A charge of powder is placed in them, and above it a bomb containing three pounds of explosives.

Inexpensive Bomb Throwers.

"Two salvos of six 'crapaudlets' were fired in one hour. Six sausage-like bombs were thrown into the air and exploded with tremendous violence when they reached the ground 250 yards away, hurling mitrailli in every direction. A piece of mitrailli, like a heavy, roughly made nail, came hurtling through the branches of the tree behind which I was sheltering and fell at my feet, while another piece was driven deep into the trunk of the same tree. One bomb fell into a stream and threw up a column of water some fifteen feet into the air. The Germans, when they capture a trench, have an ingenious way of describing these bomb-throwers, which cost about a dollar each, as guns, to impress the readers of their communiques.

"We also witnessed the test of some smoke bombs from these engines. They produced a curtain of smoke which was quite sufficient to mask an advance, and their success was the more remarkable as there was a strong wind blowing. The output of these bombs and bomb-throwers is practically unlimited. The energy and method with which the men, who, of course are mobilized under military law, were working was quite remarkable. The factory has been commandeered by the State, which pays a rent for its use to its proprietor."

MEN who can play on brass musical instruments or beat big drums are scarce in London nowadays, so girls have been enlisted to supply the martial music needed to stir the imaginations of the recruits. The photographs show a young woman in the role of drum major leading the girls' brass band and a girl who is hardly large enough to hold the instrument trying to blow the big circular bass horn.

Resort to Deadly Gases Amazes Kaiser's Allies

Austro-Hungarian Newspapers Now Silent After Having Denounced First Reports of Use of Asphyxiating Fumes as Slanders of the Enemy.

(Special Dispatch.)
BUDAPEST, via LONDON, May 29.

News of the use of asphyxiating gases by the Germans in the western theatre of war has reached here from Italy, in extracts from French and British newspapers. The Budapest journals reproduced these items in full, giving a technical description of the gases, although at the same time commenting upon the report as "an absurd and ridiculous slander." One of the morning newspapers characterised the news as one of the usual French and Italian libels on Germany, "to whose fairness in the war," it was added, "no suspicion can attach. They have tried to discredit German heroism by many such tricks already, but never with a slander of so grave and libellous a nature as this newly invented form of accusation."

It will thus be seen that the report obtained no credence, not because of any high conception of German fairness but because the resort to such unworthy devices appeared to argue military weakness on Germany's part. When the use of these gases was confirmed from Germany itself there was nothing else for the newspapers but to keep silence on the subject. The "slanders" were, after all, not slanders, but the popular disappointment and disillusion are so deep and thorough that it will take some time to recover from their effects.

In the parliamentary lobby surprise was expressed that Germany, which claims a military super-efficiency, should resort to weapons with which neither Austrians nor Russians have soiled their hands. To Hungarians it is inconceivable why Germany, with all her powers and resources, in a war against a foe which she persistently has proclaimed to be weaker and inferior, should have to resort to unscrupulous tactics. It is argued that Austria-Hungary, in fighting Russia, is contending against a powerful and determined enemy, but, while excesses may have to be admitted on either side, there have been no flagrant violations of international conventions or the unwritten laws of humanity.

When the history of this war comes to be written by an unbiassed pen, though atrocities and breaking of conventions will have to be recorded, it will be recognised that the war of Austria-Hungary and Russia was in the main waged on humane and self-respecting lines.

Of the many chivalrous incidents supplied by the Austro-Russian campaign it is only necessary to take the case of three Serbian soldiers who found a wounded Austrian officer lying in a wood one night. As the Austrian line was the nearer, in order to save his life they brought him in there, and then asked for permission to return to their own lines. In return for their courtesy and humanity they were escorted half way back. Compared with instances like these, German "kultur" and "humanity" take a very secondary place.

SIR JOHN FRENCH SCORNS WAR'S ALARMS

(Special Dispatch.)
STOCKHOLM, May 29.

The Svenska Dagbladet, of Stockholm, tells an amusing story which it received from a correspondent at the front, showing that Field Marshal Sir John French, commander of the British forces in France, will not permit the war to interfere with his personal comforts.

The story was told to the correspondent by a young lieutenant who was on duty with his regiment one night on the outskirts of Compiègne, where the Field Marshal and his staff had their headquarters. At six o'clock one morning a heavy bombardment of the town was begun by the Germans. The lieutenant was hurriedly sent to inform the Field Marshal that the Germans were in front of the town.

At the door of the castle the lieutenant was stopped by an orderly. The young officer told the orderly of his mission, adding that the situation looked critical and he must see Sir John French at once.

"The Field Marshal is in bed and must not be disturbed," said the orderly calmly.

In the street automobiles were standing with alert chauffeurs ready to take Sir John to a place of safety. After a wait of an hour the lieutenant was again ordered by his superior officer to see Sir Joh hand advise him of his danger.

"The Field Marshal is now in his bath," said the orderly. Meanwhile the staff officers of the French and English forces had taken their places in the automobiles ready to start, but Sir John was not worried. At eight o'clock, when it was momentarily expected that the Germans would march into the town, the lieutenant was requested a third time to try to make the situation clear to the British commander.

"It is absolutely necessary that I see the Field Marshal," said the lieutenant.

"And it is absolutely impossible for you to see him," replied the orderly firmly. "The Field Marshal is now taking his breakfast."

Only at nine o'clock did Sir John enter his automobile to leave the town, and at that hour the German troops had almost reached the market place of Compiègne.

HARMONICAS CHEER AUSTRIAN SOLDIER

(Special Dispatch.)
VIENNA, May 29.

The part which music is taking in this war is told by the Prager Tageblatt in an interesting incident which stirred Vienna into action.

Recently an Austrian soldier wrote a pathetic letter to his parents in Vienna saying he would give anything to have an harmonica. He added that he spends days in the trenches in all kinds of weather, and while he missed many comforts, he would forget all his worries if he only had a harmonica with which to pass the dark, lonely hours at night. This letter somehow reached the hands of the Minister of War, and he was greatly stirred by it. He made an investigation and found that music played a most important part at the front. It was like a tonic to the soldiers—it aroused them from depression, and even the grating strains from an old accordion would instil new courage into disheartened soldiers in the trenches. While everything had been done to meet the physical wants of the men at the front it was found that their psychological wants, so necessary to keep up their courage, had not been considered.

The story got out and soon harmonicas and accordions and all kinds of musical instruments were sent by the thousand to the soldiers. In addition, Herr August Hosch, of the art firm of Hosch & Schleif, in Neutitschein, at once published a small pamphlet of patriotic songs and hymns. The firm issued 150,000 of them and sent them free to the soldiers.

The Ministry of War is delighted with the result. The soldiers in every leisure moment sing, while others play on the various instruments, and it has had a remarkable effect in renewing their courage and keeping off depressing thoughts. One soldier writes "My little song book has become my prayer book." More money has been subscribed to send several hundred thousand song books to the soldiers, and the Ministry of War has given its consent gladly.

GRATITUDE FOR LORD KITCHENER'S MASTERLY WORK IN CRISIS STIRS BRITISH AGAINST HOSTILE PRESS

Called to War Portfolio When England Was Unprepared and Office Was Strangled in Red Tape, He Poured Army Into France, Forced Newspapers to Keep Military Secrets and Won and Keeps Public Confidence.

(Special Dispatch.)
LONDON, May 29.

When the war was breaking over Europe like a sudden tempest Lord Kitchener was in London, having come for consultation regarding the tense situation in the army over the Irish situation, which had brought the United Kingdom to the verge of civil war.

Everybody was asking, "Who shall head the War Department?" Everybody replied "Kitchener." At that time, it will be recalled, because of the sedition in the army, Mr. Asquith, the Premier, was discharging the functions of Secretary of State for War, but it was clear to all that the very best and the very strongest man who could be found was needed for that task.

But the suggestion which was on the lips of entire Britain did not seem to meet with a hearty response from the Cabinet. It was announced that Lord Kitchener was leaving for Egypt. Consternation was expressed on all sides, because it had been expected that the government would lose no time in availing itself of his services. Then came the news that he had actually started for Dover on his way to Cairo. Simultaneously with this report came the news that the war portfolio had been offered to Lord Haldane.

The Evening News, one of the news papers of the corporation known as the Associated Newspapers, Limited, opened fire on Lord Haldane instantly. It declared he had been a German sympathizer, that he had been responsible for limiting the arming of the British forces and that he was not to be trusted with the destinies of England in this emergency.

Recalled from Journey.

This is the sum total of Lord Northcliffe's contribution to the selection of Lord Kitchener as War Secretary. "K. of K." was at Dover when the government, in the face of the fierce fire which had been opened on Lord Haldane, about faced and telegraphed to the hero of Egypt to return. And the next day the appointment was made and for the first time in two days England breathed easy. There is very good reason for the belief that the post had been offered to Lord Kitchener with restrictions of a character which led him to refuse and pack his trunks. And it is a fact that the government tried to force the assistance of Lord Haldane on Lord Kitchener. But "K. of K." entered the Cabinet only with the distinct understanding that he should have a free hand.

That was what England needed at the time—a free hand for Lord Kitchener. He was three men in one. He cut at one stroke a million bands of red tape. He looked at an inadequate military force and out of the material at hand—part regulars, part territorials and part veterans out of the service—he manufactured an expeditionary force of 25,000 men and put it across into Belgium before the public realized that a British soldier was on the Continent. That was one of the greatest feats ever performed. It saved Paris, because it delayed the advance of the Germans and enabled the French to operate further to the east, delaying other invading armies more.

England had been taken by surprise by the war, and only a man of Lord Kitchener's organizing ability could have coped with the situation. From the minute he took hold a steady stream of troops began to move from England across the Channel and from all points in the empire toward England. An army had to be created. It had to be trained, clothed, transported, armed, fed and outfitted. Every branch of the service had to be built from the ground up.

But above all, every move had to be concealed from the enemy, and this was a tremendous task, when one considers that England was and still is overrun with German spies.

It was on this point that Lord Kitchener incurred the enmity of the newspapers that drove Lord Haldane out to make room for him, just as they are now trying to drive Lord Kitchener out to make room for some one else.

These newspapers wanted special privileges. They, above all things, wanted to have their correspondents at the front. Lord Kitchener put his foot down.

"Berlin has ten thousand spies who are waiting for your reports of our movements," he said. "Do you suppose I am going to allow any English newspaper to spread broadcast the news that Wilhelmstrasse will give millions of marks to possess? Go to! This is war, not journalism."

Marked for Slaughter.

From that time Lord Kitchener has been marked for slaughter, and for nearly the entire time that he has been in office the newspapers whose correspondents he rejected have been hammering away. First it was the necessity to have accounts of English gallantry published in order to inspire enlistment. It would be impossible to raise an army, they said, unless these stories of how this or that regiment fought were spread broadcast. Lord Kitchener sent an "eye-witness" to the front to describe the operations for all the newspapers, and a mighty good "eye-witness" he proved.

Then the newspapers opposed to the War Office insisted that the army could not be raised unless the government resorted to conscription. That lasted a long time, until Lord Kitchener in a speech in the House of Lords showed that he practically had his two million men under arms without conscription.

These newspapers that have set to themselves the task of breaking Lord Kitchener to their will then began to hint that France felt that England was not bearing her share of the war. Bad blood was created. The situation had to be met. Lord Kitchener had Mr. Millerand, the French Minister of War, invited to England and in a trip of four days he learned the truth. The British newspapers that had been fouling their own nests, for selfish reasons had deliberately misrepresented the situation. Mr. Millerand issued a statement declaring that the things which he had seen had delighted and amazed him. Britain was doing its full duty by France and the Allies and no ground could be found for complaint.

British Surprise Germans.

These are examples of the annoyances to which Lord Kitchener has been subjected because he would not treat the war as a journalistic enterprise and insisted on cloaking the military preparations from German eyes. The German generals did not know that the British had a soldier in Belgium until at Mons they captured some of them.

Again, the Germans did not know they had British troops in front of them at La Bassee until wounded Britons fell into their hands. They thought that Field Marshal Sir John French's army was still away to the eastward, several hundred miles on the Aisne. But by cloaking their movements in secrecy the transfer of the entire British force was made and the advance on Calais stopped in October.

And yet it was no fault of the anti-Kitchener newspapers that this great movement, which perhaps saved the Channel ports, was not given to the Germans. One of them outlined the movement, but fortunately the news did not get into German hands.

The persistent nagging of the man at the head of the War Office is what has led to the outburst against these newspapers. British patience has broken down—that's all.

QUAKER CITY WOMEN AID PRAGUE CHILDREN

(Special Dispatch.)
VIENNA, May 29.

The Prager Tageblatt, of Prague, Austria, announces that Mrs. George D. Widener and Mr. George H. McFadden, of Philadelphia, who have taken the cure in Carlsbad every summer for many years, have sent to their physicians in that town 6,000 kronen with which to relieve the distress of the women and children in Carlsbad. This newspaper adds that as a result of the war there has been keen distress throughout the town, and the money received from these charitable Americans will do much toward relieving some of it. In the letter which accompanied this generous donation the writers state that in view of the many pleasant hours which they spent in Carlsbad they take pleasure in giving the money to relieve the distress of the poor.

RHEIMS LIES LONG UNDER BLIGHT OF CONTENDING FOES

Only a Few Yards Separate the French and German Trenches.

DESOLATION MARKS WIDE COUNTRY SIDE

All Movements Outside of Zone of Death Are Made Furtively by Inhabitants.

(Special Dispatch.)
NEAR RHEIMS, via LONDON, May 29.

Touring along the battlefields of Champagne, where after nine months of desperate fighting the guns are still at work, one sees great armies of France and Germany still divided from each other by a few barren meadows, a burnt wood or two, a river bank, a few yards of trenches, and a zone of death.

The spirit of war broods over all the countryside. Gradually as one gets nearer to the front the signs of ordinary life are left behind, and one comes into a region where all the activities of men are devoted to one extraordinary purpose and where they live in strange conditions.

No civilian comes this way unless as a correspondent under the charge of a staff officer. The laborers on the roadside—carting stones to this country of chalk—are all in uniform. No women invade this territory except where, here and there, by rare chance, a wrinkled dame drives a plough across a lonely field. No children play about the brooks or pluck the wild flowers on the hillsides. The inhabitants of this country are all soldiers, tanned by months of hard weather, in war worn clothes, dusty after marching down the long white roads, hard and tough in spite of a winter's misery, with calm, resolute eyes in spite of the daily peril of death in which they live.

They live in a world of their own, as though they belonged to another race of men inhabiting another planet, or to an old race far back behind the memory of the first civilization. For in this district of Champagne the soldiers of France have been earthmen or troglodytes, not only in the trenches but for miles behind the trenches. When the rains came last autumn they were without shelter, and there were few villages on this lonely stretch of country in which to billet them. But here were soft, chalky ridges and slopes in which it was not difficult to dig holes and caverns. The troops took to picks and shovels, and very soon they built habitations for themselves in which they have been living ever since when not in the trenches.

In some of these subterranean parlors the soldiers had tacked on the walls photographs of their wives or sweethearts, to make the place "homelike," and there was space in some of them for wood fires, which burned with glowing embers and a smoke that made the eyes smart, so that by the light of them these soldiers can see the portraits of those who wait for them to come back, who have waited so patiently and so long through the dreary months.

But now that spring has come the earthmen have emerged from their holes to bask in the sun again, and with that love of beauty which is instinctive in a Frenchman's heart they are planting little gardens and shrubberies outside their chalk dwellings, with allegorical designs in cockleshells or white stones.

Death was busy not far away. Great guns were speaking in deep, reverberating tones, which gave a solemn import to the day, but Nature was singing to a different tune.

"It is strange, is it not," said the commandant, "this contrast between war and peace? Those cherry trees comfort one's spirit."

"We are quite at home here," said one of the French officers, leading the way through a "boyau," or tunnel, to a row of underground dwellings which have been burrowed out of the earth below a high ridge overlooking the German positions opposite Perthes, Mesnil-les-Hurtes and Beausejour, where there has been some of the most ferocious fighting of the war, so that the names of those places have been written in blood upon the history of France.

His "Dugout" a "Palace."

"You see we have made ourselves as comfortable as possible," said the general who received us at the doorway of the little hole which, with delightful irony, he called his "palace." He is an elderly man, this general who has held in check some of the most violent assaults of the German army.

"Look," said the general, pointing to the opposite lines, "here is Crest 196, about which you gentlemen have written so much in the newspapers." It was just a rise in the ground above the ravine which divided us from the German ridges, but one could not gaze at it without a thrill, remembering what waves of blood have washed around this hillock and how many heroes of France have given their lives to gain that crest. Faintly could be seen the lines of German trenches, with their earthworks thrown up along the hillsides and along the barren fields on each side of the ravine, where French and German soldiers are very close to each other's tunnels. From where we stood subterranean passages led to the advanced trenches down there, and to a famous "trapeze" on the right of the German position, forming an angle behind the enemy's lines, so that now and again their soldiers may be seen.

"It is not often in this war that we can see our enemy unless we visit them in their trenches or they come out to us," said the general, "but a few days ago, when I was in the trapeze, I saw one of them stooping down as though gathering something in his hands."

These few words spoken by a man who has commanded French troops for eight months of incessant fighting reveals the character of this amazing war. He was delighted because he had seen a German soldier in the open and found it a strange, unusual thing.

Not a sign of any human being could be seen over the great battlefield. There was no glint of helmets, no flash of guns, no movements of regiments, no stirring of the earth.

CHAPTER XIV.

The Fight on the Roof.

WILKERSON did not follow Pell After all Pell was a dangerous customer and a man who worked secretly and in his own way. It was like Wilkerson to respect a fellow crook's special methods and mannerisms. He never interfered with an expert when that expert was working for him.

But he could not refrain from a furtive glance in the lobby of the hotel He saw John Dorr there, still bearing the bruises and burns gained in the wreck of the auto truck. He stared at him, for there was something uncanny in seeing in the flesh the man he had thought to have killed. Then he went swiftly away, as Ruth came out of the elevator and joined Dorr.

At supper both Ruth and John were silent, not only from weariness, but because they had not settled things yet. Everett hadn't been seen nor any preparations made for the raising of the money needful to improve the "Master Key" mine. So by mutual consent they made a short meal of it. In the lobby they sat and talked a little while, but presently Ruth had to confess that she was worn out.

"Of course you are," said John repentantly. "I'll take you right up and turn you over to your maid. A good night's rest will set you on your feet again."

Ruth and the Deeds to the Mine.

"I shall dream of that horrible Chinaman!" she murmured, shuddering.

"Don't let that worry you," he said comfortingly. "I have a room right near yours, and if you want help I'll be there."

She thanked him, and together they entered the elevator and were lifted to their floor. In the hallway Ruth gravely shook hands and said "Good night." John tried to hold her little hand longer than was needful, but she shook her head and slipped away to her own room, just down a short hall. He watched her open the door and turned to go to his own room when a thought struck him, and he called gently, "Ruth!"

She came back quietly. "I'm so glad you called me," she said, with evident nervousness. "After all, it's ridiculously early to go to bed. Let's go for a ride some more."

They went out through Golden Gate park and after a brief stop on the bright beach came back into town by way of the Presidio.

Ruth was now quieted, and as they got out at the hotel she sighed happily.

"That was beautiful, John," she said.

At the desk the clerk handed John a note addressed in a crabbed hand. He tore it open, glanced at the contents and turned to Ruth.

"Old Tom Kane got here tonight!" he exclaimed. "He came while we were out and left this note for me."

Ruth's face lit up wonderfully. "Where is he? Where is he?" she demanded. "I want to see him."

At her door he left her with a hasty "I'll be right in as soon as Tom comes, Ruth."

"All right!" she called back, and opened her door as he opened his own.

She paused on the threshold at the sight within. A tall man in a light mask was delving into the desk and rummaging among her papers and belongings. At the sight of her he quickly thrust a bundle of papers into his pocket and slipped toward the open window. Then Ruth understood and screamed for help.

John Dorr heard that call and in three bounds was in her room. She pointed to the open window, gasping: "That way! The thief! He stole the deeds!"

Without a word Dorr leaped to the window. It opened on a fire escape. He peered down. No one. He looked up. A slight figure was mounting quickly and silently toward the roof.

Within another instant John had swung himself out on the ladder and was climbing rapidly after the unknown housebreaker. He paid no attention to Ruth's agonized cry after him: "John! John! Don't go after him! He'll hurt you!"

Helplessly she peered out of the window and saw the two figures going swiftly up toward the crest of the building. The seconds seemed hours as she watched. Then she saw John stumble and catch himself. That decided her. She picked up her skirts and stepped out on the platform herself. Then she gingerly swung herself out on the iron ladder and commenced to climb upward. She saw the thief reach the cornice and crawl over, then John. She struggled on up sobbingly, bruising her tender hands on the rusty rods. Once or twice she stopped and called: "John! John!"

There was no answer.

Then she realized that there was another on the ladder below her. She nearly lost her grip and fell. Surely it must be some accomplice of the thief! She hastened her way up the ladder, not daring to look down again.

At last she gained the cornice, where the ladder bent suddenly outward and she must perforce almost hang suspended by her hands. But she managed to surmount this difficulty and stumbled forward on the roof of the hotel.

At first glance she saw no one. The roof was huge, broken here and there by skylights and chimneys and airshafts. The shadows cast by the moon lay dark and strange across the tarry gravel.

"John, John!" she called softly. Then again, in terror, she cried shrilly: "John! Oh, John!"

At that moment the figure of the masked man slipped from behind one of the chimneys and made for the fire escape. She realized that he was escaping. Where was John? She wavered. Could he be killed? She cried again, "John!"

She stood directly in the way of the man making for the ladder, and he paused at the sight of that eerie figure. The hesitation was fatal to his purpose. Dorr darted across the roof and grasped for him. With a swift turn the thief leaped over a skylight and commenced to run hither and thither, trying to evade John, who was not to be put off now that he had full sight of his quarry.

Ruth watched the chase with hands tensely clasped over her bosom. She could not stir from her position in the full moonlight, near the edge of the roof, nor did she move when Dorr finally caught his man and tripped him.

They fell together on the roof and rolled over and over, each trying to balk the other of a good hold. The fighting was furious, for Pell, still under the spell of drugs, was possessed of tremendous strength which even Dorr's hard muscles could not overcome.

Suddenly Ruth heard a familiar voice behind her saying, "I'll be dad-blamed if it ain't a fight!" She did not turn. Her eyes were fixed on the two writhing men.

Suddenly Pell started to roll over toward the edge of the roof, dragging John after him. This new danger appalled the girl. She watched with fascinated eyes.

John Dorr was well out of breath by this time and knew his man. It was a desperate struggle, for the thief was fighting for his freedom and possibly his life. So Dorr rested from his task for a moment to hold him till help came. Seeing that he was about to escape him, John made one last desperate grapple, caught him fairly and threw him heavily, but not upon the roof.

Unwittingly they had got to the very edge of the roof in their fight, and Pell was flung clean into the air, to fall swiftly to the street below.

"My God!" cried the detective, running up and peering over. "You have killed him!"

It took some time to make matters clear; still longer for the detective to assure himself of the truth of John's statements.

Meanwhile officers from the central station had arrived, called by the policeman on the beat. To them also Dorr had to tell his story.

"Well, the fellow was a crook all right," conceded the sergeant, "for he had plenty of cocaine on him and a little jimmy."

"It was an accident, my throwing him over the edge," John protested. "I was merely trying to prevent his escape."

Ruth was then interrogated, and after listening to her story the whole party went down to her room.

"We'd better see what he got, if anything," said the detective sergeant.

"He may have taken other things,"

"What's the matter at the mine?"

she faltered, "but all I saw was the papers."

"Well, we'll have a look—see for papers," responded the detective amiably.

When the officers had gone away Ruth turned and greeted the cook of the "Master Key" with unfeigned affection and delight.

"Tom, whatever brought you here?" she demanded at last.

Kane scratched his head and glanced hastily at John. Then he looked at Ruth, so fair in the moonlight, and said gently: "Why, Ruthie, I just thought I couldn't stay away from old San Francisco when I knew you was here. So I came right up."

"And the mine?"

"The mine? Why, ain't John told ye? The boys are already workin' on that new lead. Everything is fine! Ye don't suppose old Tom Kane would have left if everything hadn't been all right?"

She impulsively threw her arms about his neck and hugged him.

"You are the best old dear that ever was, and I have a thousand things to tell you!"

"How did you get up here?" asked John curiously.

Kane laughed and looked at his rusty hands. "They told me Ruth was in her room, and when I got there I found the door open and the window open, and when I looked out I saw her climbing and heard her calling. So I just sauntered up myself."

"Well," said John, "as Ruth says she has a thousand things to tell you, and meanwhile we'd better be finding out just what that thief did get."

"The papers are truly gone," she said quietly.

"Well, they shan't do anybody else any good," John said comfortingly, "and now that we have the thief I expect to dig out of him what he did with them. Don't worry!"

They said good night and left her quite cheered up.

When her door was closed John said briefly, "Come into my room, Tom."

Once inside, he turned on the old cook and asked briefly, "What brought you here, Tom?" What's the matter at the mine?"

Kane threw out his hands in a despairing gesture.

"All hades is the matter, John," he said bluntly. "If we don't work fast Wilkerson will have ruined our little girl in there. There won't be any 'Master Key' any more!"

He choked back a sob. John Dorr stared at the window, at the lights of the city below him and shook his fist. "Wilkerson is somewhere down there doing his dirty work. I'll get him yet."

"Meanwhile he's got the mine in his own men's hands," the cook went on. "He left Bill Tubbs in charge and Bill"—Kane choked over the words—"that drunken hound fired me—fired me, Tom Kane!"

The old man's wrath, humiliation, chagrin and sorrow were not ridiculous in John's eyes. None knew better than he the worth and faithfulness of the old man. He held out his hand and shook the cook's fiercely.

"By heavens, we'll have the 'Master Key' back again, and it'll be Tom Kane in the cook shanty!"

An hour later, with the details that Tom had given him arranged in his mind, John threw himself into bed to toss the night through.

The story of The Master Key will appear each Friday and Saturday in the Evening Examiner, and will be shown in Photo Play at the Tiz-It Theatre on Monday and Tuesday of each week.

THE BLOOD IS THE STREAM OF LIFE

Pure Blood Is Absolutely Necessary To Health

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" PURIFIES

These Wonderful Tablets, Made of Fruit Juices, Are The Best Of All Tonics To Purify And Enrich The Blood.

Pure, rich blood can flow only in a clean body. Now, a clean body is one in which the waste matter is regularly and naturally eliminated from the system. The blood cannot be pure when the skin action is weak, when the stomach does not digest the food properly, when the bowels do not move regularly, when the kidneys are strained or overworked.

Pure blood is the result of perfect health and harmony of stomach, liver, bowels, kidneys and skin.

"Fruit-a-tives", by their wonderful action on all these organs, keeps the whole system as clean as Nature intended our bodies to be clean.

Nervous Prostration and Heart Troubles

Nervous Prostration, or Neurasthenia, is one of the worst forms of nerve trouble and brings about a general weakness of the whole nervous system.

The symptoms presenting themselves are headache, a feeling of depression, disturbed and restless, unfreshing sleep, often troubled with dreams, fright when in crowded places, dread of being alone, horror of society, fright of travelling, muscular weakness, sense of fatigue upon effort, etc.

All are curable if taken in time.

Milburns Heart and Nerve Pills are just what you require at this time. They strengthen the nerves and build up the whole system.

Mrs. John Hewson, Caledonia, Ont., writes: "I feel it my duty to let you know the great benefit your Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills did for me. I suffered for four years with heart trouble and nervous prostration. I was so bad I could not go up stairs without sitting down at the top before I could go to my room. I could not sleep nor could I lie on my left side, for it would seem as if my heart would stop. I thought my time had come. I was doctoring with the doctor, but didn't get any benefit. I took eight boxes of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills and am enjoying good health."

Price, 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ONCE WEALTHY GIRL, NOW POOR, GIVEN DIVORCE

LOS ANGELES, Cal., May 28—Once the heir to millions, later the possessor of several hundred thousand dollars, but not without means, claiming to be a victim of the "plow trust," pretty Mrs. Eugenia Hancock Prosser came before Judge Houser, and asked that her matrimonial bond to James D. Prosser, Jr., be dissolved. She charged her husband, who, like herself, is just past twenty, with desertion and failure to provide. Judge Houser granted her a decree.

Mrs. Prosser stated that a little child had come between herself and her husband and wrecked her happiness. Now, she said, she and this child are dependent upon her two bachelor brothers.

Mrs. Prosser is the daughter of Milton Taylor Hancock, former millionaire plow manufacturer. Hancock gained considerable reputation in sporting circles in 190 when he raced to Pasadena in his automobile with the special train in which "Death Valley Scotty" was hurrying across the continent from "Los Angeles. Hancock came off victor. July 20, 1905, Hancock was killed in the same machine in a collision, and his wife, son, and daughter injured. Four days later, in accordance with his last request, his family attended his funeral clad in white.

Mrs. Prosser was married April 6, 1912. Her husband is the son of a local physician. She charged that on April 5th, 1913, following the birth of her son, Prosser told her he was not cut out to be a domily man" and deserted her, ordering her to return to her mother's home. This she did, but later, she says, she tried to effect a reconciliation, but without success. Later, it is alleged, the husband went to Honolulu, where he now resides.

"It was the baby boy that came between us," said his wife. "We named him Eugene and he is a wonderful little baby, and not long ago he took a prize at the baby show."

Her attorney, Tobias Archer, an old friend of the family, stated that Mrs. Prosser is practically without means.

"The Hancock estate was probated in 1908," he said, "and at that time was valued at almost a million dollars. At one time Hancock owned much more, but his family claim that the so-called plow trust tried to break him. After his death, they allege, the plow trust kept after the estate and finally practically the whole fortune was spent in the fight to save the patents, etc. Hancock held on to the plows he once manufactured."

PREFERS TRENCHES TO HIS WIFE

SAN FRANCISCO, May 29.—Having decided that he prefers facing German bullets to married life, John Kawalki was given a chance to carry out his ideas by Superior Judge Graham. Kawalki announced he would sell his business and go to Russia to enlist.

He told Judge Graham that his distaste for marital harness developed when his wife eloped six times with A. Schmidt, whom she described as a "beautiful dancer." She repented five times and was forgiven. Kawalki says the sixth time she went to Victoria with Schmidt, where she is now, and he wants to get out of the country before she can ask forgiveness again. He was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce.

COMFORT AND CURE FOR BABY'S SKIN TROUBLES

Dr. Chase's Ointment Cured When Baby's Body Was Covered With Distressing Eczema

If every mother could try Dr. Chase's Ointment for the chafing, skin irritation and resulting eczema which tortures so many babies, what a blessing it would be for the little ones.

This letter will give you an idea of what a wonderful work this Ointment is doing in the way of bringing comfort to children who are so unfortunate as to contract eczema. It is so easy for this trouble to develop from chafing or irritation caused by the clothing, and so difficult to get it cured, that Dr. Chase's Ointment is appreciated when once its healing qualities are known.

Mr. M. L. Duseloe, Postmaster, Dugnayville, N.B., writes: "I believe it is my duty to recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment as a cure for eczema. My baby was seized with eczema and his face and arms were covered with this terrible disease. After trying all sorts of ointments the disease continued to spread until it covered the entire body. When the itching became bad he would scratch himself and was sometimes found in his cradle covered with blood. Hearing about Dr. Chase's Ointment I bought two boxes and before this was all used the child was cured. That was a year ago, and there has been no trace of eczema since. I recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to all who suffer from eczema as being the best treatment in the world for itching skin diseases."

Dr. Chase's Ointment is for sale by all dealers at 60 cents a box. It is a good idea to keep it at hand along with the bath soap to be used for roughness of the skin, chafing or irritation. Prevention is so much better than cure. Powders clog the pores, but Dr. Chase's Ointment cleanses the pores and thereby keeps the skin soft and smooth. Sample box free if you mention this paper. EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

SUIT WITH SLIP-ON BLOUSE.

By Anabel Worthington.

Something new for boys is the suit with blouse on the Norfolk order made to slip on over the head. The method has formerly been associated with middy and sailor styles generally. This blouse has the yoke, front and back, and regulation box plaits in the Norfolk style. The edges of the front yoke, instead of being seamed, are finished with eyelets through which cord is laced, to be drawn up and tied after the blouse is slipped on. The collar is square, but not large enough to be called a sailor, merely resembling one in general outline.

The trousers are straight, knickerbockers not being worn as much as formerly. Linen is a nice material for this suit, or rep or piqua. Then, among the cloths, serge in dark blue or a mixed gray suiting would be smart. Six-year size requires 2¼ yards 36 inches wide. The pattern, No. 7,140, comes in three sizes, 2, 4 and 6 years. Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 15c.

Eccentric Man Kills Two Girls Then Ends Life

CATSKILL, May 27. — Henry Lang a florist's helper of Catskill, shot and killed two girls on the outskirts of the town and then shot himself, through the heart.

The girls, Ruth Hammer, 13 years old, and Ida Reach, had gone for a walk near the reservoir. Lang had taken a fancy to the little Hammer girl and at Easter gave her a bouquet.

When they went out Sunday he followed them until they were about ten minutes' walk from their homes. Then supposedly because of something Lang said or did, they started to run back to the town.

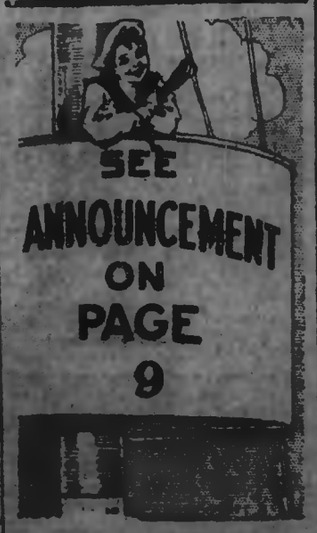
Lang fired two shots at them, both of which reached its mark and the girls fell down in the road, where they were found dead a few minutes later.

Lang ran to his room, locked the door and shot himself. He had worked here for a year and a half and was well thought of, although he seemed a bit eccentric at times.

A note on Lang's table asked that Mrs. William Branigan, of Albany, a distant relative, be notified. She said Sunday night that Lang was eccentric. A year ago, she declared, he made elaborate preparations for his funeral and paid for it in advance.

Recently he sought to induce her to permit him to take an eight-year-old niece of Mrs. Branigan's to Catskill with him. He had bought the child several presents. He never had married. His immediate family, with whom he was unfriendly, lives in Albany.

The death took place at the Bryans, Newbattle, Midlothian, of James Snodgrass, J.P., after an illness of five weeks. He was a native of the Helensburgh district, came to the East of Scotland 29 years ago, and besides carrying on farming at the Bryans he more recently acquired Nisbet farm, in East Lothian.



Exiled Bride Girds Globe Under Mask

SAN FRANCISCO, May 28.—The latest version of "A Man Without a Country," was written in San Francisco with the arrival of Conrad Pelz, a young German, after two months' flight from Kharkov, Russia, by way of Siberia, Manchuria, China, and Honolulu to the United States. Sharing his flight and exile is his young bride, Elisa Pelz, and a brother, Henry Pelz.

The perilous journey of more than two-thirds around the globe was made by Pelz, his wife and his brother with the aid of false passports and $2,200, which was used with great liberality among Russian officials and made the escape from the Czar's country possible.

Conrad Pelz procured a Belgian passport and passed himself up as such to the Russian police. His wife travelled with him as a French governess and his brother Henry, though no less a German subject than Pelz himself, travelled under a Muscovite name and passed himself up to the police as a Moscow merchant.

Agent For U. S. Firm.

Conrad Pelz was the agent of the International Harvester Company in Moscow. More recently he was the agent of a German farm machinery concern in Kharkov. The war closed up his offices and threw him out of employment first. Then came the severest blow of all. Though born in Russia, and speaking Russian like a native, he was informed that he was a German citizen and with 800 other Germans was taken prisoner and thrown into the barracks at Kharkov.

Pelz was born in Russia of German

MODEST HEIR TO MILLIONS WILL RETAIN HIS JOB

CHICAGO, May 28.—Chicago's newest and most modest millionaire is a young bond salesman on a small salary, upon which he will continue for the present. Sudden wealth has not caused his resignation with plans of how best to spend his fortune.

He is Miller Brainard, twenty-three, employed in the bond department of the Central Trust Company. His grandfather, A. G. Brainard, a pioneer oil investor, died several weeks ago in Los Angeles at the age of eighty-six, leaving the Chicago grandson chief beneficiary in a $3,000,000 estate.

"It is too soon to talk about it," cautiously explains the grandson.

"All I know at present is what father wrote me a few days ago, in which he said I am the chief beneficiary. He added that the income on the real property on investments of my share are to be received until I am twenty-eight years old, then one half of the principal is to be paid, with the other half on my thirty-fifth birthday.

"I dislike to speak on the matter, but will say grandfather's estate is quite large. It is no less than $3,000,000. He was very shrewd in his investments and made several that resulted in large returns. Of course, I shall continue work as if nothing had been left me. Later I may take up the study of mathematics abroad."

Edward C. Brainard is father of the young millionaire and is in Los Angeles. He is the only son of the deceased and the only other beneficiary.

The grandfather obtained his start ing the financial world by inventing a drill used for oil wells. This was in Ohio, when oil fields of that State were first developed. This invention led to investments in oil, which produced enormous returns while the flow lasted. Funds from the investments were then placed in real estate in various Eastern cities.

The grandson was graduated last year from Harvard, majoring in mathematics. Soon after his graduation he took up work with the bank. He is the only child.

FIERCE BATTLE DECIDING FATE OF LENS

THE ALLIES MAKE A SUCCESSFUL NIGHT ATTACK CAPTURING TRENCHES

Win Positions at the Point of the Bayonet and Hold All the Ground Recently Gained---German Counter Attacks Are Broken Up By Hot Machine Gun Fire.

ANOTHER BRITISH SHIP SUNK BY SUBMARINES

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, May 29.—French official.—By smashing night attacks, the allies drove the Germans out of their line of trenches east of Aix Noulette, at the point of the bayonet, consolidating this new ground with the territory previously gained. The official communique to-day indicated that the violence of the attack being waged north of Arras is increasing almost hourly. Both sides are engaged in a supreme struggle in the Lorette Hills for the position dominating the German railway centre at Lens. At midnight the enemy attacked the positions recently taken by the French at Ablain. Searchlights swept their front and they retreated under a hot machine gun fire.

LONDON, May 29.—The British steamer Ethiope, has been torpedoed and sunk. She was a 3749 ton steel screw liner, of the Elder Line, under the British registry, at Liverpool. She was 340 feet long and 47 feet beam, and built in 1906.

The German submarine E—24 sank this vessel. The chief officer and 16 men have been rescued. The others are adrift in boats.

RUSSIANS SUCCESSES

PETROGRAD, May 29.—Pressing southward from the Armenian city of Van, the Russian troops have occupied Vastan on the southern edge of Lake Van, and the village of Buriga. The official statement said to-day that the Turks lost heavily and fled southward and westward. The Czar's troops captured 28 guns, great stores of ammunition and provisions, and the government treasury when they entered Van.

BERLIN, May 29.—The German reply to the American note regarding the German submarine warfare, was delivered to U.S. Ambassador Gerard this morning.

CASE OF NATIONAL NECESSITY

LONDON, May 29.—Addressing the Liberals of England in regard to the formation of a coalition government, Premier Asquith said: "There is one reason—and only one—which could justify or explain such a new departure—a clear and urgent need of national necessity. It's only because the conviction was forced upon me that a non-party government would prove the most effective instrument for the successful promotion of the war that I have taken the step which has caused me injury and personal pain. I cannot in the public interest at present enter into any details and I must ask my friends to rely for a moment upon my judgment. Meanwhile the pursuit of our special aims in the field of domestic politics is not abandoned, but suspended, and when the nominal cause as been vindicated against the enemy we shall take up again the unfinished tasks to which the Liberal party has set its hand."

MAY DECLARE WAR

SWITZERLAND, May 29.—The Italian authorities at several points along the Swiss border have seized Germans fleeing out of Italy. Several Germans were taken from the trains at the border stations yesterday. Their baggage underwent a rigid examination and they are being detained. A formal declaration of war with Germany is expected momentarily by the Italian authorities along the border. Among the refugees arriving here from Italy in the last few days have been a large number of German Roman Catholic priests.

All along the Austro-Italian border the Alpine troops attached to the Italian army are searching for hiding Austrian batteries and mines.

AUCTIONED A DELEIVRY EQUIPMENT ON MARKET

Mr. E. F. Mason disposed of delivery waggons, trucks, horses and harness, on the market this morning, most of the articles being sacrificed at bargain bids. One horse brought $115, another $47; a truck at $88, and so on.

The sale was the result of his transforming his delivery system from horse power to a new auto-delivery system.

COPPER SECURITIES

The copper industry at the present time on account of the war is a most important one and in consequence copper stocks are bound to go up in price and gigantic profits derived therefrom. Charles A. Stoneham & Co. of New York and Toronto, have issued a handsome pamphlet giving an account of copper securities in general. The production of copper is now between 70 per cent. and 80 per cent. of normal, and copper metal is now selling at a market price materially lower than the average for the past 55 years. Write to Charles A. Stoneham & Co., 23 Melinda Street, Toronto, and receive a free copy of this interesting pamphlet.

WITH THE 16th BATTALION

In to-day's casualty list appears the name of a former well-known Peterborough boy, in the person of Lance Corp. J. Harold Wallis of the 16th Battalion. He is the son of Mr. J. M. Wallis, formerly of Peterborough, and now of 578 Jarvis street, Toronto. Lance-Corp. Wallis was brought up and educated here, in the local Collegiate Institute, and is well known in athletics, especially in hockey, playing with the Chieftains and afterwards with the Collegiate Junior O. H. A. team. He, with his brother, Hugh, who is also in the 16th Battalion, were members of the 57th Regiment. Lance-Corp. Wallis joined the 57th Cameron Highlanders at Valcartier, to be with his brother, who had enlisted with the same corps in Winnipeg. Both came through the Langemarck battle safely, but Harold, who is the elder of the two, has been wounded in the fighting since. He celebrated his 24th birthday during the Langemarck fight. His mother is at present visiting Mrs. Roger in this city.

CAPT. ACKERMAN'S NARROW ESCAPE AT LANGEMARCK

Bullet Struck Him on the Left Breast But Was Deflected by Aluminum Flask—Glanced Downward Without Touching Him

SENDS SOME SOUVENIRS

Mr. W. C. Ackerman has received a box of interesting souvenirs from his brother, Captain Charles Ackerman, each one of which has some historical connection now.

A part of Captain Ackerman's letter referring to the souvenirs is appended:

"Yesterday I mailed a box to Bill containing a few relics that I picked up near the trenches. A hand-picked Prussian Guard helmet, a Ghurka's kukri (knife), a water bottle and last of all a small aluminum flask that I think saved my life. I had the flask in the left breast pocket of my British farmer the day we went across about 100 yards of very exposed ground. The shot struck me in the left side, penetrating my coat, then struck the hard cork of the flask and glanced, ripping the whole front out of my coat and tearing my revolver holster, passed out through the top of my haversack, without even touching me. Another shot passed through my water bottle hanging on my left side, which of course made it unfit for further service.

Enclosed you will find the form used at a memorial service yesterday."

Captain Ackerman wrote the above letter to his sister, Mrs. R. M. Waddell. The day he refers to as having his life saved was the time he referred to in an early letter of going to the support of the late Major Bennett.

Injury To Nebraskan By Torpedo

Special to The Examiner:

LIVERPOOL, May 29.—The Nebraskan was torpedoed. Investigations by Lieut.-Commander Towers and Naval Constructor McBride, from the American Embassy, produced evidence showing that the injury to the Nebraskan was from a torpedo and not a mine. The ship will be placed in dry dock immediately, then it will be possible to make a more thorough investigation. In the minds of British officials who have seen the ship there is not the slightest doubt about the vessel being torpedoed.

You would be very annoyed to know that the quality of your Salada had been reduced. Rest well assured that this will never happen. It is the determined policy of the Salada Tea Company that the high standard of Salada quality shall never be influenced by market conditions. When the cost increases the price must necessarily advance but the quality remains the same always.

MANY VIEWS TO BE SHOWN AT THE MEMORIAL

Undenominational Service in the Armouries on Monday Night in Honour of the Soldiers of Peterboro' Who Have Fallen at the Front

A LIST OF THE PICTURES

To show the magnitude of the great undenominational memorial service to be held in the armouries on Monday night, the list of pictures to be thrown on the canvass, as given below, will be worth while perusing.

Mr. Fred Roy, who is making the slides for Adjutant McElhiney, has done everything in his power, and put everything possible into the hands of the Adjutant to make the service one of the greatest held in this part of the country.

No expense or work has been spared to make it worth while, everybody laying everything aside for Monday night to honour the memory of those who have fought for us, and died for us.

There will be a silver collection to defray the expenses, which are great.

Illustrated hymns and vocal and instrumental music will be given and in addition to the local pictures there will be a number of splendid war views of general interest. There will undoubtedly be a huge crowd present in the armouries.

Here is the list of local slides:

A FORMER LOCAL BOY OFFICIALLY REPORTED HURT

Pte. Art Noble, Son of Mr. Isaac Noble, and at One Time a Star Player on the Peterboro' Rugby Team, is on To-day's List

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

An official notice from the Adjutant General's Department to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Noble, 176 Brock Street, this morning, gave the information that Pte. Arthur William Noble of the 39th Battalion has been wounded. Pte. Noble has a host of friends and is widely known in Peterborough, although for the last ten years he has lived in the west. He was a prominent figure in Peterborough athletic circles and a rugby and football player of more than ordinary ability. He played rugby with the Peterborough team when they won the intermediate championship of Canada and among his team mates then were Dr. McPherson and Dr. Vic McWilliams both of whom are now on active service. Pte. Noble played soccer with the Y.M.C.A. team in their palmy days.

The present is not his first taste of active service as he enlisted in the American army in the Spanish American war and fought for Uncle Sam.

Pte. Noble enlisted in the 30th (British Columbia) battalion 2nd contingent, in Prince Rupert, and went into training at Victoria, B.C. Some two months ago, the 30th Battalion was sent to England, and on the way east Pte. Noble spent a day with his parents in Peterborough. Since Langemarck, drafts from the 39th Battalion have been sent to the front, and Pte. Noble was one of those selected, going to the 7th Battalion.

Mr. T. Q. Quartemaine of the City Engineering Department, has received a letter from Lieut.-Col. F. W. H. Young, M.D., of Peterborough, Medical Officer with the Canadian Divisional Engineers, now stationed at Shorncliffe, near Folkstone, in Kent County, England. Lieut.-Col Young states that he attended the memorial service which was held in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, in memory of the Canadians who fell at the battle of Langemarck. He was present as representative of the Canadian Engineers.

Company Sergt.-Major H. Wilford of the 39th Battalion is spending a few quiet days at home.

A SURVEY OF THE COALITION CABINET

T. P. O'Connor Says Premier Asquith Has Passed the Most Wretched Week of His Life—The New Men in the Cabinet Outlined.

THE GENERAL SITUATION

(Copyright, 1915, Central News)—By T. P. O'Connor.

LONDON, May 29.—Premier Asquith has passed the most wretched week of his life. Kind hearted, fond of his friends, and hating to cause pain, he was compelled to get rid of colleague after colleague. These anxieties, following years of overstrain, were made bearable only by one thought, that some day he could retire from the premiership to find in the Lord Chancellorship an easier life, large salary and ample pension for his old age.

He was perfectly willing to step, temporarily, in the gap in the Lord Chancellorship or acquiesce in the continuance of Lord Haldane in that post as was contemplated for some time, with the idea, of course, that the Premiership should ultimately fall to Lloyd George. However, in the end, everybody concluded that Asquith must retain the Premiership. I seriously doubt, however, whether the present arrangement will last any time.

Was A Surprise.

Lloyd George's resignation as Chancellor of the Exchequer, came as a great surprise, as most in the "city" had insisted that he retain that post. He had duties with which he was familiar, the second position in the Government, and a pleasant residence in Downing Street. However, the uneasiness of the country compelled him to take the momentous job of superintending the manufacture of ammunitions, now the most responsible of all tasks during the war.

The office of Postmaster General was reserved for John Redmond until a meeting of the Irish party. Redmond, however, persisted in his refusal to accept the office despite the fact that the rank and file of the Liberals vehemently urged him to accept the post as a guarantee of the maintenance of Liberal principles and Home Rule.

Sir Edward Carson's appointment as Attorney General was entirely unsought by himself, as he felt it would end his leadership of the Orange party. He was entirely indifferent to the office as he enjoyed a splendid income from his practices at the Bar, and was also loath to assume the tremendous responsibilities involved. However, his Ulster followers and Bonar Law insisted upon his appointment on the ground that he has the coolest and best brain in the Tory party. The appointment was badly received by the Liberal press, many of the Liberals resenting the dismissal of Lord Haldane as a concession to an unjust attack.

McKenna, Master of Figures.

Reginald McKenna's succession to the post of Lloyd George was well received, as he is known to have resisted with great courage all attempts to oust him as Home Secretary. He has in the past displayed coolness and courage in many difficult hours. He was upon one occasion Chancellor of the Exchequer for twenty-four hours, but the superior claims of Lloyd-George displaced him. He is a great master of figures, and although more cautious than Lloyd-George, will be found equal to the terrific emergency.

Sir John Simon abandons a big income, exceeding twenty thousand pounds a year for five thousand, as Home Secretary. In doing this he is gratifying an ambition of many years, as his friends well know, in abandoning the profession of law for which he has no taste despite his tremendous success at the Bar. In accepting the Home Secretaryship he takes the first step on the road to the premiership, which, many think, is the final destination of his ambition.

The refusal of John Redmond to enter the Cabinet is thoroughly approved by Irish opinion, although Premier Asquith asked him more than once to reconsider his decision, and his party offered to release him from all ties. Now the chief great influence left in the House of Commons, he can powerfully influence the Government, if need be, as the most powerful critic there. It is recognised, however, that there will be no criticism from Redmond unless he feels it is absolutely necessary.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

SATURDAY, MAY 29, 1915

REASONS WHY.

Some persons have been inclined to be critical of the Government in face of the considerate action of Mr. Burnham, who covered up the apparent neglect of the Government, to provide for payment of the separation allowance and other moneys due the wives and families of Peterborough soldiers, overseas on active service. Rather than see the soldiers' wives deprived of their rights, Mr. Burnham advanced a thousand dollars to meet the emergency. The necessity of this is not, perhaps, so much due to Government neglect as to the neglect of some of the petty stenographers. Governments must follow routine and red tape though the heavens fall. It is said that some of the men before leaving for the front failed to fill out the forms provided to satisfy the requirements of the Government in order to justify payment and make claims valid. Either this is the cause, or the carelessness, or otherwise, of subordinate officials of the department have prevented the payment of the money due wives and families.

NO CHANCE FOR "HOME BREWS."

The Examiner is semi-officially informed that the temporary appointment of Mr. A. L. Killaly, who has been acting superintendent of the Trent Canal since the Ferguson investigation, has been made permanent. There can be assurance that during his temporary incumbency Mr. Killaly has shown his fitness for the position. There is, therefore, no reason for criticism of his appointment on the score of efficiency; but on the grounds of local patriotism there is legitimate ground for objection. Mr. Killaly replaces a local man; and, although the local man thus displaced—for cause—has been restored to favour and given a government position, that constitutes no weakening of the claim of Peterborough to be considered — no reason why the plum should not have fallen into a Peterborough mouth. The new official may be a capable man and doubtless is capable for the position; but certainly not more capable than some Peterborough man. Though Mr. Burnham has at times promulgated the theory —when Peterborough wanted things —that the government will do as it pleases anyway, still there is a popular delusion that a parliamentary representative represents; that he should, in the exercise of his representative influence and activities, place his constituents and their claims to government consideration and favour first; that he should not, without a stiff fight, allow "rank outsiders," though technically and otherwise amply qualified, to snap up good government positions from under the noses of local men who might, with a little search be found as well qualified technically and, at the same time would have far greater claims from considerations of local loyalty and patriotism. Without being parochial and narrow, we can claim that "Peterborough first," is as justifiable a slogan to live up to, as "Canada first."

GROWING APPEAL OF THE RED CROSS.

With Canadian soldiers, naturally getting into the thick of the fight when they have a chance, the casualty lists grow and the number of wounded increases. With this increase grows the necessity of us home-stayers doing more in promoting Red Cross work. The necessity for money is shown by the fact that Dr. Hodgetts, Commissioner of the Red Cross Society in London, recently telegraphed for $15,000 to purchase surgical and medical supplies. We can all of us help, if not in money, in kind. It is to be remembered that every little helps, and on the principle that many hands make light work, general cooperation will be greatly effective. For instance, when a little boy of six years knits six wash cloths, knitted by himself, we are shown how much can be done, by substituting for "bridge" activities and other social frivolities, the rolling of bandages and the knitting of socks. We should remember that our soldiers, wounded and unwounded, need these things, and doubly appreciate them as evidence that the people at home are thinking of them. A Canadian soldier writes to a member of the Red Cross Society:

> "It affords me great pleasure to acknowledge receipt of socks. You can hardly realize what it means to us to know that the folks at home are thinking of us."

This soldier, a 5th Battalion man, is only one of many thousand who are being made happy through the kindness of Red Cross workers, and of many thousands who need such practical remembrance. We may not all have money; but we can, nearly all of us do something to help in the work. Lady Beck, who has just returned from the Old Country, where she has been visiting the scenes of the Red Cross at work, says: "Get every one you know to do up fruit and send it over. The poor chaps say it tastes quite different when it comes from home." This shows how many ways there are open to us to contribute to the comfort of our soldiers, who are doing their all for us. And the need for our activity will grow. The hardest fighting of the war will come on soon; the roll of wounded will also grow larger, and the necessity of our doing more and more Red Cross work become more urgent. Think of these things; think of the need of our Canadian soldiers lying wounded and suffering. In the midst of our home pleasures; in our comfortable surroundings; with pleasant firesides, plentiful food, and all the comforts of home, a thought for the plight of our soldier lads will suggest "doing our bit," and not leaving all the sacrifice to the brave soldiers who are fighting and suffering for us. We should not be the happy, free Canada we are, if the cause of oppression, which our Canadian and other soldiers are fighting against, should be permitted to triumph.

ONTARIO'S TIMELY CONTRIBUTION.

We are to have some noble satisfaction for the payment of an extra mill on the dollar to make up Ontario's "war fund," in the devotion of a part of the money to the establishment and maintenance of a hospital of 1,000 beds in England for the treatment and care of wounded and otherwise incapacitated Canadian soldiers. This will, however, require a comparatively small portion of the money—some two million raised by Ontario's first resort to direct taxation for Government purposes, and more will be available for continued similar work. It was said to have been proposed that the province should raise and equip a brigade for fighting purposes; but it seems that the Government has acted more wisely in taking the course it has taken. While there is need for more soldiers, there is greater need for providing means for caring for the soldiers incapacitated in the discharge of duty by wounds or otherwise. Great Britain is taxed to the limit of its capabilities, to provide munitions of war, and its capacity for providing surgical and medical treatment is also very greatly overtaxed. In these circumstances the action of the Ontario Government in supplying a 1000-bed hospital, and also several motor ambulances, to be used for removing wounded men from the field, will be a welcome addition to the means of saving life and caring for the wounded Canadian soldiers. The fighting is not all done on the battlefield. Behind the lines, at the base hospitals and home hospitals, a battle to save life as stern and resolute as the battle in the trenches, has to be waged — a nobler fight—to save life, not destroy it. Canada is doing well in supplying soldiers. She has about 150,000 under arms. Of these 56,000 have crossed the seas, and by July 1st that number will be increased to 70,000. Besides the recruiting and outfitting of additional forces is going forward steadily. It is therefore seen that Canada is doing well in the matter of supplying soldiers. When, as acknowledged by the Government "the gallantry, resourcefulness, and tenacity of Canadian soldiers, in battle, are unsurpassed," the results in casualties have corresponded, and will continue to do so. Therefore, with Canada doing so well in providing soldiers, and incidentally wounded men, the action of the Ontario Government in helping care for the wounded, is appropriately complementary. Canada has besides sent to the front 500 nurses, and Ontario has by its new hospital provided for work for these nurses. All the fighting is not done, nor to be done in the battlefield, and we all can help the Government fight the greater battle of healing.

COST OF TRANSCONTINENTAL DOES NOT REPRESENT GREAT DEBT

The people of Canada, through the Railway Department at Ottawa, are now operating a railway system owned by themselves extending from Moncton in New Brunswick to Winnipeg—considerably more than half way across the continent. At Moncton the National Transcontinental touches the Intercolonial, another railway owned by the people, which provides railway facilities for the greater part of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, and has its terminal at the ice-free port of Halifax. In Ontario the National Transcontinental is tapped at Cochrane by the Timiskaming & Northern Ontario, still another State railway owned by Ontario, and extending southward to North Bay through a country fabulously rich in minerals.

To those who have been closely in touch with the railway development of recent years these facts are commonplace, but there are very many intelligent and well-read Canadians who do not know that one may ride to-day across northern Canada from the Atlantic to the border of the prairie country on trains and over tracks owned and operated by the public. The contrast is the more marked when Canadian conditions are set alongside those in the United States, where after nearly a century of railway development there is not a mile of track owned or operated by the national Government.

It is affirmed by critics of the National Transcontinental and by enemies of public operation that the railway will prove a "white elephant," and that the debt burden laid upon the shoulders of the people as a result of its construction will rest heavily on them for a generation. The Globe believes that so far from proving a white elephant, the National Transcontinental will make possible a development in Northern Ontario and Quebec which, while necessarily less rapid than that of the Prairie Provinces, will be no less solid and enduring, and will add enormously to Canadas' available material resources. He is a faint heart and no true Canadian who fails to see in those great undeveloped spaces of the Northland such an opportunity as few nations ever have had.

The charge that the building of the National Transcontinental has loaded Canada down with a crushing burden has been refuted over and over again in these columns but is repeated with reckless untruth. The railway had cost in round figures up to March 31, 1914, $143,000,000, exclusive of the Quebec Bridge. When the bridge is finished the necessary terminals provided, and the construction period definitely closed, the cost may run up to about $170,000,000. But of that total only a small part has been added to the national debt. The Transcontinental was built chiefly out of surplus revenues during the last six years of the Laurier Administration and the first two years of Sir Robert Borden's. While there may be a bookkeeping capital account of $170,000,000, the actual debt standing against the railway would be but little over a third of that, even were the entire increase in the national debt during the years 1906-14 charged against it. The net debt of Canada in March, 1905, before the construction of the railway began, was $216,000,000. In March, 1914, when it was practically completed, the net debt was $336,000,000, an increase of seventy millions in the decade during which the railway was added to the assets of the country, besides many other great public works and buildings of importance. The best means of estimating a debt burden is by the annual charge it involves. The interest paid by the people on Canada's entire debt in 1905 was $8,674,000. In 1914, after the assumption of the burden under which it is asserted Canada must stagger along for a generation, the interest on the entire national debt was $10,928,000. A single year of war will add more to Canada's debt and interest bill than did the entire ten years of development prior to 1914.

For a time there will inevitably be a deficit in the operating accounts of the National Transcontinental, but with careful and honest administration it should not be nearly so great as the enemies of public operation estimate. In days to come the failure of the Grand Trunk Trunk Pacific Railway to lease and operate the National Transcontinental under the agreement made with the Laurier Government may be regarded as the first step in the resumption by the people of absolute ownership and control of the railed highways that are of vastly more importance to the nation than all other means of transportation put together.—The Globe.

WAR
INFORMATION

The Public has been asking what will be the effect of this war on Life Assurance Companies.

The report to date, May 1st, of one Company, at least will be interesting and reassuring reading to those interested. It deals with the total death claims during the first nine months of the war, to the 1st of May, 1915, as reported by

OF CANADA

The total death claims for the period mentioned amounted to $1,416,231.16, and of this amount only $33,271.28 was for death claims actually resulting from hostilities or less than two and one half per cent.

When you take into account the accumulated reserves on hand on policies taken out (many of them quite old), before the war, and the extra war premium of $50.00 per thousand per year on those who have been insured since the war began this experience shows must conclusively that the extra risk incurred on account of the war is a negligable quantity at least so far as the Sun Life is concerned.

PETERBOROUGH BATTERY WORKED THEIR GUNS UNDER FIRE FOR 12 DAYS WITHOUT ANY REST

Mr. Bert Dorris received the following letter from his brother, Driver Ambrose Dorris, with the 4th Battery 1st Brigade, on active service in Belgium:

Belgium, May 5, 1915.

Dear Brother and Sister,—Received your welcome letter and tobacco last evening all O.K., and many thanks for same. I sure can use a little tobacco at times. Well Bert, we are going through the worst battle that has taken place since the war started. The Canadians have lost heavily, but gained what they were after. For the last twelve days and nights we have been under the worst artillery fire that has been seen in this war. We have to keep the harness on our horses day and night. We put our guns into action on the 23rd of April. It was on the night of the 22nd that our infantry put up what is considered here the most desperate battle of this war.

The next day when we were coming into action we met scores and scores of wounded on their way back to the hospital. I was talking to several of them and believe me they sure had been through something. One of them saw a shell burst at the feet of two of his own men and all he saw come down to the ground was one serge. One other fellow was telling me that when the Germans began to advance they came out just like a swarm of bees. He said they were so thick that it was impossible to shoot without hitting them. They figure on about ten Germans killed to one Canadian. This is a fact, there was about eighteen thousand Canadians to eighty thousand Germans when the attack was made. The 48th Scotch Regiment and the Second Battalion lost very heavily, but they did some desperate fighting. They did so well that the whole of France, Belgium, and England, cannot say too much for their bravery.

Well dear brother, besides the enemy outnumbering us their artillery used those deadly gas shells, and they dropped shells at us nearly all day. Believe me Bert there was for a while we could hardly breathe from the gas from them. The French fighting along the same flank with us captured (censored), hundred Germans two days ago. I saw about forty or fifty of the prisoners myself. I could name you a few infantry from Peterborough who have passed into the next world, but I think it best not to for you will see them by the papers yourself.

Well dear brother, in regard to our own Battery we have certainly made a good name for ourselves. I am pretty sure we have the least casualties of any battery that has taken part in this battle. We have up to this date, May 5, been in action twelve days and nights. We have lost (censored — evidently Sergt. Dicky Boone). He worked in the Test Department until he came here. He was made Sergeant at Copp's Farm, Salisbury Plains. He was the best sergeant in our battery. Believe me every man in the battery felt it. They were laying the gun and he was just going to shift the trail when a big shell burst over his head. Poor (deleted) never knew what hit him.

(The next page of the letter is heavily censored. It refers to some of the wounded). We have not lost a horse so far. We are certainly very lucky. We have our horse lines within five minutes' walk from where our four guns are in action. We have had (deleted) but thank the Lord our gunner got away from it without even being wounded. Whenever we hear a shell coming our way we drop flat on the ground to cover our heads with our arms, and believe me that has been very often these last twelve days.

I am driving on the first line of waggons. We keep it filled up with ammunition all the time, and whenever they want ammunition at the guns we have to take up the first line to them and then go to the nearest ammunition column and have it filled up again. Believe me Bert, the first four or five days of this battle we were kept busy going to the guns with ammunition. We made trips there under real heavy artillery fire. Shells were bursting all around us. One day we were going up to the guns when a "Jack Johnson" burst a few yards up the road from us and left the road, which is as wide as any street in Peterborough, just enough space for us to pass. You could easily hide a team of horses in the hole it made. One of our orderlies, his name is ———, had a shell burst about two feet from him, and it blew him in the air about forty-five feet. When he [illegible] slightly wounded.

Bye-bye for this time. Hoping this finds you in good health as it leaves me here.

Your fond brother,
DRIVER A. DORRIS, 46107,
4th Bat. 1st Brig.,
First Canadian Contingent,
British Expeditionary Force,
Belgium.

P.S.—Received three bundles of papers from you to-day. Many thanks for the same. S. A. G.

Forty Thousand Shells a Day

By the first of July Canada will be turning out forty thousand shells a day, says the Montreal authority. This is a large output from a country that never made a shell until six months ago. But it is a mere bagatelle to what the requirements are. The British gunners at the front are firing more than forty thousands shells an hour. Undoubtedly one of the biggest requirements of the British nation is for more shells.

Bethlehem Steel.

The latest unconfirmed rumour concerning Bethlehem Steel is that the company has recently received $83,000,000 of additional war orders on which the profits are to be so great that the company will with its original orders, earn 150 per cent. on its common stock both this year and next. As Mr. Schwab neither confirms nor denies the rumours, they can be made, says the Boston Commercial, as spectacular as the gyrations of the stock demand.

In the Midst of Alarms.

10 a.m.—No reply is expected for several days.

10:50 a.m.—Reply has been received, and is unfavourable.

11 a.m.—Denial that any reply received.

Costs $1,000,000 a Day.

Exclusion of Sundays, Canada has to raise a million dollars a day for war and general purposes. Public works and Government maintenance cost two hundred millions this year, while the war adds another hundred million. To meet this, the Government has the revenue under the War Measures Act, and such funds as it can raise in London. On the money market there borrowing, even for Canada, is restricted to war purposes or works under contract. The programme for the current year includes expenditures of twenty-four millions on public works, twenty-seven millions on railways and canals, and three and a half millions on harbour works.

FAITHFUL OLD ENGINE SPARED

SAN BARNARDINO, Cal., May 29—Santa Fe engine No. 9, after twenty-five years' service in Southern California, is going to a grave on the scrap heap, and not to a spectacular finish in a moving picture wreck, just because officials of the railroad have a bit of sentiment.

The "nine spot," which in its day was a mogul, though now a "teapot," never figured in a bad wreck in its long years of service, and the Santa Fe officials will not now consent that its last run will be a smash-up that would wreck it from cab to pilot. So mechanics are taking the old locomotive to pieces in the shop here, and its burial will be in the scrap heap.

Innocent Man is Freed After 24 Year Term

MILWAUKEE, May 28. — Charles Price, or more familiarly known as "Sindbad the Sailor," under which sobriquet he wrote stories of his life and adventures in the Mirror, Stillwater, Minn., penitentiary publication, to which he was sentenced for life on a charge of murder, is renewing acquaintances in Milwaukee.

Price, who is now sixty-five, was sent to the Stillwater prison on December 20th, 1890, from Washington County, Minn., after having been convicted on a charge of having killed a man named McAlaster on the outskirts of North St. Paul, Minn., on July 28, 1890.

"I was innocent and the victim of circumstantial evidence," asserts Price. "The man, whose name I did not even know, was lying in a shed. Groans attracted my attention and I went into the building. There was a dent in his head and it looked to me as though he had been struck by a train.

"Hastening to North St. Paul, I notified the sheriff of the man's condition. He went out there, but failed to find him. Returning, he met me in a saloon. He accused me of having sent him on a 'wild goose' chase. To assure him that I was right, accompanied by the officer, and another man, I pointed out the shed. When we went in we found the man dead.

"The Sheriff and his deputy took me to the St. Paul central police station. Finding that the jurisdiction of th ecase was in Washington County, they transferred me to Stillwater bastile.

"I had been working on the Northwestern Railroad as a derrick man when the body of McAlaster was found in the shed of the old Wisconsin Central Railroad, now the Soo line. I was forty when I went into prison, and spent twenty-four years behind the bars."

parents. His father cherished his German citizenship and did not become naturalized.

His wife, too, is Russian-Polish, but by marrying him she lost her citizenship and consequently was held to be no less German than he.

"Last March," says Pelz, "the police gave me notice that I would be about April 1, along with other German subjects, until the war was over. I decided then to flee the country. My wife and I secured false passports for 50 rubles each. We fled to Wolgoda, where my brother joined us. Thence we made our way through Siberia, Japan and China to the United States."

Russia is Prepared.

Russia, Pelz says, is ready to wage war for another year without it becoming too severe a strain on that country.

All through Siberia, according to Pelz, there are scores of thousands of Austro-Hungarian prisoners of war. Their suffering is intense. They are not used to the Siberian winters and are not prepared to cope with the awful frosts, both through the lack of clothes and the lack of food.

Food is scarce all through Russia, he says, largely because of the breaking down of all means of transportation. The railroads are carrying only war material, whether human of otherwise. Horses and automobiles have been commandeered by the government. In consequence, people in many sections are unable to get provisions and are literally starving. Among the Poles and Jews, especially, is the suffering acute.

"The war," the German exile asserts, "saved Russia from a revolution. Just before the war broke out internal conditions in Russia were on the breaking point. The war turned the dissatisfied masses away form the government.

"But unless war ends in a victory for Russia there will be another revolution."

A WORD OF GRATITUDE.

"In justice to humanity I want to tell you that was a great sufferer from itching piles, and have found Dr. Chase's Ointment the best treatment obtainable," writes Mr. Fred Hins, Brodhagen, Ont. "It gives instant relief and I can recommend it to any sufferer from this dreadful disease."

Says Women of To-day Are Growing Younger

Our women are carrying their years better. Not only is the length of lives increasing, but they are making their youth last longer. They are raising stronger children. There is an uplift to the whole race. Many explanations are offered, but the big cause underlying the whole effect is the improvement of the homes and the lightening of its drudgery. There is now more time for improving the members of the family; more time for culture and travel; more time for civic and other public matters.

Staying younger is largely a matter of keeping interested in things, and to keep interested, there must be a variety. So the current criticism that woman is flying from one thing to another and undertaking too much and wearing out her nerves is not altogether sound. Some of them do, doubtless, but they are the exceptions. Woman's great trouble in the past has been routine.

Doctors found that the reason so many cases of mental disease came from the farms was that farm women did not have enough interests. Their loneliness was disastrous. Now that the farm women have the telephone and the automobile and the social societies and other means of diversion and employment, conditions are improving.

So, the lessening of women's work by system and the use of all labour-saving devices possibly really means that beside the enjoyment of better hours she has time for things that will broaden and stimulate her mind, bring her in association with other women and give her the opportunity to be part of the larger life and progress of the age.—Women's World.

At 91 Woman's Hair is Turning Golden Brown

Kansas City, Mo., May 28.—To reach 100 years with golden brown tresses is the achievement which Mrs. Emily C. de Masters expects to accomplish Mrs. de Masters, who is ninety-one, has not discovered a new tonic to preserve the natural colour of her hair—she is growing new strands of the golden-brown colour of the hair of her youth, which turned gray years ago.

"By the time I am 100 years old," she says, "I expect to have as pretty hair as any girl."

Mrs. de Masters lives with her daughter, Mrs. John T. Davis. Her grandfather, John Nelson, who was one of the first settlers at Lexington, Missouri, eighty-seven years ago, experienced the same phenomenon of his hair returning to its natural colour in his old age.

Twenty years ago Mrs. de Masters received what she calls her second eye sight. Previous to that time she had worn glasses for several years. When the glasses began to hurt her eyes she consulted an oculist, who advised her to discard them. To-day she sews and reads with the naked eye.

In spite of her advanced age Mrs. de Masters has perfect health. With the exception of a fall seven years ago, which has caused her to use crutches since, she has not been ill a single day for more than thirty years.

"Farm life is the fountain of youth," she asserts. "I always lived in the open until I came to Kansas City, about twenty years ago. That is why I am alive to-day."

Health fads and predigested foods do not interest Mrs. de Masters.

"I have always eaten just what I wanted," she says, "which of course, was simple, wholesome food."

SAFETY FIRST ON LAKE STEAMSHIPS.

When the "Noronic," the flagship of the Northern Navigation Companys' fleet, leaves Sarnia on June 19th, on her initial trip of the season across the Great Lakes, that fine vessel will carry a Staff Captain. This appointment marks the inauguration of a new system designed to insure the safety of travellers using the Grand Trunk rail and lake route between Eastern and Western Canada.

While directly under the orders of the Captain, the duties of the Staff Captain will consist of looking after the discipline of the ship, seeing that the crew is properly stationed and thoroughly understands the life boat and fire drill, that passengers are treated with courtesy and respect, and their comforts and needs looked after, and that the ship is kept in the Captain of the ship to devote his entire time and ability to the safe navigation of the vessel. This will enable the officers to be on the bridge at all times, and prevent their attention being distracted from the work of navigating the ship.

The other vessels of the fleet which carry passengers—the S. S. "Hamonic" and the S.S. "Huronic"—will also have the advantage of this new form of discipline. The Northern Navigation liners are, in addition, being equipped with large, new, collapsible life boats, and several new devices of floating apparatus, the Company doing everything in its power to safeguard the lives of its passengers.

Grafts Skin To Save Life

EVANSVILLE, Ind., May 29.—With his right hand Dr. H. M. Gottman, with the aid of the nurses of St. Mary's Hospital, grafted the skin from his left arm and transferred it to the back of Mrs. Benjamin Bussman, sixty-eight, in the hope of saving her life.

Mrs. Bussman was suffering from the effects of an X-ray burn on her back and skin grafting was regarded as the only thing to save her life. Dr. Gottman was unable to find anyone who would furnish the skin, so he decided to do it himself. It is believed the operation was a success. It will be several weeks before Dr. Gottman will have the complete use of his left arm.

Few Places in Germany Have Changed So Much By War as Freiburg

Few towns or cities in Germany [illegible] noticeably on account of the war as Freiburg, one time mecca of tourists bent on visiting the beautiful black forest.

From a quiet, peaceful little city, well equipped with schools, it has become a city of hospitals to which scores of the wounded are brought daily from the west front, especially from nearby Alsace. The Red Cross flag floats over scores of buildings that once were educational institutions, theatres and amusement resorts.

Children now go to the famous University of Freiburg for their lessons, because their own school buildings are now used to house the wounded German and French soldiers. Fully a dozen school buildings have been requisitioned for hospital work, all of them being administered by the German Red Cross in connection to the regular hospitals of the city. In addition every available amusement hall and theatre is serving the same purpose. In the auditorium, the gallery and even on the stage of the famous old "Festhalls" soldiers now lie, or, convalescing, stroll in an adjoining garden that formerly was filled, nightly, at least, with devotees of Bacchus.

The Red Cross workers in Freiburg are proud, and justly, of what they have accomplished, for the present quarters for wounded soldiers were set up and ready four days after the war began, before mobilization ever was complete.

The Turkish-Italian war, one Red Cross matron explained, taught the German Red Cross that it must be ready for emergencies. Consequently there was on hand a vast number of gray-painted iron beds, bed linen, blankets, stretchers and supplies of all kinds.

When the war started everyone in Freiburg turned to and helped. The scholars in the High Schools in one day succeeded in getting their desks and seats out of the way and in storage. In another 24 hours they had cleaned the old buildings from cellar to garret and on the third day had carried in the hospital apparatus. It needed only one additional day to put everything in order and stand by for the first consignment of wounded.

For nine months the fighting has never been very remote from Freiburg, and it has consequently been a constant hospital centre. Street cars run over into Alsace, gather up loads of wounded and bring them back. The official report of a great battle, even though it spells victory for the German arms, is almost invariably the precurser of a big batch of wounded soldiers, often German, though sometimes French or English.

The chemical laboratories in the high schools or 'gymnasia' have been found readily adaptable for operating rooms. Most of them have water facilities which are invaluable, and most of them are light and airy.

The ordinary recitation rooms are used for the most part for the soldiers, and the smaller rooms, one time offices of instructors, are available for officers. Almost the only serious changes that have been necessary have been the installation of bath rooms.

Freiburg follows the example of Lubeck and other German cities in giving soldiers a good opportunity to see the town before leaving either for the front again or for home. Parties of sight seeing soldiers, many of them crippled, are always to be seen about the streets of the beautiful little black forest city.

The first thing one sees in approaching Freiburg, and the last thing as one leaves, is the great Red Cross banner, flying over building after building, suggesting instantly the title of "City of Hospitals."

SHERBROOKE ST. CHOSEN AS SUB. STATION SITE

Utilities Commission Has Secured Option on Property Between Aylmer and Bethune Streets

It was decided at the City Council meeting last night to prepare a by-law to provide for a sum of money for the purchase of property for, and erection and equipment of a new sub-station required by the Utilities Commission, the cost of which was estimated at about $41,800.00.

The members of the Utilities Commission waited on the City Council at the meeting last night.

Mr. T. F. Matthews, speaking for the members of the Utilities Commission, said that a site had been found for the new sub-station, namely on Sherbrooke street, between Aylmer and Bethune streets. This sub-station would cost between $40,000 and $50,000. Only an option has been secured on the property so far.

The price they figured on paying for the site was about $7,000. An up-to-date sub-station could be built, including the cost of the property, for $41,000. The interest and sinking fund would be practically 8 per cent.

In order to have the station in operation by Nov. 1 it would be necessary for the Council to pass a by-law at once since transformers, etc., would have to be ordered.

Ald. Duffus, as chairman of the Fire, Water and Light committee, said he had many complaints for better lighting facilities. He thought it would be to the advantage of the citizens to have a sub-station as recommended by the commission. He fathered a motion to prepare a by-law for the amount necessary. Ald. Green seconded the motion, which was carried.

Russian Myth Once More

The origin of the story of the passing of bodies of Russian troops through England and Scotland last autumn is explained by Mr. H. B. Steele, hon. secretary of the Press Representatives' Committee at the Press Bureau, London.

The facts, he says, are simple: "A large number of Russian officers visited this country to buy munitions of war, or to join as attaches the staffs of the various commands then leaving for the front. Accompanying them was a number of soldier servants, and the bulk travelled from Archangel to Scottish ports. These officers and men were undoubtedly seen by reliable witnesses. The same week-end, the War Office decided to change the location of camps of the Territorials then in training. To secure this end the trains were handsignalled and moved at night with blinds drawn. The engine-drivers knew nothing of the loads they pulled. Meanwhile, however, some Scottish railway officials had corresponded with southern friends and talked of having a lot of Russians travelling on their line. The rest was easy and the handful grew to an enormous army."

As far as Ireland is concerned the reconstruction of the Government is regarded as the last act in the Irish drama and the removal of the last obstacle towards Home Rule. There is already a movement afoot to launch a united campaign for an Imperial Federation as not only recognizing the Colonies during the present crisis, but also as affording the best road of escape for the outstanding Ulster difficulty. This movement, which is already begun, is strongly supported by the Liberals, and by a large majority of the Conservatives.

Will Receive Support.

The new Government will unquestionably receive full and even generous support from all parties. If it breaks up it will not be because of outside pressure, but of inside disagreement. This, however, will be largely kept back by public opinion, which is now more thoroughly awake to-day than at any other period to the seriousness of the war. There is a deeper sense of its difficulties, duration, and a grimmer determination to concentrate and augment all the resources of the nation in order to bring it to a successful conclusion. The public have ceased to talk of a short war and even the most optimistic give it another year to run as a minimum. Many even believe that Kitchener was not far wrong when he declared the war would last three years.

This new spirit on the part of the people is indicated by the virtual cessation of racing, and the renewed agitation for conscription. No matter what may be the cost, or however long the war, the determination remains absolutely unshaken to continue the struggle to the bitter end. These intentions are naturally increased by Italy's intervention, which came as a joyous relief after a period of uncertainty. Her entrance into the struggle is universally interpreted as throwing a new factor into the war which must eventually turn the scale against Germany.

Ferocity Increasing.

The ferocity which I have noticed as increasing several times has, of course, become more rabid since the loss of the Lusitania. That event has added, in my opinion, at this moment, a year to the war. For it has now made us feel so bitter and, at the same time, so hopeless of Germany, that it is felt more than ever that the peace which will satisfy us, can only be made on conquered and occupied German soil, and to conquer and occupy German soil, everybody realizes, will take a considerable time yet.

A conversation I had with a distinguished English officer, on my way to Paris, brought out the fact that at the front, the point in common with the leading soldiers on both sides of the Allies and of the enemy is that while it is possible for either army to take the first line of trenches and without much loss of life, it becomes difficult to take the second line and almost impossible to take the third—certainly at this stage. There are many people in England, accordingly, who are quite content to allow our generals to hold the enemy, to keep him from advancing and to wear him down. Others are less patient and there have been some strong attacks in some papers against individual ministers. The Times girds mainly at Mr. Asquith; the Morning Post attacks Churchill—but these journals do not get much support, and the Daily Telegraph, which is the most powerful now of all the Unionist journals, has elected the opinion of the rank and file of its party and has deliberately refrained from any such criticisms.

Time Fights for Allies.

We are content, then, to allow General French and General Joffre to carry on the campaign in their slow, deliberate way. We are convinced that time fights every hour on our side; for the Germans, we believe, have reached their maximum of effort, while we began the war at the minimum, and are growing stronger every day. The Kitchener men are beginning at last to go to the front. One of the first divisions to get there was a fine Irish division under the command of Sir Bryan Martin, one of the ablest soldiers in the British army, the man who relieved Mafeking, and, of course, an Irishman—member of an Old County Galway family. As I have mentioned him, I may add that this daring and reckless soldier, who has done some of the most wonderful things in the history of the British army, is a thin, nervous, shy, ascetic looking man; the very opposite of the "beau sabreur," which you might expect him to be. Other divisions will follow quickly, and these men, thrown into the fight fresh and eager, will make things more difficult for the Germans. If the war lasts, Kitchener will be able to send in three million men.

How, then, are the Germans to be beaten. I believe—and this is the opinion of most people—that Germany's defeat will come from the flank.

First, there is still the immense pressure upon her of the suffocation of all her trade through the supremacy of the British navy. This pressure may not affect food supply so much as commercial and trading interest. Our view in England is that all Germany's recent financial transactions have been profoundly unsound, that she has found financial escape in what Lloyd George calls a "bridge of paper." We feel confident that this dislocation of her finance and of her trade must be exercising on her people much greater pressure than she admits.

Pressure on Flank.

In addition to this there is the pressure on her flank of the Russian forces. I have been told by a war correspondent that the Russians are not in the least disturbed by any number of checks or any loss of life. A prominent Russian said in a London drawing room, some weeks ago, that Russia was ready to go on if necessary, for five years; that her people regard this as a Holy War, and a final campaign for the whole Slav race to rise to equality with the oppressive Germen. Indeed, the feeling against Germany is, from all I hear, much stronger in Russia even than in England; although in England feeling runs terrifically since the Lusitania torpedoing. I have heard that the feeling in Russia is so strong that every German or every Russian of German blood and with a German name, is now suspected and hated. When the Czar said to the Grand Duke Nicholas that he hoped he would beat the Germans, the Grand Duke sardonically replied that he hoped the Czar was as sure of beating his own Germans who were around him at court. Count Bobrinsky, one of the most powerful members of the Russian Duma and a great Conservative leader, almost took my breath away when he said that the annexation of Bosnia-Herzegovina by Austria would have to be wiped out in blood.

Nothing Will Stop Russia.

Russia, then, although she loses a hundred thousand men here and another hundred thousand there, will still go on; nothing stops the tide, but the tears of grim old Omnipotence. Time is on the side of the Allies, and arms and ammunition will come to her when we have taken Constantinople, as we believe we can, though we find it so long and tough a job.

And then, we believe that the armies of the neutral nations will be added to the forces of the Russians in attacking Austria and Germany, through Austria. We have no doubt that every country in the East of Europe will ultimately have to come in, and come in on our side. However strong and numerous be the army of Germany and of Austria, it is impossible that she should be able to beat so many foes. Things are not decided in Greece, but I am told by Greeks in London that the feeling is rising higher every day against the King, and there are even muttered threats against the dynasty. Nothing would do Germany so much harm in Greece as the dissemination of the idea that King Constantine is influenced in his policy by his queen. Though she is a clever woman and works hard, she is not popular. She is rather stiff and rigid, after the German fashion, some people say from pride, others from shyness. Whatever the reason is, she has never been able to exercise that glamour over the people which her great position might enable her to do.

United States Question.

What the United States will do we must leave her own people to decide, of course, and to decide with regard to her own interests and with the nationality which we, who know America, feel will come once her decision is made. But we can conclude from what the German authorities have been saying—that they will come when it will be difficult for even the most ardent lover of peace to resist the demand for the assertion of the safety of American citizens.

There is a curious theory among many shrewd men here—I can not say that I share it—that Germany wants to provoke America and other countries into war. The idea is that such a world combination would give a good reason for Germany proposing terms on peace on the ground that strong though she may be, she is not strong enough to resist the world, and that thus the destruction of Germany and of the Hohenzollern dynasty might be avoided.

Absorbs Skin, Chases Wrinkles—Young Again

"The shock at beholding myself in the glass after nine long weeks ahed, nearly caused a relapse," writes Emily Colson in Home Queen. "The faded face, with its lines of illness and worry, seemed twenty years older. Now, I thought, I could not attend my sham's wedding, eleven days off, to which I had looked hopefully forward.

"She herself came to my rescue. She procured an ounce of ordinary mercolized wax at the druggists, which she bade me spread on like cold cream, washing it off next morning. Applied nightly, this apparently absorbed the withered skin, so gently I experienced no discomfort. Upon the wedding morn the pallid complexion had entirely given way to one of youthful colour and freshness.

"And there wasn't a wrinkle. This due to a wash, being made by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint witch hazel. The daily face bath had dispersed every line."

Band Concerts For South Ward

Band Stand Will Be Erected at King Edward Park by the City

Ald. Green had something to propose to the Council last night for the residents of the south ward. One of the city bands has offered to give concerts in the south ward free of charge if a stand would be erected by the city. A rough, strong stand would be all that would be needed.

Many south enders were unable to come so far with their children, to Victoria Park.

The Property committee has been looking into the question for some time.

Outside Engineer Agrees That it Should Be Located at Point Already Chosen---His Report Was Received by City Council at Meeting Last Night.

The Montreal Engineer, Mr. Walter J. Francis, who was requested by the city to go over the ground, plans, etc., in connection with the site of the proposed new pumping station, has decided that it should be at the foot of Lock street, at the point already chosen. The letter from him, in which he sums up his trip here, was read at the meeting of the City Council last night, but was not the subject of any comment from any of the Aldermen. It was accorded the reception, "received" when read by City Clerk Armstrong.

The letter from the Montreal firm was as follows:

S. R. Armstrong, City Clerk,

Peterborough, Ont.,
re Peterborough Sewage System:

Dear Sir,—In accordance with your instructions, the writer visited the City of Peterborough on the 19th instant, in order that he might be able to advise the Mayor and the Chairman of the Board of Works regarding the location of the pumping plant in connection with the proposed sewage disposal works. Mr. Francis was met in the early morning by His Worship Mayor Buller; Mr. Alderman G. W. Green, Chairman of the Board of Works; Mr. S. R. Armstrong, City Clerk, and Mr. R. H. Parsons, City Engineer. After a general discussion of the proposed sewage system, the whole party went over the south part of the city and both sides of the River Otonabee in the district more particularly concerned. Having spent the greater part of the forenoon in studying the ground, the party returned to the City Hall, where the City Engineer and the writer made a detail study of the plans, records and correspondence in connection with the proposition. In the latter part of the afternoon, after the study finished, the subject was again discussed at considerable length, when the Mayor, the Chairman and the City Clerk joined the City Engineer and the writer.

We are satisfied that we have fully considered such points as the general arrangement of the proposed system, the features and cost of the various types of construction included in the system, the drainage area of the proposed system, the land that may in the future be drained to the proposed system as separate areas, the nature of the soil throughout the district, the up-building of the district, and the period of construction of the proposed system, all as far as they are in any way related to the pumping station and its location.

Having regard to all the matters concerned, we are entirely satisfied that the site of the proposed pumping station should be at the foot of Lock street, at the point already chosen.

We desire to express our thanks for having been entrusted with this service. We also wish to record our appreciation of the courtesies extended and the assistance given us by all whom we have already named.

Yours very truly,
Walter J. Francis and Company,
Per Walter J. Francis.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS.

Mrs. Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N.B. writes: "Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat trouble, and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

Unable to Play Bridge She Sues for $500 Balm

LOS ANGELES, May 29. — Bridge whist got into the court records, when the question whether or not an injured elbow on a right-handed person is a detriment to the game. Superior Judge Wood and a jury are now endeavouring to decide.

Mrs. Florence Arfwedson, formerly society bridge whist teacher, at Santo Monico, contends that it is and she wants the Pacific Electric to pay her $500 damages.

On the other hand, the Pacific Electric contends that a person does not deal with a left elbow, that one can tell a heart from a spade, say "pray do," "bridge it to your partner" and follow all the other devices of the game just as well, even if there is pain in the left elbow.

Mrs. Arfwedson contends that she fell from a Pacific Electric car on April 16th, 1913, and wrenched her left elbow. As a teacher of bridge, she says she made $120 a month, but since the injury she has been unable to play the game and has given up her calling.

AWAITING ARRIVAL OF ATTACHMENTS

Street Oiling Will Commence as Soon as Sprinklers Are Ready

Ald. Green, as chairman of the Board of Works, was given a busy session answering questions for a few minutes last evening, at the council meeting on the subject of when street oiling was to be commenced, came up. Some of the aldermen expressed themselves as getting a little anxious to have it started at once. They had nearly all been approached by ratepayers to know when the dust was going to be settled and wanted some definite information last night from the West Ward representative.

As explained by the chairman of the Board of Works, the attachment for the water carts has not arrived yet, though he had received notification of shipment being made some four or five days ago.

As soon as the attachments arrived and were made to work satisfactorily, oil would be ordered. The people supplying the oil guaranteed to deliver a car on 48 hours' notice.

WHAT THE Y. M. C. A. IS DOING FOR THE SOLDIERS OF CANADA

Letters have been tyled at the local Y.M.C.A. from Col. R. B. Clegg, Major S. T. Medd and dozens of other officers and privates from Peterborough, commending the work of the Y.M.C.A. at military camps, on military trains, transports and so forth, as we presume that the local friends of the soldiers will be pleased to learn something of the nature of what the association is doing in behalf of our boys.

The following are extracts from a letter written by Mr. H. A. Dowler, a young business man of Winnipeg, who has been a volunteer Y.M.C.A. worker in connection with troop trains:

"I undertook to publish a daily newspaper, known as the '16th Field Ambulance Gazette.' I carried this out by having each car take care of some one department of the paper. For instance, one car took charge of the editorials, another the sporting page, or music and drama, and others the local and personal news, financial news, news of the day, war correspondent, etc. I appointed a sub-editor in each car, and I left with him blank paper and an outline of his department, and I announced the fact that any contributions handed him would be published after passing the censor. Later in the day I collected the contributions handed in to each sub-editor. The Colonel's secretary, who had a typewriter on board, arranged the news items and ran off ten copies by the use of their paper and carbon. I was then able to distribute one copy to each car.

"The issue was a decided success, and the men not only enjoyed employing their time in preparing copy, but were much amused and interested in reading it. Not the least interested of our readers were the Colonel himself and the other officers, who wished copies to mail home."

Other work conducted by Mr. Dowler consisted of mock trials, concerts, athletic contests and so forth, on the train during this long tiresome journey.

"In every car the Y.M.C.A. was cheered to the echo, and the remarks concerning the work accomplished were ample evidence that it strikes home and is appreciated. They marched me through the length of the cars with a tin plate band, singing 'He's a Jolly Good Fellow' and 'Auld Lang Syne,' and it was gratifying to know what they thought of the work.

"I had numerous inquiries as to whether there would be a Y.M.C.A. man on board the boat, and, if not, where they would 'hook up' with one again, and a hundred or more inquiries of a like nature."

'The following is an extract from a letter written by Capt. W. W. Lee, our National Council representative at the base in England:

"This week we start the concert parties again, and four artists go down to Shorncliffe and Canterbury to the training brigade, reinforcement and Fort Garry Horse, on Wednesday and Thursday, at the expense of the War Contingent Association. The cinema has also started at Shorncliffe this week, and I have a number of speakers arranged for, to visit the various Canadian camps.

"I was in the pay and record office this morning and overheard a striking tribute to the work of our men. A staff captain had just come in from the front and was talking to one of the other staff officers near where I was standing. Between scraps of the conversation I heard this remark passed: 'Those Y.M.C.A. fellows with our crowd are doing a —— fine bit of work. They are supplying stationery, reading matter, stuff for games, and keeping the men's spirits up in great shape.'

"Just to give you an idea of the things which I am sending off to our men at the front, let me enumerate those which have gone since I last wrote you a week ago:

20 packs of Canadian newspapers.
25 parcels of magazines (current).
445 lbs. centres of magazines (used).
25,000 sheets of notepaper and 15,000 envelopes.
4 gross of pencils.
2,000 daily papers.
1 doz. footballs.
1 doz. baseball sets.
1 doz. sets checkers.
1,000 postcards.
Caps, shirts, boot polish, belts and various personal things.
Two watches and two style pens.
Writing wallet.
Pair trousers.
20 Y.M.C.A. signs.

In addition to these, 12 packs of Canadian newspapers have been distributed among the units still in England, and several sent to the various Canadian hospitals."

The local association has a part in this work. A field day was held from which a contribution of $23 was made to military work, and through personal solicitation several hundred dollars more will be secured in Peterborough to support this welfare work among our own Canadian soldiers who have gone to the front. Enough members have gone from the local Y.M.C.A. to form a company.

Peterboro' Boy Heard From

Emerged Safely From the Battle of Ypres—Had Many Narrow Escapes

Gunner L. Somerville of the 9th Battery, 3rd Brigade, writing to his sister, Miss Muriel Somerville, 286 Brock Street, City, says he came through the battle of Langemarck without injury. Gunner Somerville was born in Peterborough, son of the late F. J. Somerville, C.E., but has been away from here since he was five years of age. He enlisted with the 7th Battery from St. Catharines, but was later transferred to the 9th of Toronto.

His letter, which appears below, was written in Belgium, May 4, 1915:

Dear Muriel,—I have not had a letter from you for a long time now. Of course it may be that your letters have got burned, as the post office was burned the other night and a lot of outgoing and in-coming mail with it.

We have been in action for over two weeks near Ypres and you can bet we have had a pretty hot time of it, too. We have had thirty-one casualties, five killed outright and one died of wounds. For the first three or four days when we came into action here we had a fine time. We took up a position that was occupied by the French just near the village of St. Julien. We had fine dug-outs and it was just fine until the night of the 22nd, when the Germans made their attack, and believe me it sure was hot for a while. That night we had to retreat as the Germans were only about three hundred yards from us, only we did not know it at the time. We then went to a position where there was no British infantry or French either. I think the Major knew it, but he was the only one that did. It is lucky for us that the Germans didn't come on them, or I am afraid we would have been all killed or taken prisoners. We fired all that night and at daybreak the infantry came in and shortly after the Germans got our range and we had to stop firing. It was about four-thirty a.m. when they put a shell right into a dug-out and only two men out of nine came out without being hurt, and one of them was burnt a little and the other has been deaf ever since. Our sub was ordered to go into the same dug-out by the Major, but our sergeant said to go into another and lucky for us we did. That night we moved to another position and it was not so bad, for the first day or so, but after that we got shelled from three sides, and into the bargain one our own battery behind us had a tremendous lot of premature explosions and we had a number of men wounded by them and it certainly got on our nerves. We have moved to a position where we only get shelled from one side, but we still get it pretty hot. The day before we came here the Germans put a seventeen inch howitzer not very far from here and you would be surprised at the size of a hole it made. It is about three times as large as a 22S, so that might give you some idea as to the size of it. They put a number of these shells into Ypres daily and believe me there is not much left of Ypres only ruins.

In the position we were in last they burnt a house and I don't believe it could have been bought for fifty thousand dollars. There was some fine old hand-carved furniture in it and the walls were all hand-carved panels, and there was some old poetry in it that dated back as far as fifteen hundred and five. Oh! it was just magnificent.

I am quite well and we are all getting quite tanned. It has been quite hot to-day, but it is cooling on now and I expect we will have rather a chilly night.

Aeroplanes are quite common things here; in fact, there is a German just over our heads now, and we all have to get under cover. There is an anti-aircraft gun just behind us, and they are pumping it into him quite fast, but they don't very often hit him.

Have not seen what is left of the Canadian infantry, so do not know whether any of my friends have come through or not.

I will have to close now, as we have to fire. If you should get the chance you might send me some more of those date cakes you sent me at Christmas as they were very good. Hoping you are all well and love to all.

Your loving brother,
LIND.

Caterpillars Are On The Increase

Peterborough County Farmers Are Doing Very Little to Abate the Nuisance

"The fall wheat is higher now than it was in the middle of June of last year," said a well-known Otonabee farmer, this morning, in referring to the unusual growth. The frost did comparatively little damage to the growing crops. If anything the barley suffered the most. The majority of farmers are confident that this year's crop will be considerably in excess of previous years, and they foresee very little to obscure this prospect. The market gardeners may suffer considerably as a result of the heavy frost. Farmers say that they never saw such a large acreage of fall wheat as there is this year. The acreage of other grains has increased in proportion. In some sections of Peterborough County the caterpillars is said to be bad, and only in a few isolated cases have preventive measures been adopted.

Marmola puts absorbed corrects the faulty assimilation and increases the oxygen-carrying power of the blood. To do this, go to any good druggist and get all of Marmola, only sold in original packages and in sample form and take two tablets after each meal and one at bedtime till your weight is reduced to what it should be on all parts of the body. The effect of Marmola in capsule form is remarkable as a weight reducer and it is perfectly safe.—E. J. C.

SLIM ATTENDANCE AT THE MARKET TO-DAY

The market this morning was decidedly slim and featureless. Butter ranged from 27 to 30 cents, eggs held around 20, chickens from 65 to 80 cents each, potatoes 50 cents a bag. There was practically nothing else offering. It was stated by several that the opening of more cheese factories on June 1 would withdraw more butter supplies with a consequent strengthening of the butter prices.

The W.C.T.U. In Session

The regular monthly meeting of the W.C.T.U. was held yesterday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Giles, corner Charlotte St. and Boswell Ave., and was largely attended, and proved to be most interesting.

Mrs. Whalley, the president, occupied the chair, and after devotional exercises and a piano duet, rendered by Mrs. Mieh and Mrs. (Rev.) Lewis, also a solo by Mrs. Lane, the subject, as taken up by Mrs Geakins, who read a splendid paper on "Tidings," the official organ of the Ontario W.C.T.U.

Mrs. Whalley outlined the work of the Loyal Temperance Legions. It is our purpose as a Union, in September, to organize a band of young people here under this head. Mrs. Whalley expressed the hope that this work might be begun and carried on successfully by the younger members of our Union, and so help by taking the initial step in training our boys and girls along temperance lines.

A social half hour was spent at the conclusion of the meeting.

GERMAN ARMS MAKERS DO ENORMOUS BUSINESS

The annual reports of a number of German companies manufacturing arms, ammunition, automobiles and machine tools, have been issued, showing to some extent the business resulting from the war.

The Ludwig Loewe company of Berlin, which produces machine tools of American type, has just ordered a dividend of 30 per cent., after having paid 18 per cent. for 1913.

The Deutsche Waffen and Munitions Fabriken (arms and ammunition trust), which is in close business relations with the Loewe concern, is distributing $1,430,000 in dividends, as compared with $1,200,000 for the previous year. But this does not tell the whole story of the business success, for it increased its bank balances and outstanding claims by $9,000,000.

The Daimler Motor company, which has a much smaller capital than the company just mentioned, doubled its bank balances and other reserves, raising them to $3,870,000, and made a very large increase in its dividends. This concern subscribed $7,200,000 to the new war loan.

Some criticism has been called forth in the press by the annual reports of these companies, it being claimed that they let some members involved in obscurity so as not to show what huge profits they are making from army contracts.

WHAT $2,500 WOULD DO.

In the Manitoba Parliament Buildings inquiry yesterday a telegram was produced from Inspector Elliott to Architect Horwood, saying that he could "fix it up for a couple of M. M." This referred to the evidence of Mr. Galt, warned as a witness, as to how much concrete had acrually been put in the caissons. It would be interesting to learn if Galt got the couple of M.M.'s spoken of. A witness whose silence was worth what most people will interpret as two thousand dollars should be worth listening to, and the Commission probably thinks so.

Great, mysterious, brooding Russia—the unfathomable Russia — goes about her daily ways with a nonchalance that is baffling to the western mind. Her streets are crowded—the streets of Petrograd and of Moscow, and even of Warsaw, where the fighting lines are but a few miles distant. Tens of thousands, instead hordes of men of all ages jostle and crowd along famous Nevsky Prospekt; from morning until night, and far into the night. The hotel lobbies are jammed with men and women in furs and finery, writes a correspondent.

"Russia," said a Canadian who has lived there some years, "is going about this war business with an air of confidence that I have never seen before. It is merely a concrete national example of what is really underneath the surface; a Russian individual characteristic."

That the general attitude of Russia toward the war has changed since hostilities began is testified to by those who have observed.

"In the beginning of the war," said one of these observers, a Russian merchant with large interests in Petrograd and Warsaw, "we felt that we were fighting only to repulse an enemy—to prevent invasion of our territory. There was little show of bitterness against the Germans. But it is different now. This war has done more to make Russians think and to draw them together than anything that has ever happened in the history of the country.

"To-day there is a fixed determination to fight it out to a finish and to end the probability of future conflict by destroying Prussian militarism. That may sound strange to those who have looked so long upon Russia as a military nation, but it is nevertheless true. A new feeling of patriotism has been born. The Russians have always been a far more intensely patriotic people than the western world has given them credit for being. You of the west only hear a part of the story of Russia and Russian ways and habits of thought and action. And, I fear, you too often hear the worst part. There is another side and this war has brought it into bold relief. Russia is a—what would you call it?—well, a solid land."

French Inspired by "Marseillaise"

Philip Gibbs writes in The Daily Chronicle of "The Magic Song" and the spell of "The Marseillaise." He says:

"During these nine months of war I have been hearing the old strains of 'La Marseillaise.' This song has run like a leit-motif through all the drama of this war in France, through all its scenes of blood and agony away there on the front, and through the spirit of the French people waiting patiently for victory, hiding their tears for the dead, consoling their wounded and their cripples, and giving the youngest of their manhood to the God of War.

"Wheat is the magic in this tune, so that even if one hears it on a cheap piano in an auxiliary hospital or scraped thinly on a violin in a courtyard of Paris, it thrills one horribly? There must be some magic in it, and perhaps a little madness.

"I shall not soon forget a journey I made by night to the east frontier of France with the first trainload of soldiers called to the colours on the first day of mobilization. The officers in my carriage were sleeping uneasily, but every now and then one or other of them would open his eyes, and sit up a little, and listen intently. For from high railway bridges under which we passed, and from level crossings at which we slowed down or halted, and from village streets where peasants' cottages blinked their windows near the line, there came the song of 'La Marseillaise,' in a vague chorus, with half its notes drowned by the panting of the engine and the rattle of the wheels, but with that thrill in its tune which gave one goose-flesh, stirring even me, an Englishman, with a sense of old traditions leaping up again, demanding sacrifice, blood, and the valor of youth.

"In that night of August 2 it seemed to me that France sang 'La Marseillaise,' and that out of its graveyards across those dark hills and fields with a thin, luminous line on the far horizon, the ghosts of slain soldiers rose to sing it to these men who were going to fight again for liberty. Faintly and murmurously it followed our [illegible] from Paris to the east frontier.

"Since then it has always been in my ears. I heard it one night in Amiens, when the French army was in retreat, and when all the young men of the city not yet called to the colours because of their youth, escaped hurriedly on truck trains before a bridge was blown up, so that if they stayed they would be prisoners in German hands. It was those boys who sang it with fresh, clear voices, joining in a fine chorus, though not far away the soldiers of France were limping through the night from abandoned positions.

Mugir ces feroces soldats?
Ils viennent jusque dans nos bras,
Egorger nos fils, nos compagnes!
Aux armes, citoyens!
Formes vos bataillons!
Marchons!'

"I listened to those boys' voices, and something of the history of the song put its spell upon me then. There was the passion of old heroism in it, of old and bloody deeds with the wild wars of revolution and lust for liberty. Rouget de Lisle wrote it one night at Strassburg when he was drunk, says the legend. But it was not the drunkenness of wine which inspired his soul. It was the drunkenness of that year 1792, when the desire of liberty made Frenchmen mad, . . . The men of Marseilles came singing it into Paris. The Parisians heard and caught up the strains. It marched to the victories of the Republican armies. 'We fought one against ten,' wrote a French general, 'but "La Marseillaise" was on our side. 'Send us,' wrote another general, 'ten thousand men and our copy of "La Marseillaise," and I will answer for victory.'

"A hundred years and more have passed since then, but the tune has not gone stale, and the words have not lost their magic. Again and again in the orders of the day one reads that 'the company went into action singing "La Marseillaise,"' or 'Lieutenant X was still singing when, after carrying the enemy's position, he was shot in the throat' or 'The Chasseurs Alpin climbed the ridge to the song of 'La Marseillaise' and achieved their purpose in spite of heavy losses.'

"A French infantryman has written a letter describing a recent action in the Argonne, where his regiment held a village heavily attacked by the enemy. There was street fighting of the fiercest kind; and hand-to-hand combats in the houses and even in the cellars. 'Blood,' he writes, 'ran in the gutters like water on a rainy day.' The French soldiers were being hard pressed and reserves came with their regiments in the nick of time.

"'Suddenly "The Marseillaise" rang out, while the bugles of the three regiments sounded the charge. 'From where we stood by the fire of burning houses we could see the faces very clearly, and never again shall I see anything more fantastic than those thousands of red legs charging in close ranks. The gray legs began to tremble (they do not love the bayonet) and "The Marseillaise" continued with the bugles, while our guns vomited without a pause.

"'Our infantry had closed with the enemy. Not a shot now, but cold steel. . . . Suddenly the charge ceased its bugle notes. They sounded instead the call to the flag. "Au drapeau!" Our flag was captured! Instinctively we ceased fire, thunderstruck. They very loud and strong "The Marseillaise" rang out above the bugles, calling "Au drapeau!" (To the flag!) again and again.

"'We saw the awful melee, the struggle to the death with that song above all the shouting and the shrieks. . . . You who imagine you know "La Marseillaise" because you have heard it played at prize distributions must acknowledge your error. In order to know it you must have heard it, as I have tried to tell you, when blood is flowing and the flag of France is in danger.'

"To the soldier it is an intolerable thought that he should hear the hymn of victory sung at a 'prize distribution' or in a music hall scented with the perfume of women. But even in a music hall in Paris or in a third-rate cabaret in a provincial town the song may be heard with all its magic. I heard it a few nights ago in such a place, not sung by Mme. Martha Chenal, who is the vogue in Paris, but by another with less voice and genius. The song was greater than the singer. Pretty girls were in the hall, crippled or convalescent, after their day of battle, and with their women around them they stood at attention while the national hymn was sung.

"They knew the meaning of it and the women knew. Some of them became quite pale, while other faces flushed. Their eyes were grave, but with a queer fire in them as the verses rang out. . . . It seemed to me as I stood there in this hall, filled with pale smoke and women's scent, that I smelled blood and gunpowder and heard through the music of the 'Marseillaise' the shouts of hoarse voices charging with the bayonet, the screams of wounded, and then the murmur of a battlefield when dawn comes, lighting the tattered flags of France. The song is haunted by the ghost voices of those who sang it in revolution and in fights for liberty. It is that which gives it its magic and its queer, uncanny thrill."—New York Times.

$16,150,000 Check Accompanies British Order For 8,000 Cannon

Bethlehem, Pa., May —The Bethlehem Steel Company this week received an order for 8,000 cannon for Lord Kitchener, of the British war office. The order was accompanied by a check for $16,150,000, part of which is for work already done by the Bethlehem Steel Company for the British government, and part as an advance payment for material that will go into the 8,000 new field pieces.

The cannon ordered are field pieces of a kind that can be turned out in about a month, and the Bethlehem company is now well equipped to make them faster than any other concern on earth, the forging, boring, machining and tempering being done with great rapidity by means of modern machinery. In the matter of equipment it is declared Bethlehem is as well furnished as Krupps, and in many departments surpasses the great German plant.

The projectile contracts are well under way and shells are being made so rapidly that Bethlehem is fast catching up with the demands of Lord Kitchener.

Shrapnel is now being turned out at the rate of 12,000 a day, and of the one-pounders and smaller shells the product is 50,000 and upward every twenty-four hours. Buildings are being erected and machinery installed largely to increase the output of shrapnel.

Dynamite No Longer A Novelty

Forty-seven years ago the first official test of dynamite in England was made. The hills around Marsham shook beneath the mighty vibrations of a new explosive born to civilization. It had been discovered by Alfred Nobel of Sweden and its experimental tests made in the preceding year.

Nobel created it to take the place of the untamed nitro-glycerin which had appalled the world for several years with its grim tragedies. The inventor had lost his father and a brother when his nitro-glycerin factory had blown up a few years before his discovery. Its death toll was such that England, Belgium and Sweden forbade its manufacture. The world was astounded when as a climax to its record a ship loaded with nitro-glycerin blew up in mid-ocean while on its way from Europe to Chile and the governments were on the point of prohibiting its use. It was then that Nobel began his experiments toward taming nitro-glycerin and created dynamite, or "giant powder" as it was first called in the United States. In his world-wide propaganda to convince governments that dynamite was a safe explosive, the inventor came to America. It was while in New York that he casually exclaimed to the hotel clerk that his satchel contained dynamite.

The clerk firmly ordered Nobel to seek new quarters and was relieved when he went out of the door.

To-day dynamite is being manufactured in the United States at the rate of 250,000,000 pounds a year. Filling 5,000 freight cars, it is constantly being transported over the railroads of the country. Though it is the third most powerful explosive in general use, it has been tamed so that railroad companies receive it for transportation almost as readily as they do coal. Nitro-glycerin, however, is still under the transportation ban in both the United States and Europe. Dynamite is to-day one of the most important factors in the progress of civilization. Without it the mighty engineering achievements—the Panama Canal, the mountain and river tunnels—could not be accomplished. It takes an important part in building the modern skyscrapers; it is used to mine quantities of iron and other metals, millions of tons of coal that supply heat, light and power, and give life to the locomotives that bring food and clothing to the populace of cities. It is helping to grow the food we eat—the modern scientic farmer uses it to plow his land, its explosions shattering the sub soil which no plow ever reaches. It is said to increase the crops greatly in quality and at by 50 per cent. in quantity. To-day dynamite is used to fight great conflagrations, to fight wars and to prepare for a large part of the progress of the world.

T. A. S. PARK WILL HAVE A DIAMOND

A diamond will be laid out at the T.A.S. Park by Mr. J. W. Fitzgerald during the coming week. Itw as proposed some time ago to play the interparish games at the park every Saturday, some holding the view that many citizens would like to spend the week end afternoon and evening on the river. However, the committee feel that the first step is to secure a good baseball diamond and that cannot be accomplished in a short time. The grounds will be temporarily prepared for the annual picnic, but a permanent ball grounds will be the gradual work of a year or two.

Have Sent Their First Bale Of Work

Concert Under Auspices of Women's Patriotic League of Ashburnham Realized $100

The Women's Patriotic League of Ashburnham, which was organized May 11th, sent their first bale of work to the Red Cross yesterday.

The bale consisted of 250 bandages, 80 surgical kits (each kit containing 13 articles), 10 hospital shirts, and 10 day shirts.

Dr. Cameron kindly came to the first sewing meeting to see if the work was being done properly. He found everything satisfactory.

The concert held Friday, May 21st, was a great success. The proceeds amounted to $100.00. The League wishes to thank Mr. F. Whitehouse, who loaned the excellent piano used, and placed it in the hall free of charge; J. J. Turner and Sons for their great kindness in helping decorate the hall, and Mr. R. Ritchie, who donated the ticket.

The regular meetings of the League will be held the first Tuesday evening in each month in the hall, and every Wednesday after in the King eGorge School, a sewing meeting will be held. Everybody of Ashburnham will be made welcome.

Local Man Granted A Commission

A Peterborough man, S. Y. Walsh, who was among the twenty of the class of '15 who enlisted as privates from the University of Toronto, in Casualty Clearing Hospital No. 2, has been granted a commission in the Royal Army Medical Corps, according to a cable received yesterday from Dr. L. E. Williams who, with Dr. T. B. Cumberland, left their positions on the staff of the Queen Street Hospital, Toronto, to serve in this capacity.

There were twenty-seven young Toronto medical graduates who crossed the ocean as privates. These graduates were so keen to go to the front that they enlisted in that capacity. S. Y. Walsh was among them. His work will be immediately behind the trenches, so that it will not be without excitement.

OBITUARY

MR. WILLIAM TWIGG.

Death claimed a life-long resident of Manvers Township yesterday morning, when Mr. William Twigg passed away at his home near Brunswick.

The late Mr. Twigg was well known throughout the Township. He was married some years ago to Miss Davis, daughter of the late William Davis, and she predeceased him. One brother, Mr. George Twigg, and three sisters, Mrs. J. Simon, Mrs. Wm. Davis and Mrs. John Staples, survive, all residing at Bethany, Ont.

MISS S. BAXTER McEWEN.

The many friends of Miss S. Baxter McEwen will regret to learn of her death which occurred at the Nicholls Hospital this morning, at the age of 56 years.

Miss McEwen was the daughter of the late Rev. John McEwen, who was Presbyterian minister at Lakefield for a number of years and later of Togonto. Her only near relative surviving is Mr. Playter Sherrin, Lakefield.

For the past three and a half years the late Miss McEwen has been a resident at the Nicholls Hospital. She was a woman with a very kindly nature, and her faculty for making friends and retaining them was wonderful. The members of the Hospital staff and nurses were very much attached to her, and she has been to each one a staunch friend, whom they will greatly miss.

The funeral will take place on Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the residence of Mr. J. H. Sherrin, Regent street, Lakefield. Interment will take place in Rae's cemetery.

Local Boys Get Many Kisses

Ottawa Ladies Rated to See the Members of 8th C.M.R. Leave For Barriefield Camp

According to a letter received by a member of the Examiner Staff, from a member of the 8th Mounted Rifles, the local boys have arrived at Barriefield Camp, Kingston, without mishap. The boys all speak very highly of the send-off accorded them on leaving Ottawa. One passage in the letter, "we were swamped, and each man got about on an average, two hundred kisses," will cause a few pangs to wives and probably sweethearts of the local men. The letter in part was as follows:

"We arrived here at 6 a.m. yesterday under very poor weather conditions, as it was raining hard, and also cold. We should have got into Kingston at 3 a.m., but had a breakdown, which occasioned considerable delay. Our horses got in about half an hour after us so we didn't have to walk out. The rain ceased somewhat and we had a fair day for moving in, and are fairly comfortable now, although it was cold last night, especially on the horses, who are standing out.

"Our camp site is pretty good as there is a fall away from it which will facilitate the drainage.

"We got some send-off from Ottawa, believe me. The route for about two miles was packed with people, and at the station we were swamped, and each man go about on an average 200 kisses. The ladies of the Dominion Methodist church gave us lunches nicely done up to eat on the train, and we appreciated the kindness very much."

INTERESTING VOCAL AND PIANO RECITAL

Last night at the Peterborough Conservatory of Music an interesting double recital was given by the piano and vocal pupils of Miss Jeanette Killmaster. There was a large attendance, of those interested in music.

They were delighted with reason, with the work of all the performers, who demonstrated the success of Miss Killmaster in imparting to her pupils the technique as well as spirit of the uncommon capability, in both departments, she possesses. It is not possible to particularize, though it is permissible to specially mention the wonderful piano ability of little Miss Agnes Logan, who ,only eight years of age, showed a proficiency and musical perception that would be remarkable in a girl twice her age. The following is the programme:

Programme.

Allegro, Op. 36, No. 2, Clementi — Mildred Tomlins.

Witches' Dance, MacDowell—Agnes Logan.

La Lisonjera, Chaminade — Miss Mary Gilpin.

Le Papillon, Lavallee—Afnes Logan.

Down the Vale, Moir—Mr. Weller.

Valse in A Flat, Op. 42, Chopin — Miss Florence Scott.

Duets, Cornelius, (a) When Starry Night; (b) Love's Secret Betrayed — Misses Florence Scott and Gwen Smith.

REJECTS U. S. DEMAND TO STOP SUBMARINE WARFARE

Romance of De Freynes

Two Brothers Killed at Front—One Formerly U. S. Soldier

The death occurred at the front with the allied armies of Lord De Freyne and one of his younger brothers, the Hon. Geo. Philip French. Both were in the 1st Battalion South Wales Borderers—Lord De Freyne as a Captain and his brother as a lieutenant—into which they had gone from the reserve battalion, and they are said to have been killed on the same day.

Lord De Freyne (Arthur Reginald French) fifth baron in the peerage of the United Kingdom, succeeded his father (whose only son he was by the first wife) less than two years ago, and has died in his thirty-sixth year. His career had been something of a romance. He early joined the Royal Fusiliers (City of London Regiment), but resigned his lieutenancy in 1908 and went to the United States This act produced a brief mystery for the newspapers—"Missing Heir; Peer's Son Lost in New York."

It was speedily discovered that he was serving as a private in the 8th Infantry Regiment of the United States army, having enlisted for the reason, as he explained, that his "private income was insufficient, and soldiering was his only profession." He found the life a happy one, and quickly rose to the rank of sergeant.

In November, 1908, he made a romantic marriage with a handsome Scottish girl, Annabel Angus, one of the daughters of a hotelkeeper at Rothes, whom he met in London.

The French family has been settled in Connaught since the fifteenth century. Most of the vast estate was sold to the tenantry in the lifetime of the fourth peer, but there have remained the ancestral mansion and fine demesne, known as Frenchpark, in Roscommon.

The heir to the title is the Hon. Francis Charles French, now in his thirty-second year, who was High Sheriff of Roscommon in 1912.

SHE OBJECTED.

"I certainly shall not give you a recommendation. You have disgraced us."

"In what way, madam? Hasn't my work always been satisfactory?"

"Your work has been all right. It's the reasons for your leaving me that I object."

"I don't understand you."

"Then I'll explain. I've had servants leave me to get married, and because they were needed at home, and because they found pleasant employment at summer resorts, but you are actually quitting to get more money than I can afford to pay. What will my friends think when they know that?"

ITALIANS OCCUPYING IMPORTANT POSITIONS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 31.—The Italian advance continues on the Tyrol-Trentino frontier, an important position being occupied on the high plateau near Storo and strongs forts at Liserna destroyed by artillery fire. On the left flank of the Isonzo the Austrians hold strongly fortified positions covering the passage of the river.

ITALIAN OFFICIAL REPORT.

An official despatch from Rome says:

"Yesterday, on the Tyrol-Trentino frontier, in the Guidicaria Valley, the Italians occupied the important position of Cimaserrara, near Storo, on the high plateau of Adagio.

"Our artillery destroyed the armoured forts at Liserna. When the forts later hoisted the white flag the back-lying fort of Belvedere (Austrian) directed a furious fire against Liserna, completing the destruction of the place. The recently-erected works at Vezzeno were completely demolished by our artillery and afterwards occupied by our infantry, who subsequently advanced as far as the village of Vezzeno, which the Austrians precipitately abandoned. Our losses were slight.

"In Cadoria we have occupied the important pass of Corina di Ampezzo and all the neighbouring valley.

"On the Friuli frontier the Austrians for a long time have been reinforcing their armament with many pieces of artillery of medium calibre, and on the left bank of the Isonzo they strongly hold several points dominating the passages of the river. They also hold some points on the right bank protecting Gorlitz. Heavy rains have swollen the rivers to exceptional volume, but our troops with great vigor and splendid spirit are advancing steadily."

EARLIER OFFICIAL REPORTS.

ROME, May 31.—The official communication issued by Vice-Admiral Thaon di Revel, the Chief of the Italian Naval Staff, says:

"On the frontier in Tyrol the combat continues between our artillery placed on our works at Tonal and the plateau of Adagio and Lavorne and that of the enemy, who still responds vigorously. However, the Austrian forts Luserna, Busa and Spitzvole are seriously damaged. On May 27 our infantry troops were reinforced by a customs force and artillery and advanced on both banks of the Adige in the direction of Ala. After capturing the village of Plicante, which was protected by a number of trenches, we succeeded in taking Ala and consolidated there. The combat lasted from noon till night, our losses being light.

"On the Friuli frontier on the night of May 27-28 our dirigibles accomplished successful incursions into the territory of the enemy, causing serious damage. Numerous bombs were thrown and attained their object. On May 27-28 enemy aeroplanes from Pola were obliged to land near the mouth of the Po and were captured."

AIR RAID ON VENICE.

VIENNA, May 31.—In an air raid on Venice Friday night by several naval airmen a large number of bombs were dropped, causing extensive fires in and near an arsenal. Another bomb caused an explosion in Fort Nicolo.

News of the raid is given in an official statement issued Saturday night by the War Office.

President Will Act Promptly

Germany Rejects President Wilson's Demand That the Undersea Warfare Be Either Stopped or Safeguarded

THE FUTURE POLICY

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, May 31.—America's future policy toward Germany has taken place to-day. Germany's rejection of President Wilson's specific demand that the under sea warfare either be stopped or safeguarded, for non-combatants' protection, is in administration's hands.

The President will act promptly, it is known that he hoped to act promptly.

It is expected that his decision will be ready when the Cabinet meets tomorrow, but until a complete line of future action is mapped out, it was said there would be no formal word from the White House or the State Department. It is believed certain that within 48 hours at the most, another note will go forward to Germany. It will answer the teutonic demand for a "bill of particulars" in plain cold terms. It will be stated that the President knew, when he sent his first note, that not only was he Lusitania unarmed, but she carried no munitions of war, the shipment of this time of the United States."

Further than this the United States will plainly state that the vessel was not a troop ship, that United States has and is maintaining the strictest neutrality and that no Canadian soldiers have been permitted on the United States' soil since the war began.

The United States, it is believed, is in duty bound to make a complete answer to the German note, but it is also thought the President will expedite and so express himself as to make it clear to Germany that the United States cannot tolerate quibbling.

The President is expected to take Germany's Lusitania claims up and reply to each specificatty.

WHAT N. Y. HERALD SAYS.

The New York World says: "The German note in response to the American protest against submarine attacks upon merchantmen does not meet the issue. It is worse than evasive. It is insincere, even pettifogging. Regret will be felt everywhere in the United States that affairs of a great people believed to be friendly have fallen into hands of men capable of such desperate trifling."

MIGHTY BATTLE STILL RAGING AROUND PERMYSL

Austrians and Germans Have Not Yet Encircled the Fortress ---Mackenzie Trying Same Plan of Attack as He Employed at Lodz.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, May 31. — Around the great fortress of Peremysl the mighty battle is still raging. The Austro-German armies are making a supreme effort to cut off the strongheld and free these armies for operations against Italy and the allies in the west.

Although great human sacrifices are being made, their progress latterly has been extremely slow, as the Russians are bringing up large reinforcements of both men and heavy artillery.

North of the fortress the Russians appear to be more than holding their own, but the south-east the Austrians and Germans claim to have made further progress, and now command with their artillery the railway between Peremysl and Lemberg. From the latter town the Russians draw a large portion of their reinforcements and supplies.

The battle is still undecided, and hopes run high in the allied camps that the Russians will be able to hold their lines until the advance of the Italians and the strengthening of the Anglo-French armies compel the Germans to withdraw part of their armies from Galicia.

CAUCASIAN TROOPS' EXPLOIT.

An official summary of the recent fighting around Peremysl was received to-night from Petrograd. It announces that the third Caucasian army, which the other day won a victory at Seniawa, is the same force that cut its way through to safety some weeks ago after being surrounded by the Austrian forces during the Russian retreat from the Carpathians. Its commander is General Irmaneff, a veteran of the Russo-Japanese War. The Petrograd statement says:

"The object of the prodigious efforts made by the enemy in the last few days has been the encircling of Peremysl. The desperate fighting on the San was interrupted on May 29, and the four following days were occupied by the enemy in an attempt to change the direction of his offensive from the north-east to the south-east. Between Seniawa and Jaroslau fifteen bridges were constructed.

"While the enemy was changing his front, the whole mass of the enemy of all arms was transferred to the west, which led to the supposition that the Germans were beginning to retreat, but on the morning of the 26th Gen. Mackenzen began to hurl his army against our positions between the Rivers Lubaczow and San. Concurrently hundreds of thousands of infantry, supported by a thousand guns of various calibres, well supplied with ammunition, attacked our trenches on the left bank of the San in the direction of fifteen miles.

"General Mackenzen, in endeavouring to turn our line at Peremysl is repeating the manoeuvre which he practised at the beginning of November in front of Lodz when his army broke our lines near Strykow and Brzeziny, while at the same time an attempt was made to turn us with his left flank. The same manoeuvre is being repeated now, but on a larger scale, not with isolated corps, but with entire armies which, thanks to their size, are slower moving. Gen. Mackenzen's manoeuvre still is incomplete, although some of his infantry regiments already have lost three-quarters of their effectiveness.

"Austro-German armies, which were to have met Gen. Mackenzen and turned Peremysl from the south, have been wiped out near Gnusskow in a vain attempt to pierce our front, while Gen. Irmaneff, the hero of Port Arthur, crushed the garrison at Laisaec, behind Mackenzen's army on the little Seniawa, seizing trophies and cattle intended for the revictualing of troops directed against Peremysl.

"In spite of the enemy's tremendous losses, which since May 29 alone have amounted to hundreds of thousands, it would be premature to speak of the result of the battle, which is of extraordinary intensity.

"Austro-German communications in April said the 3rd Caucasian Corps had been entirely annihilated on the Wisloka. Yet the same corps captured fourteen cannon and 7,000 prisoners at Seniawa."

The total number of prisoners taken by Russian armies and interned in Russia up to the 1st of April, according to figures made publi to-day in Petrograd was: 16,734 officers and 695,378 men. In addition, the statement says, great numbers of Galician prisoners have been given their liberty and sent home.

ONTARIO GIVES $120,000 FOR BELGIAN RELIEF

Special to The Examiner:

Another instalment of Ontario's contribution to war necessities is announced. To the gifts intimated the other day of hospital accommodation for Canadian wounded soldiers, together with maintenance, and the provision of six motor ambulances, is now added an appropriation of $120,000 for Belgian relief. The Government has previously given assistance in the same direction, but considering the needs of the hard-stricken Belgians, this further donation will be very acceptable.

It is understood that the money allocated will be turned over to the Department of Agriculture, and that it will be spent on food. It may not be sent all at once, but used from time to time as occasion arises.

MAN INJURED IN RUNAWAY

A team of horses belonging to Mr. Ira Dawson of Bailieboro, Monaghan Township, ran away on Saturday afternoon, causing injuries to the man who was in charge. The accident occurred about three o'clock. A wheel passed over the leg of the driver, who is an employee of Mr. Dawson. He was removed to the house where first aid treatment was provided.

AS TOLD TO GERMANY

Berlin Newspaper Sees Collapse of British at any Moment.

The Tageblatt of Berlin sees in "what have been infamously described as British victories" every portent of the German triumph:

Neuve Chapelle was a Pyrrhic victory, really a victory for Germany. Ypres was an extremely serious check to the allies. Such German successes as these render a great service to the cause of peace, because they compel the English to reflect.

We shall indulge in no more illusions and make ourselves believe that they are tired, but we are at least justified in the opinion that the English ill-humor at the turn the war is taking, is growing from day to day. That is worth something, because, plucky though they be, the English are not as a nation, imbued with the warrior spirit.

They have gone to the war thinking that, as they were assured by the Secrets of London Complexion Doctors

Famous London specialists who cater to titled ladies and others of social prominence, enjoy a remarkable method of complexion rejuvenation. One undergoing this treatment visits the beauty doctor late in the afternoon, has something dabbed over her face, then, heavily veiled, departs in her motor car. This is repeated daily for a week or so, when a complexion of snowy purity and exquisite delicacy is in evidence. The secret of this method is—ordinary mercolized wax. Anyone can apply the wax without assistance of a specialist. An ounce of it costs very little at any druggists (obtainable here as well as in England.) It is used like cold cream, before retiring, and washed off mornings. Its success is due to a peculiar absorbent property which gradually removes worn-out particles of cuticle, revealing the younger, healthier skin beneath.

A wonderful wrinkle-chaser, also invogue among Englishwomen, is prepared by dissolving 1 oz. powdered saxolite in ½ pt. witch hazel. Used as a wash lotion, this completely and quickly effaces even the deepest lines.

Duration of War Shortened By British Pluck at Ypres

LONDON, May 31.—Field Marshal Sir John French, commander-in-chief of the British forces in France, in an address to the troops which fought in the second battle of Ypres, which he described as one of the "most desperate fights of the war," declared that they had done much to shorten the war.

"You may have thought," he said, "that because you were not attacking the enemy that you were not helping to shorten the war. On the contrary, by your splendid endurance and bravery you have done a great deal to shorten the war.

"In this second battle of Ypres, the Germans tried every means in their power to get possession of that unfortunate town. They concentrated large forces of troops and artillery, and further than that, they had recourse to that mean and dastardly practice hitherto unheard of in civilised warfare, namely, the use of asphyxiating gases.

"You have performed the most difficult, arduous and terrific task of withstanding a stupendous bombardment by heavy artillery, probably the fiercest artillery fire ever directed against troops, and you warded off the enemy's attack with magnificent bravery."

To Give the Hair a Naturally Wavy Effect

Since the virtues of plain liquid sulphur-ine as a hair curler [illegible]-known English chemists, as well as druggists in Canada and the United States, have been having a really extraordinary demand for this remarkable product, its effectiveness and its entire harmlessness, especially as compared with the ruinous curling irons—doubtless have been responsible for its increasing use for the purpose mentioned. As the curliness is in evidence for a considerable time, a few ounces of liquid sulphurine will last a long while.

One need only apply a little of the liquid with a clean tooth brush before retiring and in the morning the hair will have that beautiful wavy and glossy appearance which bears no marks of artificiality. The best way is to divide the hair into strands and moisten each of them from root to tip. There is no discolouration, no streaky or other unpleasant after-effect.

Allies Destroy German Aerodrome

Special Cable to The Examiner:

AMSTERDAM, May 31.—Two allied airmen bombarded and destroyed a German aerodrome at Gistrode, south-east of Ghent. Despatches received here to-day said that fifty-four soldiers were killed and thirty wounded by the explosion of ammunition depots.

OUR SERIAL STORY PAGE

The trouble with readin' too much out o' books is, that a feller's senses get so dim he can't read nothin' else. It's downright fun to watch an animal doin' his early mornin' readin'! He reads some with his eyes and some with his ears, but mostly with his nose, and he can tell every critter which has crossed his path, what his business was, and, generally, how successful he was at it. After a feller has learned to watch a grass-eater put his whole attention into readin' the wind,, why, he won't never pity 'em again because they can't read.

Take even a dog whose senses are so dulled from eatin' too much salt and beggin' heat and chuck that he needs scent-spectacles to read his fine print with, and yet if a man's wife could just read as much about her husband as his dog can,, why, the' wouldn't be enough hypocrites left to hang one jury.

I didn't get intimate with books until late in life, and even yet I'm mighty cautious in what I read at; but I've been at all times ready to fling up my job for a chance to read the tantalizin' stories in the human faces which interested me.

It was mighty amusin' to me that night to sit back in the corner and watch the different faces as the fire-outfit had been tanned and seasoned on the trail and they were calm like the faces of Injuns or four-footed animals; but deep in their eyes were little glints that showed they had just as good scales in their heads to weigh happenin's on as anybody; while Isaac stowed himself into a heat because Red was so everlastin' dumb that he couldn't understand exactly how lungs worked.

Red finally spilled some candle-grease on Isaac's wishbone, and that broke up the meetin' pronto, Isaac takin' his dog and his beddin', and goin' out into the grove to sleep under his umbrella, while the boys chuckled soft to themselves until they fell asleep.

CHAPTER XII.
MOSTLY ABOUT COWS.

Next day we all started out after breakfast to ride the boundary, Isaac ridin' in the waggon with Monody, but Tom Smith, puttin' on his ridin' boots and Stetson, and leavin' off his red handkerchief for the first time, though he said his neuralgia was liable to come back on him any minute. Red began to take up with Tom Smith on this trip and showed him how to do things right, but makin' Tom Smith wait on him in return, Flames, the kid, havin' grown a little too perky to make a handy body-servant.

Jim had put up a neat pile of stones about every half-mile as boundary signs, and we were all mightily pleased with his range. The mesquite grass was curly and matted, and the' was stacks of it. All in all it was a fine range, winter and summer; but the stuff Jim had on it—!

We came across his cows close to the centre of his south boundary so we made camp there and went out to give 'em a look over. Of all the ragtag collection of antiquated and useless hide-haulers, that bunch had the world beat. He had purty near as many bulls as she stuff, and they were surly old range rogues with about as much class as so many coyotes; while the cows were so ancient and scrawny it would have taken a female postmaster to have started a scandal among 'em.

Jim had been ridin' beside me quizzin' my face, and though I had tried to keep from showin' how tempted I was to throw up the job and light out, he finally asked me point-blank what I thought of his stuff. "Jim," I sez, "where have you got the parents of those five-year-olds we just took to market?"

"As nar as I can tiel, all the stock cattle are here," sez he with becomin' meekness.

"Stock cattle sounds mighty business-like, Jim," sez I, "and I don't want to hurt anybody's feelin's; but if these critters die on your hands you're goin' to be put to a whole lot of extra work, 'cause I doubt if the buzzards 'd bother to eat 'em."

"I dunno nothin' about cattle," sez he, lookin' me square in the face. "When I came out here I thought the main thing was to put trust in so I tried to do my own kountin' and sortin'. I feared from the first I'd been beat, but I never was able to hire any one who seemed to look out for my interests."

"That's one of the drawbacks of life," sez I; "every intelligent man is liable to want interests of his own to look after, and about the only sure way to get help in lookin' after your own interests is to know at least a fifth more about your own interests than airy other man livin'. Payin' prompt an' lookin' wise is a good bit like wearin' a gun—it makes a feller itch to call your standin' bluff.

"You needn't tell me how it was done, it's all plain enough. They showed you good stuff, you paid for it, and then they took it away and turned this sorry stuff on your range while you went back to your readin'. Cattle were dirt cheap when you bought and they probably let you keep a lot o' good dogies"—calves, ya know, which started to play it alone before ever their mother's brand got put on 'em — "they had picked up in their ruckin' because they didn't have time to bother with 'em. They did you good and plenty, but me and the boom have put you back on your feet and you ort to feel thankful that they didn't do you worse—'cause you must have been juley pickin'. It's not often that the Lord drops a plum like you into the lap of a hard-workin' cattle clique. Pay prompt and look wise—Jim, the sin's on your own head, there's nothin' chalked up again' those fellers. I'm so blame honest I expect to die owin' for my last pair o' boots; but I'd hate to be exposed to such temptation as that."

"I had sense enough to see that the bunch we took to market was a lot better 'n this stuff," sez Jim; "but I couldn't figger out any way to sell this; so what could I do?"

"If you could figger out a way to sell such stuff as this, Jim," sez I, "you wouldn't need me. You could be boss instead of just playin' at it, and you could make a right smart of money in the business — but I doubt if you'd be able to stay honest. Well, this stuff isn't worth stealin' but we'll hunt up a little cross-over right now, and count it first thing in the mornin', so we can start square."

We found a little crick with steep banks except where the cows had wore a trail in crossin' and next mornin' Jim took his place on the higher ground to one side of this trail and me on the other, while the boys drifted the stuff between us.

Jim counted in his head, but I had fixed me two strings with ten knots in each. I stuck the end of the longer string out through a buttonhole of my shirt and the short one I fastened to my saddle horn. Every knot on the short one meant ten head and every knot on the long string meant a hundred. For the most part the stuff came easy, but once in a while a few odd bulls would throw back or else jam through five abreast, and when we finished Jim was seven hundred head short.

"I'm willin' to take your figgers, Jim," sez I, "and I want you to get some disinterested party to appraise 'em, so you can tell whether you made or lost by pickin' me up; but I warn you right now, that you can't expect anything from this herd. They're mighty poor as much old stuff as young stock in it, and about the only way to cull it proper would be drive the whole mangy mess off a high cliff."

I didn't intend to flatter Jim none, 'cause he had done purty well on the drive in; but on the way back he had slipped into his readin' ways again. I was willin' enough to teach him the game but I didn't intend to play his hand for him.

After dinner we started on again, and just as we started I saw the ost image of a cow ever I did see, and pointed her out. She was a dun coloured critter with a short neck, hump-back, and long legs. "How did that thing get its back hurt, Jim?" sez I.

"She never was hurt," sez he. "She's a sacred Brahma cow."

"That's good news," sez I. "Where did she come from and what's she good for?"

"I don't know the answer to either queerest image of a cow ever I did see her and I've never been able to brand her."

"Let's rope her," squealed Red, and the next moment all the boys started for her. She looked at 'em in mild curiosity until they drew near, and then she whirled about, threw up her tail, and split the horizon, and it was a lucky thing for them that no antelope nor jack-rabbits got in her way, 'cause she was sure the out-runnin'est critter in the world.

Missourie had stopped the minute she had started, and he came back to us. "I saw a couple of those things down below," sez he. "Some feller with a self-actin' imagination imported a lot before the war and started to make a new breed, the same as with the camels—I reckon you've all heard of how they tried out camels before the war. Texas is so everlastin' big, and able to grow about anything that'll grow anywhere, that every so often somebody takes a liberty with her; but they'll have to make rules for her some time —you see if they don't."

We didn't follow the windin's of Red Deer Creek, but kept within sight of it all the way after reachin' it at the farthest corner of Jim's range, and by stiff drivin' on Monody's part we got to the hermit's in time for supper. He was sittin' at the door of his cabin when we drove up with his buffalo gun between his knees and a pipe in his mouth, and he nodded to Jim with what was almost a smile. He had built his cabin on a horse-shoe of land which had come purt nigh bein' an island. Sandy Creek flowed into Red Deer right at the bulge of the horse-shoe, and Josiah was more partial to water than airy other hermit ever I heard tell of, or Injun either, as far as that goes.

He was the steadiest sitter and the patientest looker and the best able to keep a pipe goin' without one extra puff a day, that ever I met up with; but I never tried to visit with but one man, old Spike Williams, who was so stingy with his words. Josiah Cornell had the most tantalisin' eyes it was possible for a male human to have. They were grey, but they had reddish glints in 'em, and they seemed all the time to be seein' somethin' interesting. A lot o' folks were superstitious that he was some sort of a witch and so they treated him with respect, but the' wasn't nothin' but plain nature in his methods, though I own he had a sight of unusual gifts.

He had three rooms in his own cabin and four or five other buildin's scattered around in a most amazin' tangle of undergrowth; but he didn't invite even Jim to do his sleepin' or eatin' inside. I half nodded at him when I came up, but I had estimated him the day we arrived, and I made up my mind that after havin' spent a year with old Spike Williams, the' wasn't another case of ingrowin' conversation on the face of the whole earth which could make me nervous, so I laid to have this here hermit talkin' me most of the questions that ever passed between us.

All the rest of the boys tried to draw him out, but it wasn't much of a victory. "This is nice weather we're havin', Mr. Cornell," sez Red. The hermit looked up at the clouds, got interested in 'em and swept his eye about the sky for some time. "Oh, it'll do," sez he.

"You have a beautiful location here, plenty of water, shade, and grass; but I should think it would overflow in flood-time. Still, from the way you have things fixed up, you must have lived here a long time and so I suppose it must suit you."

The hermit smoked an Injun-made red pipe with a willow stem so long that the bowl rested on his thigh. He took a slow, gentle puff, puffed out a tiny whisp of bluish smoke, and sez: "Oh, it'll do."

"Don't you ever get lonesome, livin' here with just those two wolf dogs?"

The hermit glanced down to where a dog was lyin' at each side of him, their noses on their paws and their paws within about an inch of his feet. "Oh, they'll do," sez he, and Red sheered off lookin' about as well shook up as I'd ever seen him.

Well I didn't speak to him nor look at him; but next mornin' when we got ready to set out again, he came to me and sez: "You're the foreman ain't ya?"

I nodded my head..

"I'm purty well acquainted around here," sez he, "and any time I can help ya out, let me know."

"I sure will," sez I, and when our eyes met, they met in an old friendship, just as my eyes had met Big Jeff Johnson's in an old war.

About four miles along we caught sight of Jim's horses, and rode down to round 'em up. The' weren't any grown stallions among 'em and they herded to gether like cows, the likeliest lot o' horses ever I'd seen, every mare, nearly, havin' a colt with her, and all of 'em havin' the right look to 'em. I kept 'em up severe while we were drivin' 'em down to a draw where Jim said they could be easy counted' but I looked as gloomy as I could and Jim kept glancin' at my face and his own face dropped a peg at every glance.

"You ort to be ashamed of yourself, Jim," I said after we'd counted 'em and in this countin' he was only ten short.

"Well, I thought you'd think well of them," sez he. "I own they're no better than scrubs for rough herd-work, but there's bound to be a market for good horses—and these are good."

"Who told yo they were good?" sez I.

"I didn't have to be told," sez he, throwin' his head back. "I know they're good."

Savings of Manufacturer's Stenographer Saved Employer From Ruin and Disgrace.

By GEORGE ELMER COBB.

After five years of hard work Wilfred Ashton walked down the steps of the neat little factory he had dominated, a ruined man. The morning was bright and beautiful, the air like new wine, all nature seemed disporting in the brilliant sunlight. But his heart was like lead. The plant was in the hands of a receiver, and he was a bankrupt.

Wardells had done this—Wardells, the upstarts, the business pirates. The elder of that firm had been taken in off the street penniless by Ashton, had been given work, had learned the secrets of the business, and had gone out to exploit them on his own account. The rival house manufactured a counting machine. In some way Wardell had secured the sole right to manufacture a machine the sale of which was Ashton's chief source of revenue. Trade fell off. Wardells spread and flourished like a green banyon tree. Ashton & Co. went down hill, fast.

And now—ruin! Reckoning up anxiously, Wilfred had found that the plant and his other resources would pay off about seventy-five per cent. of the debts. This it was that crushed him. Son of a business man of clean, straight record, proud of his honorable business reputation, what had been swept away was as nothing to him if he could but have paid one hundred cents on the dollar. He reached the office of his lawyer, dejected and hopeless.

"We have an offer for the assets in bulk," explained the attorney. "It will square the secured indebtedness entirely. It will also take care of all the other liabilities except two thousand."

"If I could only reach that!" exclaimed Wilfred. "It is those creditors, small, struggling firms, that need their money. Is there no way I can reach this deficit?"

"A way has been opened," announced the lawyer, "a remarkable one. There is the list of the unsecured creditors," and he pushed over a written page, "and here is two thousand, handed to me by a brother attorney, representing a mysterious client who does not wish to be known."

"We Have an Offer for the Assets in Bulk."

Wilfred found her in a neat, modest cottage, her aged mother its housekeeper. She blushed and paled, and looked wistful and then trembled, as he handed her the money. Her eyes glowed sympathetically with his own when he told of his unknown benefactor.

"I shall not forget the most helpful assistant I ever had, when I get on my feet again," said Wilfred brightly. "I am very sorry to see you out of employment."

"Oh, I shall soon find a new position," declared Amy. "A relative left us a small amount of money a short while ago, and I could almost wait till you need a stenographer again, Mr. Ashton, which I know will be soon. It is all you—you!" she cried, in a burst of fervent emotion, "who gave me work and encouragement when we were down at the lowest ebb. I shall never forget it."

"It seems to me that I am receiving nothing but blessings in my own darkest hour," replied Wilfred movingly.

"There is another thing," said Amy. "You remember Mr. Judson, the old inventor who was hurt at your plant? You pensioned him off, you know. Ever since then he has been trying to invent a new counting machine. I —that is, I have encouraged him. He was here yesterday, and he is sure, oh, so very sure, that he is near to perfecting his invention.

Two evenings later a messenger brought Wilfred a note, asking him to call at the home of Miss Bonney. When he arrived he found old Abel Judson there.

"I've made it!" cried the inventor enthusiastically. "The double ratchet did it. The dream of years! And all for you, who were so kind to me, and this dear girl, who financed me! My invention is perfected—a counting machine that will drive Wardells out of the field."

It was true. One hour later, after an inspection of the invention, Wilfred knew that Judson had at last won fame and a fortune.

Only one thing would the inventor agree to—that Wilfred was to become his partner. In three months capital was found, in all the old plant was running again. At the end of the year Wilfred and Amy were man and wife.

"I am making money so fast," he said to his happy helpmate one evening, "that I will be able to pay up the two thousand dollars so generously given me when I failed."

Amy reached within her pocket. She drew out a scrap of paper. In amazement Wilfred regarded the I O U.

"Don't you understand?" she cried in delight, and tore the document to scraps—"paid!"

"You—you furnished that money!" exclaimed the dumfounded Wilfred.

"Yes, my all for you, the bravest truest friend I ever knew," replied Amy raptly, "and now the dearest best husband in all the world!"

HAD DYSPEPSIA

So Bad Could Not Take a Drink of Water Without Suffering.

Dyspepsia is one of the most difficult diseases of the stomach there is to cure. You eat too much. Drink too much. Use too much tobacco. You make the stomach work overtime. You make it perform more than it should be called on to do. The natural result is that it is going to rebel against the amount of work put on it. It is only a matter of a short time before dyspepsia follows.

That old, forty year old remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, will cure the dyspepsia and will cure it to stay cured as we can prove by the thousands of testimonials we have received from time to time.

Miss Sarah McRae, Newfield, Ont., writes: "I write to say that I have used your Burdock Blood Bitters, and have found it the best remedy I have ever used for dyspepsia. Two years ago, I had stomach trouble so bad that I could not even take a drink of water without suffering. I took six bottles of B.B.B., and have been entirely cured, and can now eat anything without any bad after effects."

Burdock Blood Bitters is an old and well tried remedy but on account of the many substitutes we would ask you to make sure that our name appears on both the label and wrapper as this preparation is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

HIS BROTHER WAS AT HOME

Little Virginia Darkey Explained That His Relative Lived in the County Jail.

A certain Virginia lawyer was in the habit of driving in from his country place each morning to his office conveniently placed, after the fashion of the country, in the court house yard. Just back of the court house stood the county jail, and the barred windows of the cells looked down upon the row of hitching posts used by the members of the bar, the judge, the sheriff, the clerk, the members of the grand jury, and other citizens of weight and standing. As our lawyer drove up his eye lighted on the small negro, known as Hamfat, because of his shining countenance. Instead of hurrying up to take the horse as was his custom, however, Hamfat was engaged in conversation with somebody behind one of the barred windows.

"Hi, there, you young rascal," called the lawyer, "come here."

Hamfat came.

"Who was that you were talking to in the jail?" came the question sternly.

"Yas, suh, dat my brother, suh."

"What is your brother doing in jail?"

"He live dar, suh. Dat he home."

Treat Wounded Much Better Than in 1861

The contrast between the surgery of the Civil War and that of the present war was the subject of an address delivered before the Philadelphia County Medical Society a few weeks ago by Dr. W. W. Keen, emeritus professor of surgery at Jefferson Medical School. Dr. Keen was an army surgeon during the civil war. His address has been published in the New York Medical Journal.

Dr. Keen started by declaring that the first notable difference is in the weapons of warfare and described the bullets used fifty years ago, and those of to-day. In the Civil war the Minie ball, named after a French officer who devised it, consisted wholly of lead. It measured an inch in length and its base was half an inch across. It weighed 700 to 800 grains (1.2 to 1 3-4 ounces). Its muzzle velocity was 963 feet a second, and its effective range about 300 yards.

The modern missile is smaller and lighter. It has a leaden core encased in a cupro-nickel-steel jacket. It is cylindrical, terminating in a pointed forward end. Its weight varies from 130 to 175 grains. It is an inch and a quarter long and of a quarter of an inch diameter at the base.

"The shorter the range," said Dr. Keen, "the greater the explosive effect, even in soft muscles. At long range it may simply perforate the bone, especially near joints where the bone is spongy in texture. The trenches in Belgium and France are generally separated by short or some times a very short, distance. The violent explosive effect at short range has given rise to the charge by both sides in the present war that dum-dum bullets were being used. I think that the most competent testimony is that the charge on both sides is incorrect, the explosive effect of the swiftly-moving and swiftly-revolving modern missile and the possible rupture of the jacket causing the error."

Shrapnel, Dr. Keen described as a hollow metal shell filled with round leaden bullet balls about half an inch in diameter, weighing from 160 to 170 grains each, and each shell contains from 250 to 1,100 of these balls. When the shell bursts it scatters these balls in a shower over a wide area.

The balls produce severe wounds, and the ragged fragments of the shell itself produce the most ghastly and extensive wounds. One Belgian soldier had seventeen of these balls lodged in his body and he recovered. In the Russo-Japanese war, as in the present war, the greater number of wounds were from shrapnel. Until these two wars about 90 per cent. of the wounds were from rifle bullets.

The weapons having been described, Dr. Keen paid some attention to modern surgery from the time of Ambroise Pare, who founded it in the middle of the 16th century. In Pare's time, to counteract poison caused by a gunshot wound, boiling oil of tar was poured on the wound. Bleeding after amputation was staunched by the application of a red hot iron.

The hot oil and pitch gave out one day and Pare was compelled to use muscle ointment and dexterous bandaging. He spent that night in misery, fearing his patients would incur direful dangers, but to his surprise found the new method of treatment better than the old. In 1552 he banished the hot iron and tied the blood vessels to stop bleeding.

"From the cruel time of Pare," said Dr. Keen, "to that of the Civil War there was a gradual but steady improvement, but not until anaesthetics slew the demon of pain was the surgeon aught but a minister of horrible suffering."

How Thompson Became Mayor

Mayor Thompson, of Chicago, has a joke on himself that he was unable to keep from his friends. In the excitement of the campaign he acquired the habit candidates often have, of joining practically every secret society in sight. Now he discovers that he joined one organization three times, or at least, made application for membership in three different councils of one organization, and paid his application fee in each instance.

"I got to be the champion joiner of the city during the political battle," said the Mayor. "I had scores of personal friends who wanted credit for presenting my name to this or that organization, and I was so accommodating that I used to sign the application blanks and forget all about it.

"The other day I met a friend who would hardly speak to me and insisted that he had been double-crossed. He said I signed an application to join his lodge and later he discovered that I had tried to join two others of the same order. I told him that I was the goat instead of himself."

THIS SCHOOL GIRL HAD BAD FAINTING SPELLS

Was Weak and Run Down, But Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Made Complete Cure

The most critical time in a girl's life comes during the school age, when she is impelled by rivalry to put forth her best efforts in studying for examinations. At the time she should have healthful outdoor exercise and abundance of fresh air, to keep the blood pure and rich, she is confined to her studies. Is it any wonder that she becomes run down in health and suffers from headaches, indigestion, loss of appetite and spells of weakness or fainting?

The case described in this letter is a good illustration and you can read here the splendid results of using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food to help through this critical period.

"While attending school my daughter became weak and very much run down. She was frequently troubled with bad fainting spells, and nothing we tried seemed to do her any good. We were advised to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and did so with most satisfactory results. I am pleased to tell you that after using five boxes of the Nerve Food she was completely cured, and has no return of the fainting spells."

This statement is certified to by Mr. Hamilton Houston, Justice of the Peace.

The reason Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is so effective in cases of this kind is because of its extraordinary blood-forming influence. By creating an abundance of rich, red blood it strengthens the action of the heart, revitalizes the exhausted nerves and builds up the system in every way.

The appetite is restored, digestion improves, you rest and sleep well, and the new vigour and energy is felt in every organ of the human body. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is doing wonders for men, women and children whose systems have become weak and run down. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50, all dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

A LUMBERMAN'S OPINION.

"I was troubled with palpitation of the heart and sleeplessness," writes Mr. Wm. Pritchard, Lumber Inspector, Lansdale Mills, Ont., "and used Dr. Chase's Nerve Food with very great benefit, as my whole system was strengthened and built up." Dr. Chase's Nerve Food forms new, rich blood and restores the feeble wasted nerve cells.

Ice As An Explosive.

Miners in the Klondyke and other northern districts in Canada sometimes economize in dynamite by using water instead. Drilling several holes in a large rock, they pour in water, stop up the hole securely and leave it for a couple of days. The water freezes and in the process expands so much that it bursts the stone asunder. From this fact may be gathered some idea of the enormous forces contained in nature.

They're Different.

The war within your mouth
All day long the battle is waged. The hottest fighting is after meal times.
Tiny particles of food remain in your mouth—even after you thoroughly brush your teeth. These particles ferment to become acid. The acid tries its best to hasten decay of the teeth. Too often it succeeds.
To fight acid comes your own saliva. Saliva is alkaline. When it reaches the acids it neutralizes them, rendering them harmless.
But—many folks haven't enough saliva. Modern diet has too much starch—a depressant to the salivary flow. Naturally you want to know what will keep the mouth normally moist and healthy.
Sterling Gum is a genuine corrective in mouth hygiene—a delicious, clean product with a sweet, natural after-taste. Chew Sterling Gum a few minutes after each meal for one week and notice the benefits.

Sniping German Snipers Knocked Him Off His Perch

The following are extracts from a letter home written by a soldier in the British Army "Somewhere in France":

I pass the day away now by going out sniping—an exciting and dangerous game. I will give you an idea of how we work:

When we came to this part of the line first the German snipers had all their own way, but now we have them well in hand.

I got up into my sniping perch this morning at dawn, as you usually catch a few of the enemy who are careless at that time (and poking their heads above the parapet.

There are four of us snipers; myself and the other three at a distance of about 100 yards from each other. Each of us has a pair of glasses. It is a game of patience absolutely; sometimes we have to wait an hour without firing a shot.

This morning I looked through my glasses and, after a time I saw a man pass a low portion of the German trench—which is only 100 yards away—crouching low, but not low epough not to be seen.

I got hold of my rifle and waited about ten minutes with my sights on and then saw a good target and—bang! No more Germans came in view at— that place.

I next turned my attention to a German periscope which kept popping up. The silly person using it brought it up in the same place every time. A Tommy bet me a shilling that I would not hit it first shot. I lost my bob, but had it next one.

The officer commanding in the trench sent a note up that he was troubled by a sniper who kept potting one particular part of the trench He also said the shots were coming from his "right front!"

I searched with my glasses for about came to the conclusion that the German sniper was in a clump of trees. This information if communicated to my other snipers and they also searched.

Eventually Sergeant —— told me he could see the sniper up a tree about 600 yards away. I then told the best shot among us —a Tommy aged about forty who had been through the South African War —to wait until the German offered a good mark and fire.

The old soldier waited over an hour for him, and then, whether by luck or not, hit the German with his first shot, and brought him headlong from the top of the tree.

After this things quieted down a bit, so we left our porches for a few hours. If you keep on firing from the same place too long they eventually spot you and send you a souvenir—a big shell.

I walked up the communication trench to the fire trench, and found the boys having breakfast, consisting of bacon, fried by themselves, tea, bread and butter, and very happy they were.

After breakfast they all cleaned their best friend—their rifle—and oiled it well, with many remarks of what they are going to do with it.

It really is astonishing how cheerful the men keep under the circumstances. The trench is deep in water in some places, and yet they sing. They make remarks to each other such as "Shall we go to Shepherd's Bush Empire to-night?" or when a shell bursts shouts, "Allemand souvenir non bon," meaning that the shell has burst without hurting anyone.

A little further down the trench two men have made what they call a wax-work show. It is modelled in clay and done very well. The first "room" is the top of a dug-out. It shows a clay model of the Kiel Canal and in it some warships. On the banks are some big guns made of a cartridge clip and case. By the side are some shells and by sticking clay in the end of a revolver bullet case. Outside the canal is the British fleet, and von Tirpitz is represented signalling, "Dont go out, the British are outside"; and he is saying, "Oh, wait until we get at them."

Next is a big clay model of Kaiser Bill with an Iron Cross on his chest and round his neck a label, "Nobody loves me."

Peanuts as They Grow.

The peanut plant somewhat resembles clover in its foliage and has small, yellow single flowers. After blossoming the little pods bend down and thrust themselves into the soil, when they grow into the well known thick shelled fruits. In cultivating the pods are covered with earth, thus insuring a large crop. Peanuts are natives of tropical America, but are now grown in many warm countries. In the southern United States they constitute an important crop.

Mild Reproof.

"I say, young fellow," said the nervous man to the taxi chauffeur, who was speeding.

"Well?" snapped the chauffeur.

"Nothing, except that you gave me the impression that I am in a hurry."—Detroit Free Press.

Hidden Meanings.

He kissed her.

"Why, stop!" she cried.

And when he failed to repeat she said, "Why stop?"—Philadelphia Ledger.

Happiness.

Half the world is on the wrong scent in the pursuit of happiness. They think it consists in having and getting and in being served by others. It consists in giving and in serving others.

JUDGING OPINIONS.

We all have to assume a standard of judgment in our own minds either of things or persons. A man who is willing to take another's opinions has to exercise his judgment in the choice of whom to follow, which is often as nice a matter as to judge of things for oneself.—O. W. Holmes.

How the French Avenged the Slaughter

PARIS, May 29—A French soldier who was promoted sergeant for bravery on the battlefield of the Bois d'Ailly has written home, under date April 15th, giving the following glimpse of the fighting as he saw it:

"The Boches," he said, "were like caged beasts, running ragingly about in wild efforts to shelter themselves from the terrible shells hurled by our '75' guns.

"Soon afterwards we were ordered to advance from the first line of trenches to make an assault. What a terrible moment! Each man begged the next one to him to write to his relatives should he be killed in action, and to mention that he died bravely, if not boldly.

"A whistle gave the signal to mount from the trenches, by means of ladders which had been placed in readiness. Some men fell before climbing the ladders, for the machine-guns were in full activity and the bullets came along, like torrential rain.

"I was one of the first to start and, with my comrades, did not take long to cover the 150 yards that separated us from the Boches. My dearest chum, who had been close to me throughout the whole campaign, fell with a bullet in his forehead, and several other comrades near us shared his sad fate.

"I am not a bloodthirsty fellow, but when, a little farther on, we came across the countless German corpses, with skulls shattered, I must admit that my heart swelled with joy. I smashed the brain boxes of two Boches who came too inquisitively near to me with the intention of leaving me a corpse.

Entangled in Wire.

"We maintained our position for three hours, when a counter-attack drove us back. During the retreat I became entangled in some nasty wire contraptions, and a curious cold shiver seized me, for I thought that 'my number was up,' and I imagined I could feel bayonets being driven through me. I shall never forget that sensation.

"However, I managed to extricate myself, and, to my further horror, saw a Teuton officer exterminate about fifty wounded men who had not been able to get away. The sight made me almost crazy.

"A little later another whistle notified us that we were to advance now. I picked up a dead man's rifle and went ahead. This time we chased the Boches and mastered the position, which, I can assure you, we shall not let them retake.

"We avenged the merciless slaughter of our wounded comrades thoroughly, but it is best not to give too many details.

"At one stage of the battle I was ordered to guard a narrow communication tunnel termed a 'boyau.' I suppose I must have done my duty all right. But it was an agonising task, and of the fifteen men of my squad only four survived."

Indelible Ink Tree.

An indelible ink tree, known to botanists as Spondias atracardium, is chiefly found in India, but grows also in north Australia and the West Indies. Its nut supplies the natural marking fluid. When dried for commerce the nut is heart shaped and nearly black and contains a black viscid juice. For marking linen or cotton this juice is mixed with quicklime. It can be made into marking ink by treating the nut with a mixture of alcohol and sulphuric ether and is also used for black varnish.

COULD NOT GO TEN STEPS FOR THE PAIN IN HIS KIDNEYS.

When you get a pain in the back you may rest assured that it comes from derangement of the kidneys, for were there not something wrong with the kidneys the back should be strong and well.

Doan's Kidney Pills regulate the kidneys, had there is no further excuse for any kidney trouble to exist. What more needs to be said? While Doan's Kidney Pills are not a "balm for every ill that flesh is heir to," they are a positive, never-failing remedy for every disease that has its inception in the improper action in those delicate little filters of the blood, the kidneys.

Mr. Adelard Cleroux, Egansville, Ont., writes: "I was troubled with my kidneys for four years. They were so bad at times, I could not go ten steps for the pain they caused me. My doctor could not do me any good. A friend advised me to use Doan's Kidney Pills. I bought five boxes, and now I have been cured for over three years. I will recommend them to whoever may be suffering from kidney trouble."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box; 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

GIRL'S BLOUSE AND SKIRT.

By Anabel Worthington.

Here is something that suits the awkward age of girls, and is certain to please mothers correspondingly. It is a neat, stylish little dress, a combination of blouse and skirt, not joined together, unless one wants to button the skirt to the waistband of the blouse. The blouse has three tucks each side of front and a centre box plait. With the short sleeve a pointed turn-back cuff is worn, and with the long sleeve a straight wristband. The skirt is side plaited, with a seam at centre back, and has a sewed on belt.

The design allows a wide choice of material. The blouse, of course, should be soft, washable and preferably white, and the skirt may be made of wool or wash fabric, as desired, such as shepherd check, serge, piqué or linen. For ten year size you would require 2½ yards of 27 inch material for the blouse and 1⅞ yards of 44 inch material for the skirt. The pattern, No. 7,197, can be obtained in five sizes, from 8 to 16 years. Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

BANKS PROFIT BY OUTLAWS, AVERS BANDIT STARR

CHANDLER, Ok., May 22.—Henry Starr, outlaw, who was seriously wounded by a boy, following a bank robbery at Stroud, lies immovable on a cot in the County Jail.

He is part Cherokee Indian. He says he is only three-eights Indian but he looks more. His skin is swarthy, and he has the Indian's high cheek bones. He is educated, and has travelled nearly all his life. He has the physique of an athlete, is thin and wiry, and, although his leg bone is shattered, and the wound would have endangered the life of an ordinary man, Starr hasn't had even a touch of fever.

"That's because I have always lived temperately," he says: "I never took a drink of liquor in my life, never smoked nor chewed, and never even drank a cup of coffee.

"Look at that," and he held out his hand with the fingers spread out. There wasn't a quiver. "My nerves are as steady as steel." And they were.

"What became of the old Henry Starr, the old outlaw of years ago?" he was asked.

"You see him before you," he said, "I am the only Henry Starr outlaw there ever was. You see, I started in young. Father was a good man, a cattleman, and he gave me a good rearing. My mother is as dear and sweet an old lady as you ever met. My father has been dead a long time, and my mother is married again. Her name is Gordon. She lives in Stillwell."

He then recounted the story of his crimes up to the Amity (Colo.) Bank robbery, for which he served three years in the Colorado Penitentiary.

"I got home June 11 last," he continued. "I stayed around till September, and between May and September fourteen banks were robbed in Oklahoma. They knew I was here. They blamed them all on me. I didn't have a hand in one of them. Since 1909 there have been 901 banks robbed in Oklahoma. [illegible] got excited over it. They got after me, and they chased me hard, and last September I broke over. They ought not lay all these bank robberies on me. I couldn't do them all.

"And, say, let me tell you right here, these bankers know how to make a little on this robbery business, too. It's a fact I'm telling you, that one bank was robbed, and the boys got only $180 in silver, but those bankers got it out that they lost $2,600, and the insurance company paid them that much. They made nearly $2,500 by that deal. Another time the boys got $800, and the bank hollered for $6,400 and got every cent from the insurance company.

"Another thing, outlaws don't get much. I never got enough to pay. That's sure. The banks give it out that there's been a big haul, and the poor outlaw rides away with a bag of nickels. It's a bum business. Why, just look at this last robbery. Two banks at once, and only about $5,000 haul, and seven people to split it among. Nothing in it."

GERMANS HURLED BACK BY THE RUSSIANS

LULL IN THE WESTERN FIGHTING REPORTED

CANADIAN CASUALTIES NEARLY 9000 MARK LATEST LISTS HEAVY

Reports Received Up to This Morning Show 999 Killed, 4123 Wounded and 1314 Missing---Couple of Thousand Yet to Be Heard From in the Last Two Weeks' Fighting

Special Cable to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, May 31.—The heavy lists of the last two days have materially increased the total number of casualties which have been reported to the Department of Militia. Reports received up to this morning show 999 killed, 4123 wounded and 1314 missing. As there are probably a couple of thousand still to be heard from, including several other missing, it is estimated that the total losses to the Canadian forces up to the present time approximate from 8500 to 9000.

LONDON, Eng., May 31.—The British evening papers to-day unanimously predicted that the United States will express her dissatisfaction with what they called the "evasiveness" of the German reply. They declared that Germany dodged the main issue by refusing to answer the demand that she cease torpedoing passenger carrying vessels. The Pall Mall Gazette ridiculed the German claim that the Lusitania was an armed ship carrying Canadian soldiers, and added that if the slaughter of the Lusitania's passengers is defended by the assertion that she was carrying ammunition to England, we wonder what excuse Germany will offer for the attempt to torpedo the liner Megantic on Sunday, while she was outward bound for Montreal. The Westminster Gazette said the German reply was "precisely what was expected." "It merely seeks to gain time," said the Gazette. Almost daily since the American note was forwarded, the Germans have given most practical evidence that they do not intend to discontinue submaring.

A DEFEAT FOR THE TURKS

CAIRO, May 31.—In a hot combat for possession of the trenches and earthworks on the Gallipoli peninsula, the Turkish troops were defeated with a loss of two thousand in killed and wounded. An official statement from the headquarters of the allied expeditionary forces to-day estimated the French losses at 300. Under a heavy fire from the Turkish artillery the French stormed and captured an important redoubt on the extreme Turkish left.

PARIS, France, May 31.—A lull in the fierce fighting north of Arras, was reported in the official despatches to the war office to-day. Only one engagement of note has occurred in the past 12 hours. That was in the Lorette Hills, where a German attack, according to the war office, was "easily repulsed."

THE SUBMARINE WAR ZONE

LONDON, May 31.—Since the German war zone decree went into effect on Feb. 18th, 87 merchant steamers of a total of 186,512 tons, have been sunk, 51 by German submarines, the Admiralty announced to-day. The statement covered operations until May 27th. In addition to merchant steamers, 37 fishing vessels with a total tonnage of 6596, were sunk. The total of arrivals and sailings at English ports for the period was 20,378.

COPENHAGEN, May 31.—"There can be no end to the European war until Germany is in a position to dictate to the world the terms of peace," the Bavarian Crown Prince wrote in an article in the Bavarian Staats Zeitung. "Only considerations of state will induce Germany to enter peace negotiations," wrote the Crown Prince, "not weariness of the war or public feeling."

OTTAWA, May 31.—That dry canteens be maintained at places in England where Canadian troops are undergoing additional training, was the request made this morning by a delegation representing the Ontario W.C.T.U., which waited upon Sir Robert Borden and Sir George Foster. It was asserted that a considerable number of the volunteers had developed the drink habit owing to the prominence of the canteen in England. Sir Robt. Borden said that the matter was under the control of the Imperial authorities but that representations would be transmitted to the war office without delay.

PTE. HEBER ROGERS WRITES HOME FROM GERMAN HOSPITAL

Peterborough Boy Was Hit Fifteen Times in the Face, Probably by Fragments of Shell, He Tells His Mother

HIS EYE IS INJURED

Mrs. R. B. Rogers, East City, has received the following letter from her son, Pte. Heber Rogers, first unofficially reported killed, and later reported wounded and a prisoner. He writes as follows:

Reservelazarett I Giessen,
May 5th.

My Dear Mother,—I suppose by now you would have received Miss Glassford's wire and know where I am. I sent her a card as soon as I could so that you would know much sooner than by writing direct. At present I am in a hospital in Germany. I was hit in the face about fifteen times, so it must have been an explosion of some kind. None, however, are very bad, but my right eye has got a bang and I cannot see out of it yet. Beyond that I am feeling fine. We do not get any luxuries here, so as we are allowed to receive parcels, I asked Miss Glassford to send me some things, and also a little money, about ten shillings. You might send me a parcel from home, too, please—some cake, chocolates, candy, biscuits, jam, potted meats, etc. They say here that parcels up to ten pounds come free postage, so you might make inquiries. They have a canteen up here at the camp, and we can buy a few things, so you while. Dave Cummings from Peterborough is up in the camp, but I don't know of any other fellows from home. I have not heard of George or Bill, at all.

Well, Mother, dear, I guess this will be all for this time. We are allowed to write two letters and a few postcards every month. Love to all.

Your loving son,
Heber.

P.S.—You may send as many parcels as you like because I certainly shall be glad to get them.—H. R.

A FORMER LOCAL FIREMAN KILLED BY POISONOUS GAS

Pte. Herbert Hopley, 48th Highlands, is Dead—Pte. J. R. Miller, Formerly of Peterboro', is Missing—Other Casualties

TO-DAY'S CASUALTY LIST

Killed by Gas—

Pte. Herbert Hopley, 48th Highlanders, 15th Battalion, formerly of the local Fire Hall.

Wounded—

Pte. Edward Hall, 40th Battalion, son of Sheriff Jas. A. Hall, Peterborough.

Missing—

Pte. J. R. Miller, 48th Highlanders, 1th Bartalion, brother of Mrs. M. Pappas.

Word has been received in Peterborough in regard to several Peterborough boys serving in different units at the front who have appeared in different casualty lists. Among them is a former Peterborough fireman, Pte. Herbert Hopley, who fell a victim to the German gas.

PTE. HERBERT HOPLEY.

Word has just been received that Pte. Herbert Hopley, 48th Highlanders, was killed by gas poisoning in action on April 20th. Pte. Hopley resided in Peterborough for the past four years, and was employed as sailmaker at J. J. Turner and Sons, and latterly in the Fire Hall. He afterwards went to Toronto, where he was among the first to join the 48th Highlanders, and went with the First Contingent. His parents reside in Ramsgate, England. He was a member of All Saints' Church choir, and also of the St. George's Choral Society. His many friends in Peterborough will regret to hear of his death. While here he boarded on Waterford Street.

PTE. EDWARD HALL.

Word has been received by Sheriff J. A. Hall to the effect that his son, Private Edward Hall, of the 10th Battalion, First Canadian Expeditionary Force, has been wounded. The message was delivered to Mr. Hall yesterday. To-day he received a letter from his son which was dated May 10th. At that time the Battalion to which Private Hall is attached, was in reserve. At time of writing Private Hall was enjoying good health and was anticipating a clash with the Germans at an early date. Private Hall left Peterborough about fifteen years ago and up, until the time of enlisting resided in the West. He enlisted in Regina.

PTE. J. R. MILLER.

A letter from Corp. Harvie Staunton, of Peterborough, who went to the front with the 48th Highlanders' detachment in the 15th Battalion, was the first intimation Mrs. M. Pappas, city, received that her brother, Pte. J. R. Miller, of the same battalion is missing. "Jack" Miller is widely known in Peterborough, where he had resided until his removal to Toronto several years ago. Corp. Staunton's letter is as follows:

Dear Friend,—I am sorry to have to write and tell you that after we came out of the trenches, Jack did not show up. I did not miss him before as I waited until I was invalided to England with a slight wound. He is posted with the missing, and may have been captured by the Germans. We

THE AMERICAN GERMAN CRISIS IS VERY SERIOUS

President Wilson is Determined Not to Modify His Original Demands in Regard to the Lusitania Case

WILL REPLY TO NOTE

Special to the Examiner.

WASHINGTON, May 31. — Germany must accept the American viewpoint that its submarine warfare, as now conducted, violates international law, or assume the responsibility for interrupting present friendly relations.

President Wilson has determined, it is asserted in official circles this afternoon, not to enter into any prolonged argument with the Kaiser's Government.

He has decided, those in his confidence declare, not to modify his original demands in connection with the Lusitania case.

In his reply to the German note, which is now before him, he will sweep aside all technicalities thus far raised.

The situation is admittedly very serious.

Red Cross Note Says Gunner Jos. O'Toole Is Alive

A letter from the Red Cross in London, dated May 13, to the parents of Gunner Jos. O'Toole, says he is wounded in both legs and is slowly but surely recovering at a base hospital in Rouen, France. Owing to the conflicting reports received from official circles, Mrs. O'Toole felt that it would be better to hold this letter until it was corroborated. But the friends of Gunner O'Toole will take new hope out of this Red Cross note which bears every appearance of authenticity. The parents forwarded a letter several weeks ago to be delivered if their son was alive, and they have taken new hope that they will hear from himself in a short time.

Steeplejacks In The City

George Walker and Arthur Drummond are in the city. They are known as the best pair of steeplejacks this side of Pera. Their first job in the city was to scale the flagpole on top of the Merrell and Meredith Building for the purpose of inserting a new rope in the pulley. This they did with about as little concern as the average man would have of crossing the street. The pole swayed considerably, but nothing short of a freak would have prevented the men from carrying out their contract. They have secured the contract to paint a couple of stacks at the gas plant, also one at the Matthews-Blackwell Company. Art Drummond is credited with having reached the highest point in the British Empire, namely, the top of the sixty-foot pole on the Royal Bank Building, Toronto. The point reached was three hundred and ten feet above the ground.

"Did you ever have a pole break?" Tossy Walker was asked.

"Yes, one broke with me on top of the Simpson Building, Toronto," replied Walker, "I managed to swing myself in so as to fall on top of the building instead of on Queen street."

RUSSIANS SCORE A VICTORY ALONG SAN ENEMY DRIVEN BACK

Capture Three Thousand Prisoners Including 60 Officers and Many Machine Guns and Search Lights---British Press Discusses Germany's Reply to America.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, May 31.—Mackensen's left wing attempting to encircle Przemysl, has been hurled back across the San. The Russians have occupied the villages of Kanikow and Naklo, which changed hands several times in the terrific fighting about Przemysl, capturing three thousand prisoners, including sixty officers and many machine guns and search lights.

The official statement issued to-day announcing these fresh victories for the Slavs did not make it clear whether the right bank of the San from Przemysl northward had been entirely cleared of the enemy. The official statement declared "we have forced the enemy to evacuate the right bank of the San to the mouth of the River Lubaczovka, north of Jaroslau." It contained the specific claim that an Austro-German force that crossed the San east of Radmyno and threatened the Przemysl-Lemberg railway, has been thrown back across the river. Fighting south of Przemysl continues with undiminished violence with the result still in doubt.

In the Shavli region, we continue to press back the Germans defending Skahiany and Kelmy, said the official statement. Near Sawdenil we took sixteen guns, many prisoners and much booty.

PAPERS ARE CHARGED

LONDON, May 31.—The government to-day began proceedings against Lord Northcliffe's newspapers on the charge of circulating improper statements with reference to Britain's conduct of the war. The Times Publishing Company was summoned to Mansion House under the Defence of Realms Act, to answer for the publication of a letter regarding military affairs, signed by Major Ehrickardson, and printed May 28st. This letter stated that while the last French reserves were at the front fighting for their country, Great Britain was not furnishing a sufficient force, and that France on that account was growing weary of the war.

The Times in defence asserted that similar information had been published previously under the authority of government and had been passed by the censors. The hearing was then adjourned until Saturday.

Sergt. Downey Heard From Local Boy Writes From the Front —Tells How Peterborough Artillerymen Were Wounded

Mrs. Eugene Downey, Peterborough, has received a letter from her son, Sergt. E. Downey, formerly of the 26th Field Battery, and now at the front with the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade. He says:

I received the letter and papers all right and was very glad to get them. The day I received them I was up in the trenches and the way the boys drove the Germans back was a sight to see. I will never forget these last two weeks as long as I live. It was awful to hear the shells flying through the air and the bursting of "Jack Johnsons" as we call them. You have no idea the size of a hole they make. When they burst they throw the dirt fifty and sixty feet in the air. We can hear them coming but never know where they are going to light. But when we hear them we all get to cover as quickly as we can, because they throw splinters a quarter of a mile in each direction and that is how the majority of casualties are caused.

We were in action for two weeks at ——. And it was the hottest place on the line for the two weeks we were there. We lost one sergeant and several of our boys were wounded. Ase White and Boxer King were wounded with the same shell. They were both wounded in the shoulder and are in the hospital and doing fine.

I suppose you have heard by this time how the Canadians drove the Germans back from Ypres, but it made a great hole in the contingent. The Battalion that the Peterborough boys were in was cut up awfully. About twenty to one against them, but they held them back until reinforcements came. The Germans are using gas. It smothers one if you get very much of it, but I hope the French give them some of their own medicine, as they have something that beats the German gas, but they don't like to use it just yet. We are out for a few days' rest, and then we are going back again. I don't know where we are going this time. Neil Simmons is well.

MOTHERS' CLUB.

The Mothers' Club of the King George School will hold a business meeting to-morrow afternoon, from 4 to 5 p.m., after which a social hour will be held.

Number of Fines In Police Court

The Police Court session this morning was a busy one, with auto drivers, blacklisters and men accused of supplying blacklisters, and the city coffers were enriched by a large amount gathered in through fines.

Case Adjourned.

S. Long, manager of the American House, who was accused of supplying liquor to one Herbert Gilgour, who is on the blacklist, pleaded not guilty. He was defended by Mr. G. N. Gordon. The case was adjourned until June 3.

Harry McClure supplied John Fowler, who is on the blacklist, with liquor and was fined $25.00. John Fowler was fined $10.00 for being drunk while on the blacklist.

John Loucks also supplied a blacklister and was fined $25.00.

Drove Too Fast.

Dr. Pulkinghorn was exceeding the speed limit on George street in his automobile. According to P. C. Blade he covered the distance between Charlotte street and Hunter street on George, in 23 seconds. This would be at the rate of about 30 miles an hour. He pleaded not guilty, but was convicted and fined $5.00.

Passed Street Car.

Mr. E. Worth and Mr. M. Pappas each passed a street car in their autos when it was stopped to discharge passengers. They were each fined $5.00.

Leslie Stevens had no tail light on his car. He was fined $5.00.

The Defendants Were Acquitted

R. David Hill and Wm. Hill, of Dummer Township, charged before Magistrate Langley "That they did break the lock and enter the premises of James Sampson and remove certain goods," were acquitted this morning. The case for the prosecution was heard in Warsaw and an adjournment ordered until Thursday, May 27th in Peterborough. Judgment was reserved until this morning.

Crown Attorney G. W. Hatton conducted the case for the prosecution, and J. A. New, of the firm of Messrs. Gordon and Widdifield, acted for the defendants.

Wounded Are Well Looked After

Pte. Harold Saunders is Attended by Japanese Doctor

Mrs. J. Saunders, Sherbrooke street, has received a letter from her husband's sister in England, in regard to Pte. Harold Saunders, of the 57th. She writes: I have seen Harold. I went to Netley yesterday and spent about three hours with him. I found him up and walking. He came out into the hospital grounds with me and walked quite nicely. He has been dumped down into a lovely place to get well in. Netley Hospital is full, so huts have been built on the grounds. Each hut contains twenty beds, and is fitted up like an hospital ward. The grounds go down to the sea, so all the men who are able to do so can go to the beach, or sit on the seats, of which there are plenty. Harold's doctor is a Japanese, and two of the nurses are too. There is one English nurse, but she has three huts to superintend. Harold likes both doctors and nurses, and says they are so good to the men. They get plenty of food. Porridge and bacon for breakfast, meat, vegetables and pudding for dinner. Then for tea each man gets two eggs with as much bread and butter as he can eat, and then bread, jam or marmalade for supper. Harold's wound is healing nicely. He expects to be in the hospital about a fortnight. He will then come here for a week, after which he expects to be sent to one of the bases in England for transport work until he is quite strong again.

Kept Alive 3 Days By Men's Devotion

LONDON, May 31.—Lieut. Hellyer, of the 4th East Yorks Territorials, who is now in a hospital at Boulogne, owes his life to the devotion of his men in the ranks, who kept him from bleeding to death by taking turns in holding an artery. The officer's left arm was blown off by a shell, and his right arm badly injured. The main artery of the severed arm was exposed But one of his men pinched it with his fingers. When the man's arm tired, another took his place in holding the artery. No surgical aid was available, and for three days Lieut. Hellyer lay in the bottom of the trench, with only this primitive aid from his soldiers between him and death.

SLOW BUT SURE.

We often hear the question asked as to how long the war will last. Evidently a definite answer to such a question cannot be given. Germany is certainly putting up a formidable fight, but there is a limit to her offensive as well as defensive endurance; and she is steadily, if slowly reaching that limit. While the forces against Germany are growing in strength in every way, the powers of Germany are weakening all around. She cannot make any great addition to her forces in the field. From the very nature of things her other resources are weakening—munitions of war must, with the prodigal waste Germany is making in her desperate and costly attempts to force an advance on two frontiers, continue to fail; food supplies cannot be assured; even putting the whole German Empire on "short rations" won't serve long. Financial exhaustion will be a factor in deciding the length of Germany's successful resistance. In straight fighting, with all her half century of preparation, Germany is getting the worst of it. Sir John French, who is on the spot, and knows whereof he speaks, says the second battle of Ypres has done much to shorten the war. We, who read the despatches, cannot perhaps see this; but a man who knows, who says little, but when he speaks, speaks with authority, says the war has been much shortened by the recent fierce fighting at Ypres, is to be trusted. Incidentally we are proud of the prominent and splendid part the Canadian troops took in the work of shortening the war during the fighting around Ypres. This is a partial answer to a question concerning the duration of the war. At other points the game is going in favour of the allies. Italy is doing her sweeping with all the proverbial energy of the new broom; and apparently Austria never expects to reoccupy the territory Italy is in course of wresting from her. When an enemy destroys his own forts in his own territory, as Austria is doing, he doesn't expect to come back in any sense. In the Dardanelles things are going our way, there, too, Dominion troops, the Australians, are doing splendid work like our Canadians. Only in the East is there a stationary situation. Germany and Austria are making a desperate attempt against the Russians, which will probably fail, as similar previous attempts have done. Altogether, and all round, there is proof that the ring about Germany and Austria is growing stronger, as well as smaller, and will soon assume crushing force of constriction. We can regard the situation as growing more hopeful every day. Be the duration of the war long or brief, its issue in the triumph of the British and allied cause is certain as the dawning of the day; but we must make up our minds as well as we have splendidly been doing, to keep our shoulders to the wheel, and help roll on the chariot to victory.

THE POWER OF SCHOOLS.

We should be overwhelmed with our sense of responsibility in respect of our schools and colleges, if we should think deeply enough to realize their tremendous potentialities of influence for both good and evil; if we realized their tremendous possibilities in influencing belief, forming opinions, and moulding character. We have a striking example of this influence, the power for evil, in the case of Germany. For half a century at least, the primary schools, the gymnasia and universities of Germany, have been devoted to implanting in the youth — that came under their teaching, to inculcating the genius of brute force and idealizing Germany as the divinely chosen agent for the dissemination of her peculiar culture, and the relentless agent of imposing it upon the world. In pupils, from the kindergarten—which wise old Friedrich Froebel introduced—to the highest university course, the doctrine of divine right of the German Emperor has been ingrained; the same process has been applied to the implanting of the cult of militarism, the doctrine of force—the exaltation of the brute force spirit above all weak considerations of humanity. So persistently has German thoroughness been applied to corrupting the mind of the people through the teaching of their schools that the entire population is a people of materialists, believers in a distorted religion that bends the whole will of the people to blind obedience to the law of force as embodied in German "kultur"; implicit belief in the supremacy of the state above the individual. Such a process of education has reduced the noble German people to a condition of virtual slavery to the ideals of the German ruling classes, the military classes. It has made a nation of dupes who consume the systematic deceit with which they are fed, and accept, as a divine instrument, the atrocities, the outrages on the laws of humanity, and the laws of war, that, as practiced by German militarism, shock the feelings of normal humanity.

The Germans are naturally a noble people; with big brains and kindly hearts; naturally thrifty, and industrious, and capable, if uncorrupted of being a beneficent force in the world. But their natures has been poisoned. They have been schooled in wickedness; they have been taught that brute force and the subordination of individuality are necessary complements—in a word the people of Germany have for half a century been taught a belief in the odious doctrine that the end justifies the means—that an essentially evil end—that eliminates human well-being and human rights — can justifiably employ the most brutal and cruel unchristian methods. Thus prostituted the schools and seats of learning of Germany have been the essential instruments of a corruption of popular morals that has enabled Germany to be, as it is to-day, the formidable enemy of mankind, the greatest disturber of the world's peace and prosperity that the world has ever known.

The exaltation of the cult of force for so many years has had its influence on religious belief; and materialism has largely taken the place of simple religious faith, especially among the great thinkers of the country. The fountain of religious belief has been poisoned. Transcendentalism has attacked the Scripture foundations of religious belief—a form of corruption that has even invaded and influenced our own theological colleges with teachings, that if headed, shake our faith in the Scriptures, and tend to cut the Christian world adrift from the safe and, for centuries, the sufficient, moorings of the inspired Scriptures. When we note how schools and colleges can be made instruments of evil teaching and training, as well as good; how they can be made, and have been made to cast the morals of a nation in a new and evil mould, we are both encouraged and warned. We are encouraged by knowing that the teaching of our schools, faithfully exercised, can be made to train effectively the moral and esthetic principles and tastes of our children, and be a powerful force in moral and spiritual, as well as mental improvement.

COMPENSATION ACT A BOOMERANG FOR MARRIED WORKMEN

The Compensation Act in so far as the employees of contractors are concerned is likely to defeat its own purposes. Its very object of protecting the wives and families of married men will likely be a feature which will militate against the hiring of these men. For, said a local contractor, the married man with a family represents a greater risk than the unmarried workman, and as the law is at present drafted, an accident to the former would mean a heavier financial loss to the employer than if an unmarried man had been injured or killed. Hence, the employer will be prompted to employ those who will be the lightest risk in any egentualities.

It is not that builders and contractors are opposed to the idea of compensation, but they certainly stand strongly against paying the entire premium. The best contractors are standing pat according to the statement of one who has at least a provincial reputation. They are not attempting to secure new contracts, but are standing by with an eye on the operations of the new Act. If this required the workman and the state to contribute to the premium the contractors would raise no objections. But called upon to pay the whole cost of the insurance he is not disposed to consult anyone's interests but his own, and he adds, who can blame us?

If the Act remains unchanged the re-employment of workmen with the next building boom will necessitate a lower wage scale. In other words, the requirements of the Act have aroused the contractors' ire. If the legislators haven't judgment enough to equalise the cost of compensation the contractors—well, the idea of business permits a wide extension. It would not be surprising therefore, if the issue of the present situation finds the employees and the general public paying the premiums for the insurance of the contractors' workmen.

THE CALL

(By E. Russell Paterson.)

There's many a man who must stay at home
Is vexing in spirit sore,
That he hasn't the health, or the youth, or the wealth
That he may give to the war;
His younger, stronger friends enlist,
And his richer friends give gold,
But there's no place in a warring race
For the weak, the poor, the old!
Protestant, Catholic, Jew—
Here's a call that comes to you!
Whatever the faith wherein you live,
There's one great service all men can give—
You believe in God and His power to-day?
Then pray!

Have you heard of the thing that is called morale,
Esprit, or nerve, or grit?
They prize it more at the seat of war
Than we're apt to value it;
And grit is a matter of spirit and mind,
A realm under God's control;
A region where He answers prayer
By gift direct to the soul.
Protestant, Catholic, Jew—
Do you see what you can do?
Pray for nerve for our fighting men,
'Twill arm each one with the strength of ten;
Would you multiply their power to-day?
Then pray!

No one need know that you're serving thus
If you don't profess such things;
It's the closet prayers for which He cares,
And the private petitionings;
And to join this service behind the lines
The regulations are few—
A wish sincere, a purpose clear,
And a will to carry it through.
Protestant, Catholic, Jew—
This call rings out for you!
A minute now and a moment then,
A quiet petition unheard by men;
Would you give your best to the cause to-day?
Then pray!

CITY LEAGUE RACE IS TIGHTENED UP

East City Team Beat the Leaders and Thistles Got a Decision Over the Classics—Both Games Were Won by the Shut Out Route.

The City League race tightened up materially on Saturday, when the East City team trimmed the leaders, the Empires, by 12 to 0, while the Thistles pulled the Classics down into the cellar with them by handing Vic Fowler's bunch a 5 to 0 beating. A good sized crowd saw the two battles.

East City had little trouble in beating the Empires. The latter gave Mahoney lurid support, and although he allowed but five hits in five innings no two in the same period, they scored seven runs, not one of which was earned. Henry, who succeeded him, was touched up for five hits in the last four innings. Kirn had the Empires eating out of his hand, striking out thirteen and allowing only three hits. The East City bunch fielded snappily and there was nothing to the game but the size of the score.

East City got two cheap ones in the first. After Butcher fanned, Hagerman was safe on Dobson's muff. Lowe fanned, but Shaw drew a pass. After Hagerman had stolen second and advanced to third on a wild pitch, Shaw also stole second, and both scored on Guerin's pop fly which nobody tried for.

There was no more scoring until the fifth, when the Empires handed the E. C's a trio of three more easy counters. Butcher was safe on Mahoney's fumble, and Hagerman singled through third. Lowe popped to Sherrett and Shaw grounded to Mahoney. A high fly to Evans from Guerin's bat should have been the third out, but the shortstop dropped the ball, allowing Butcher and Hagerman to score, and then threw over Taylor's head, letting Guerin go to third. He scored a moment later on Murphy's fumble of Swanston's tap.

The sixth saw the East Citys score two more on two costly errors and a hit.

Henry was on the slab in the seventh. He walked Guerin to start with and Swanston slapped a triple down the left field foul line. Barrie followed with a single that scored Swanston.

In the ninth, a pass to Guerin, singles by Swanston, Primeau and Butcher and errors by Henry and Connors, gave the winners three more counters.

The Empire's best chance was in the first innings, when Sherrett beat out a bunt, went to second on a wild pitch and stole third. The next three were easy. The Empires got two men on with two out in the second, but Mahoney left them stranded. From then until the seventh they went out in order and could do nothing with Kirn.

In the second game the Thistles showed the best form they have displayed this season, and won easily. Smyth twirled excellent ball, allowing only four hits and striking out eleven, while Harold Hill caught him in faultless style. The Thistles hit in timely fashion, bunching their safeties in the third and fourth innings. Jas. Rose, who started for the Classics, was not as effective as usual, but his brother Lorne, who went to the slab in the fifth, was in great form.

The Thistles opened the scoring in the third. Jackson, first up, was safe on Anderson's fumble, and Adams drew a pass. Knapman's single to right scored Jackson and sent Adams to third. He scored a moment later on Smyth's hot drive through the box. Hill grounded to the pitcher, and when Cavanah followed suit. Knapman was out at the plate trying to score.

Louis Yeote's team added another brace in the fourth. Rahmel got a life on Taylor's fumble and Long's smash to right sent him to third, the batter going to second on the throw to get Rahmel. Jackson grounded to Rose, the runners being held, but Adams scored them both with a pretty drive down the right field foul line.

In the eighth the winners got their only run off Lornie Rose, two errors being responsible. Connors dropped Munro's fly to start with. Rahmel hit to Rose, forcing Munro at second, and a double play should have been the result, but Neary lost the throw. Long's infield out advanced the runner and he scored on Jackson's single.

A good throw by Connors prevented a score in the ninth, when after Knapman singled and went to second on Smyth's infield out, Hill hit safely to left, Connors' beautiful throw caught Knapman by inches at the plate as he tried to score from second on the play.

The Classics looked most dangerous from a scoring standpoint in the sixth when Frost and O'Dette opened with clean singles. L. Rose and Anderson fanned, however, and Connors popped to Cavanah.

Grover Alexander Greater Hurler Than the Famous Walter Johnson?

A year ago to-day it would have been considered the height of baseball ignorance to compare any hurler in the country with the great Walter Johnson of the Washington Nationals. It was all right to say that Mathewson, Rusie, Radbourne, Walsh and other stars of former years were as good as Johnson when they were in their prime, but it was impossible to find any who ranked any of the present day workers with the Idaho phenom.

Now things are quite different. In fact, at the present time one Grover Alexander of the Philadelphia Nationals seems to have the call with the majority of critics around the country. Now, this Alexander party is not a young man who has sprung from obscurity to fame in a few days. On the contrary he has been hurling brilliant ball for the Phillies since the season of 1911 and he has always been regarded as one of the best flingers in the game. But not until last winter did he begin to develop a following which considers him better than the famous speed king of the Nationals.

Alexander was one of the hurlers who accompanied the All Nationals to Honolulu last fall in their tour with the All Americans. On this trip were several of the stars of the American league who had never faced the great Grover, and they were simply astonished by the wonderful form exhibited by the lad who is now leading the Phillies to one victory after another. Then and there it became noised around that some of the American league stars considered Alexander greater than Johnson, and no more praise could be bestowed on any one pitcher.

To-day Alexander appears to be a better pitcher than Walter Johnson, but in justice to the latter it must be said that Johnson is not showing his best form, nor has he shown it for nearly a year. Practically every American league player testified last year that Walter did not have the terrible speed with which his baffling shoots were once supplied. He was still a great hurler, but he was not at his best, and arguments arose as to whether he was off form or slowing up.

This year things seem to be going along as they did last year, as far as Johnson is concerned. It may be that his double flopping of last winter had a bad effect on his work, for it probably changed his disposition and that of the fans toward him, but whatever the cause, it is evident the other clubs of the American league are no longer beaten before they face Johnson, the surest sign of all that a player is not at his best.

A few years ago it was style to send in the weak pitchers against Johnson, the other managers figuring Johnson to win anyway, and then use their star hurlers against something more easy on the Washington club. But to-day the managers are sending in their best against Johnson; in fact, they did so a great part of the time last year, and they are getting away in good style.

Davis Cup Games Off For Years

International tennis matches for the Davis cup are not likely to bother the players of any of the nations for several years to come. The tragic death of Anthony F. Wilding, the famous Australasian player, who, with Norman E. Brookes, helped to lift the great trophy last August, recalled to the minds of several of the foremost players that the cup is still in this city, as the Australasians did not wish to expose it to the perils of a marine disaster while the European war was in progress.

A challenge from the Americans at this time would place the cup in the holding of this nation. Robert D. Wrenn, president of the National association, said yesterday that it was not the intention of this country to challenge until the Australasians could put a team in defence of the big silver bowl.

Praise U. S. Sportsmanship.

As the time that the news of the death of Wilding was received in this country Wrenn also received a letter from Thomas Hicks, the secretary of the Australasian association. In it the Australasian wrote in hearty appreciation of the American association withholding a challenge for the cup. He characterised the action as "a most sportsmanlike and considerate action." He write that it was the sort of thing to be expected of this country, which had taken such a high-minded position in tennis.

Wrenn, in commenting upon the amazing condition of international sports, and of tennis in particular, expressed the opinion that Davis cup matches were at a standstill for several years to come. The president of the German Tennis bund has been killed in battle. England has cancelled the entire tournament season. The international Canadian championship has been abandoned. The great club of Paris has been turned into a hospital, and, save for Americans, new faces will be seen in future Davis cup struggles.

Wrenn Expresses Sympathy.

The passing of so many players who had made the Davis cup a matter of world sporting history was a sad regret to Wrenn, as he sent the following cable to Hicks, Sidney, N.S.W.: "The death of Anthony F. Wilding is reported. Please express our deepest sympathy for his family and your association.

Wrenn declared that the greatest thing in the American season was the interest in the trip of the Eastern team to the Pacific coast. Despite rumours, only R. Norris Williams II. and Watson M. Washburn have been chosen for the team. The four of the team will play in the national clay court championship at the Pittsburg A. A. on June 26.

Then they will go direct to the Pacific coast, returning with the Californians in time for Longwood on July 26. Wrenn said that hundreds of requests to have the team stop over for matches in the west and south had been received, but that it would be impossible to meet the demands.

A Long Distance Walker Arrested

Wm. Henry Adams Claimed to be Walking 5450 Miles on a Wager —Went to Jail Here

William Henry Adams had many certificates to show that he was taking a walk of 5450 miles and had stopped over in Peterborough and other places en route. The walk was on a wager. He was charged in the police court this morning with vagrancy.

Among the letters in the possession of Adams were those signed presumably by the Court Clerk of Marmora, acknowledging his arrival in that village; Mr. E. Parados, private secretary to the Secretary of State, Ottawa; A. Girard, of the Supreme Court, of Montreal, with the official stamp; Theodore Rosseau, Secretary to the Mayor of New York.

The story of Adams got by on Saturday, when he was first hailed by the police but he was later caught begging for money, using these papers in his story. He was able to "touch" many local citizens for a small sum, and when arrested admitted to the police that he was a fraud.

The magistrate was handed the bundle of certificates this morning to read. "I do not see anything here to show you that you have been working any," remarked His Worship. "I'll give you a new start. You are fined $2, to be paid forthwith, and in default of payment ten days in gaol."

Adams did not have enough money to pay the fine so he will spend the next ten days a guest at the County Hotel.

"We will give you a certificate of this conviction being made against you, if that will help any," was the parting rejoiner from the Magistrate. The visitor did not say that he believed it would help him any in his business.

Very likely the papers will not be returned to Adams after he leaves the jail as Chief Thompson believes he should not be allowed to retain them to defraud others.

have no word of any member of his platoon, as none of them got to the reserve trench. I had seen him a few hours before the Germans broke through, and did not see him again. I got a slight wound and was sent back on April 30th. If I hear anything definite I will write at once and let you know. Enclosed are a couple of photos of Jack, and I, and also another group with him in it. Will write another letter in a day or so. Your friend.

A CAREFUL STUDY OF THE BRITISH ARMY

A special American correspondent, Mr. William C. Shepherd, at the front in Northern France, has written the following appreciation of the New British army now in the war. He writes:

The minute you begin to rub elbows with the English Army you make this discovery.

Tommy Atkins, the professional English soldier, is here aplenty; he does the English Army. John Bull is the everyday English citizen, and he seems to be around here in hundreds of thousands. Tommy Atkins is the soldier that Kipling sings about. John Bull has never been sung about. He's the John Bull who believes his home is his castle; in fact, it is that belief that has brought him here. He's the John Bull who pays his taxes, who reads newspapers, and talks politics, who has a garden, a wife and children, and who travels daily, in peace times, between his home and his office.

Take any one of your younger neighbours—a lawyer, a street car conductor, a real estate man, a clerk; quiet fellows who stay home on summer evenings and squirt the lawn or weed the garden—and I'll go out on the streets of this headquarters town and find his counterpart for you within five minutes. He's carrying a gun and wearing khaki. Or I'll find him for you lying under a wooden cross in one of the field cemeteries, nearby, his part of the job that he came out here to do well and nobly finished. It was his duty to show that he believed not only that an Englishman's home is his castle, but that a Belgian's home and a Frenchman's home, and every home in all civilization, is a sacred shelter that must be untouched by enemies.

The Call of Duty.

There's a thrill about being with the English Army that no American can miss. These hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of men are volunteers, every man jack of them sat down and thought it all out for himself before he went to the recruiting office and asked for a place in the Army. To-day, in the English Army khaki, he's his own man's man. He's responsible to his superiors, for he's a soldier; but primarily he's responsible to himself and to that castle of his back home and to every jeopardised castle-home in every corner of the earth. He's worked out his duty for himself as a man works out his own religion or the other great problems of his life, and the answer to his problem is that here is in khaki, a full-fledged soldier.

Don't believe these stories that he's always singing "Tipperary" and that he's always ready for a fight or a frolic. There's no frolic about it, and very little music. His frolic and his music are awaiting him at the castle somewhere in the Empire, if he ever sees it again. He came out here to fight, and he's in dead and serious earnest. He wasn't always singing "Tipperary" while he was doing his day's duty in peace times or while he was travelling to and from work; no more does he do it now. This is a serious job, just like his peace-time duty; the frolic and the music may come after the job is done.

The thrill that an American gets, rubbing his elbows with this volunteer British Army, comes with the knowledge that there are only two great powers that have the voluntary military system—Great Britain and the United States.

Through all the long winter, back in the British Isles, I saw men in silk hats, in derbies, in long coats, in short coats, in hunting boots, in street shoes, drilling and marching and counter-marching; their faces were always set determinedly. Now I see these same men here in khaki and caps. They are here because they are forced to be here; forced by something within themselves. They are here not only because they wanted to be here, but because they were determined to be here.

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

The Court of Revision will meet this evening to consider a number of matters in connection with the assessment on sewers and sidewalks.

Outstanding Taxes.

Tax Collector Green is still endeavouring to collect overdue taxes. The total amount is small as compared with the sum collected. He has been authorised to take such steps as may be necessary to collect all outstanding taxes.

Charity Board.

The Central Charity Board will meet this evening for the disposal of regular business. This month there has been a very gratifying decrease in the demands made upon the Board.

Sidewalks Being Repaired.

Sidewalks that have suffered from the effects of frost are undergoing repairs in various parts of the city. The season for the construction of new sidewalks will open up in a short time.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

Berlin's new garbage incinerator was formerly handed over to the civic authorities. It cost $14,000 and destroys thirty tons of garbage every twenty-four hours.

Boat Sank.

Ald. Peebles of Hamilton has discovered that the city carried $2,000 insurance against fire on the fireboat sucker when it was resting at the bottom of the bay.

British Born Labourer.

Earlscourt ratepayers passed a resolution calling on the Toronto City Council to force contractors on civic jobs to have at least 80 per cent. of British-born labour on their contracts.

Tax the Brute.

Newlywed — Look here old man, can you give me any good reason why you insis on remaining single?

Free N. Gay—Sure—matrimony.

What More Could Be Asked?

"Robert," said his father, "I thought I told you yesterday to clear up the yard."

"Well, I did," declared Bobby, virtuously. "I fired everything over the fence soon as I got home from school; but the kid next door throwed 'em all back after dark."

Heavy Export of Cheese; Lard Quoted at Advance

Canadian Grocer's Review of Market Situation — Big Sales of Sugar to France and Britain Should Strengthen This Market.

In both the Montreal and the Toronto markets this week one of the big features is the strong undertone to the market for live and dressed hogs. This advancing movement has been noticeable now for some weeks and Canadian Grocer about one month ago prophesied considerably higher prices on live hogs. Live stuff is now up 25 to 35 cents per hundred pounds, and dressed has advanced 50 cents. The cause of this sharp advance is primarily the exceptionally large export business doing in all kinds of smoked and cured meats. The supplies of hogs coming forward are fair, but by no means large enough to look after the requirements of the trade for this export business. The remarkable strength of the hog market is reflected, too in the market for smoked and cured meat and, as the price schedules show, these are up 1-2c. per pound this week. We think they will go higher in the near future, because there is so much business for export account.

Quotations on lard are advanced this week by 1-2c. for pure. The demand continues large and sales are easily made at the higher figures quoted in our market report. Compound remains firm, but does not advance. The increase in the price of pure lard is sympathetic to the strength of the hog market in general, and the meat market in particular.

Cheese Exports.

As we go to press butter has dropped still more, and creamery, fresh made, now sells 1 to 2c. less than a week ago to the trade, and other [illegible] There is a lot of butter coming. The pastures are in such fine shape and the flow of milk is so good that decreases in price of butter are not unexpected. Cheese, however, remains extraordinarily high, chiefly on account of the excessive exports. About 44,000 boxes went out last week as against 5,300 boxes one year ago. This proportion has been maintained each week for some time now, and therefore domestic trade gets little attention, at any rate, at a reasonable figure. Cheese is now higher than we have ever known it, and we see no immediate outlook for lower prices. Doubtless a lot of the people who are making butter would make cheese if they had the facilities—and at the same time make money.

Big Sugar Sales.

Further to our report on the sugar situation last week, announcement has been made of the purchase from U. S. refineries of something like twenty-two million pounds of granulated sugar by the French government. The price paid was $4.65 cents in bond. The transaction amounted to a little over one million dollars. Moreover, there were inquiries for another forty-five million pounds of granulated sugar for which the refiners were asking $4.70 cents. A week ago negotiations were concluded for the sale of sixty-seven million lb. of raw sugar to the United Kingdom, which was valued at two and a half million dollars, and the sale of twenty-seven million pounds of granulated valued at one million two hundred thousand pounds. Last week, therefore, the sales of sugar from the United States aggregate one hundred and sixteen million pounds, and the total value is something like four million eight hundred thousand dollars. This very naturally strengthens up the New York market and the Canadian market follows suit. It is not unlikely that we shall see higher prices shortly, unless local competition is sufficiently strong to offset this.

PTE. SAM MILLS SAW MAJOR BENNETT FALL

Also Adds a Little Incident of the Kindliness and Thoughtfulness of the Peterborough Men

How the 2nd Battalion on the morning of the eventful 22nd of April first calmed the townspeople whom they had been billeted among is told in a letter from Private Sam Mills, who also saw Major Bennett fall. Private Mills is the Bury boy who was "batman" or orderly to Sergt.-Major Howarth. In his letter he mentions that the German activity, especially the near approach of shell fire, greatly alarmed the civilians, who began to pack up in preparation for flight. Sergt.-Major Howarth lined up a procession of his men who formed a cooks band and paraded the streets. They used their tin utensils and forks in lieu of drums, and sang lively songs as they marched along. Their diversion was successful and having dissipated the first fears of the non-combatants the battalion marched into action.

The letter to Mrs. Howarth is otherwise a personal one and could be appreciated only by those who understand the close attachment of Sergt.-Major Howarth and his young friend. They were both from the same town, where Pte. Mills is now convalescing. He says that he happened to look along the line during part of the action and chanced to see Major Bennett stumble and fall.

Sergt. Ernie Nicholls, wounded in the hand during the same action, writes from France and is apparently with the remnants of the battalion. His letter was one of condolence to Mrs. Howarth. He adds that he saw [illegible] close together and with the left half of the battalion. He himself was on the right half. Sergt. Nicholls, however, was apparently too busy to steal more than the one glance along the line, for that was the only occasion he mentions.

ONCE AGAIN THE T. A. S. PICNIC IS GETTING UNDER WAY

The T.A.S. workers are beginning to formulate plans for their annual picnic on Dominion Day. Several steamers are being arranged for, a permanent band stand will likely be built, and a balcony will be built on the north east side of the club house. It is proposed to have the dramatic section provide a number of entertainment features during the afternoon. However, the real programme work is just being undertaken and most of it remains to be drawn up.

The summer camp will be operated again this year. Enquiries on this point have been more numerous than ever and a bigger camp than last year is expected.

Renewal of Massacres.

JULFA, Transcaucasia, May 1.—A renewal of the recent massacres of Christians in Armenia is now in progress in the whole district of Lake Van.

Conflicts between the Armenians and the Kurds are daily becoming more obdurate. An exceptionally fierce engagement was occurring yesterday at Shatasch.

Pte. E. Mesley Is Doing Well

Card Received From Him To-day, Written in Hospital in Dublin, Ireland

A card to-day from Pte. Ern. Mesley from Dublin, Ireland, to his parents, says that he is doing as well as could be expected.

Although the name of Pte. Mesley appears in to-day's casualty list, it is impossible that he should have been in action a second time. The wound he received was in the leg, and he is still in the hospital.

Of course there is bound to be some confusion and errors with so many names coming through the Department at Ottawa, and it is possible that the list in which Pte. Mesley was first reported wounded, has been overlooked and it might be repeated.

Russians Take Tea and Shells With Equal Calm

WARSAW, May —For the nicest way to see the war (at a distance) is to travel by transport team. It is [illegible] was is fussy. Having witnessed these fussy things in south Poland, I resolved to return to Warsaw. But when I sought a means of getting to Warsaw I found that there was none.

Bjalobrzegi is a nice, dirty town on the blood mixed Pilitsa stream. At dewy dawn I went to the "Etappe Commandant." This "Etappe Commandant" has a little office outside the town near abandoned German trenches. He says he has no mofors, or cars, or horses.

Big, Very Dirty Man.

Here in came a big, very dirty man in a uniform coat with "Sb. 17" on the shoulder straps, with army boots and ordinary civilian trousers. The commandant said the big man was a 'viestovoi." A "viestovoi" is a mounted messenger, instructor, and meddler who goes with each team of transport carts. "Why not go to Warsaw with him?" I agreed.

The commandant spent the next half hour telling the "viestovoi" to hurry up. I took my seat on top of a sack in a transport car; the "viestovoi" mounted his horse (which he rode standing in the stirrups), and we started.

A thousand thousand carts start from all corners of Czar Nicholas' endless empire; and all, or nearly all, converge on Warsaw. The carts bring to Czar Nicholas' million strong army food, munitions, clothing.

My transport cart differs from ordinary peasant carts only in that when the military commandeered it they painted "C 409" in red ink on its green side. The other transport carts also have "C," which is their class in the Etappe organization, and a number. They have no springs. The shafts are two shinny, unpainted pine trunks, and the harness is a rope. The driver sits on a ridge of wood in front and curses quietly. The "viestovoi" rides alongside, still standing in his stirrups, and curses quietly.

Thousand "a Small Train."

More wondrous than the single transport carts is the transport train. The "viestocoi" says it is "a small train," and when I ask him how many carts there are he says "perhaps a thousand." I can see neither the beginning nor the end. In front of us is another one wheeled cart, with a peasant driver in a short sheepskin coat and round black lambskin cap. Before it is an artillery cart with two uniformed soldiers. It is an intruder, and the driver in front of us curses at it quietly. Behind us are carts without end.

All goes wonderfully well. The carts never lose the road. Usually there is nothing to show it. Sometimes there is a plain unpainted signboard with the words "Doroga na Etape," which means "Etappe road." The train seems to find its own way. When we enter small villages the "viestovoi" takes out a turnip like watch and makes notes on a blue form. When we come to a big village he makes for the Etappe commandant. The Etappe commandant is usually a grizzled warrior. On seeing the "viestovoi" he swears, looks at the blue form, and rings up some one on the telephone. He sends a man who wears army breeches and a civilian coat into the road, and this man checks the carts.

Some are always missing. When the Etappe commandant hears this he swears and rings up again. The fault is the fault of the skinny Polish horses. These horses are new to motor cars. Once every half hour along the road comes a motor car with staff officers. It is hard to pass. Half the horses shy, plunge, and rear. The staff officers and the chauffeurs bawl to the transport drivers. "Cover his eyes," and the transport driver covers the eyes when it is too late. The horses lash out, dash violently into the roadside drainage ditch, smash the shafts, overturn the carts. Every one swears, but nobody worries.

Bridge of Logs.

When we leave Bjalobrzegi and cross the new built Pilitsa bridge, the "Viestovoi" ceases cursing.

I ask him about his native village, Lody, and he says: "It's peaceful now, but there is nothing to drink, and that makes people quarrelsome."

There is an inn at Saborow. It got tea in the inn and offered some to the "viestovoi" and the driver. The "viestovoi" drank it. The driver refused. He said: "In war time there is no dignity in tea."

At 9 in the evening we got to the town of Tartschin, famous because in nine houses. Tartschin is twenty-six miles from Bjalobrzegi and it took us thirteen hours to reach it. All the time the transport train goes at walking pace, and with the stoppages due to breakdowns and to narrow bridges, you cover only two miles an hour. When we stop the "viestovoi" gets communicative about the war. Especially at Tartschin, where you can hear the German guns.

War Brings Benefit.

He tells me that most transport drivers do not want the war to end. They earn two roubles a day—which is a dollar, and twice the peace wage. This they manage by driving day and night.

The driver never goes home; never sees wife and children; never goes to bed; never changes his clothes. When his endless train of carts reaches Warsaw, Sedlec, Brest-Litovsk, or wherever else it is due, he reloads his carts and starts again. Seated on the wooden cart ridge he sleeps soundly as he drives. My driver sleeps even in daytime. When we come to a narrow bridge or meet a motor car the "viestovoi" thrusts down my driver's neck the end of his whip and the driver wakes and swears mildly. The "Viestovoi" says:

"How many drivers are there altogether?"

"Maybe 150,000. That is 70,000 civilian and 80,000 soldier drivers. The rest are White Russians and don't count."

Once Livelier Times.

"Things were livelier in November on the Drschitsa river."

"Why?"

"I was an artillery driver. I drove ammunition waggons. A german shell went through our ammunition waggon and sent three of our shells off. I was a few yards ahead helping a cart out of trouble in a ford. My comrade was killed."

I slept this night on sacks. We passed through the half burnt village of Lasy. The "viestocoi" rade all night. He covered me with a sheepskin. I shivered.

In the morning at 6, after covering forty-five miles of road, we began to approach Warsaw by the Grojec Ally.

WISDOM OF WETNESS.

How Not to Catch Cold After Immersion in Waters.

The belief that no colds and chills result from getting wet with sea water is not wholly correct, but it holds a certain amount of truth, for the salt in the water retards evaporation, and as the heat in the body is therefore drawn off gradually, the temperature does not fall so quickly, and we are not "chilled". Those who have tumbled into a river, and also into the sea, may have noticed that in the latter case, the sensation of cold is not so intense.

Further, the salt in the sea acts as a stimulant, and helps to maintain the circulation of the blood.

To fling a mackintosh over wet clothes, condemned by some, is scientifically the correct thing to do, for the mackintosh, being airtight, or nearly so, prevents the evaporation of the wet from our clothing. This, of course, means that heat is not absorbed from our bodies. It is this absorption which causes colds and chills.

PETERBOROUGH SOLDIER BOYS COMFORTABLY SETTLED AT BARRIEFIELD

8th Mounted Rifles, 26th Battery and Other Units Are in Their Canvas Home Completing Their Training to Enable Them to Get to the Front —Gossip From the Third Division Centre

KINGSTON, May 31.—Peterborough's soldier boys are now comfortably sheltered in their canvas homes at Barriefield Camp, and hard at work preparing for the time when they go to the front. This city is well represented with a squadron in the 8th C.M.R., forty men in the 26th Battery, and a number of infantrymen in what is styled the composite battalion.

The 8th Mounted Rifles are stationed away to the east of the infantry lines and the ranges. When the regiment arrived they found that the C.A.S.C. had everything ready to supply food and fodder for every man and horse in camp, and the smoke rose from a score of camp kitchens as the cooks prepared the first morning meal in camp for the men who will spend the summer months on Barriefield heights.

The 25th and 26th Batteries and ammunition column are in the extreme eastern section of the camp, beyond the lines of the 8th C.M.R. Back of this location is a heavy wooded section of land which will afford excellent protection to these units.

The composite battalion under Lt.-Col. Fee, have all their tents erected, and many of the men are in uniform. In a few days all the new recruits will be supplied with kit and clothing. This battalion is camped east of the 25th Battalion.

The water lines have been extended to all parts of the camp, and there is an abundant supply of good water taken from the solid limestone rock which covers the area of the entire camp. The new water tank is in position, and the new pump house working.

All garbage is carried to the bacteria beds, and then disposed of in the most modern manner. The canteens are running and all carry a good stock of everything that a soldier needs in camp beyond what he is supplied by the government. The prices are reasonable, and all profits go into the funds of the regiment conducting the canteen, and afterwards used for the benefit of the men.

So far there are no vendors in the camp, and it is necessary to get a permit from the camp commandant before any soliciting or selling can be done in the lines. New booths are being erected all along the roadway by enterprising citizens, and all hope to do business with the soldiers in camp. The Gananoque road between Barriefield village and the camp grounds is taking on the appearance of "Canteen Avenue" at Valcartier, last summer.

Entertainment for the men is not lost sight of. The Y.M.C.A. are on the grounds with an immense tent, and they propose to give the camp a nightly programme. In addition to this a local picture house is trying to make arrangements with the Reeve of Barriefield for the use of the town hall in which to conduct a picture house and give the men who do not care to travel as far as the city every night, a good moving picture programme with up-to-date feature films.

The 9th C.M.R. are commanded by Lt.-Col. Munro; the 25th Battery by Lt.-Col. Arnoldi; 26th Battery by Major Hall, of Peterborough; Ammunition Column by Captain W. Harty, Jr.; 39th Battalion by Lt.-Col. Edwards; the C.O.C. by Major Prideaux; C.A.S.C. by Captain Welch; the R.C.E. By Major Burritt; Queen's Engineers by Lieut. Henderson; Detention Tent, Lieut. Richardson, A.M.C.; Surplus Troops by Lt.-Col. Fee, with Colonel Hemming commanding the camp.

The parade sheets show the following strength of each unit in camp:—Staff, 15; C.O.C., 11; C.P.A.S.C., 19; R.C.E., 6; C.A.S.C., 43; C.A.P.C., 6; A.M.C., 8; Queen's Engineers, 25; Artillery Staff, 6; 25th Battery, 145; 26th Battery, 125; Ammunition Column, 129; 8th C.M.R., 570; 39th Battalion, 735; Surplus Troops, 483.

The medical staff of the camp is composed of Major Gardner, A.D.M.S. and sanitary officer; Detention Hospital, Lt. Richardson; Artillery Brigade, Captain Farrell; 8th C.M.R., Captain Embery; 39th Battalion, Lieut. Hollis; Dental Surgeon, Captain Simpson. Sergeant Embery is sanitary sergeant, Sergeant Reid on duty at the Detention Hospital.

The 39th Battalion have erected a large bell in front of their lines on which they strike the hours. This is the "Big Ben" of the camp, and can be heard distinctly all through the long lines of tents.

The 9th C.M.R. have 170 horses in camp. They have over one hundred men in the regiment wearing service medals, and these represent campaigns all the way from Egypt to South Africa. The 9th have a band of eight pipers with drums, and 12 trumpeters, so there will be no lack of music in their lines.

The Y.M.C.A. tent is lighted with gas, and has a staff of two physical directors, one man on religious work, one cook, four counter men at their lunch bar, and Mr. Little managing the work. More men are expected from Toronto in a few days. A barber will be installed in the tent in a few days.

BRITAIN'S SEA STRENGTH UNIMPAIRED; GREATER NOW THAN WHEN WAR BEGAN

Has Britain's naval supremacy been endangered by recent losses? That question is put to The Globe by anxious readers. It deserves a careful answer, based upon the best information available. The British Empire depends, under God, for its existence upon the British navy. Were the fleet to lose command of the seas, within three months Britain's workshops would be empty, her people starving and her armies abroad forced to surrender for lack of supplies and war material. The fleet of Britain is, therefore, her all in all, despite the tremendous exertions devoted to the organization of a vast army. That army, without the use of transports and the protection of the fleet, would be impotent either to leave the United Kingdom or to return thither. If the navy were to lose control of the seas the British Empire would exist only upon sufferance. The question is, therefore, vital one.

The first consideration is that of personnel. The British estimates of 1913-14 made provision for 146,000 officers and men of the navy, of whom 115,092 were provided for the sea service, and 18,235 as marines, the remainder being under training or engaged in particultr duties. Germany in the same year had 3,394 officers and 69,495 men on her naval establishment, of whom over four thousand were employed in the coast defence artillery branch. Britain therefore had a little over twice as many trained men upon her ships of war as Germany had when the war broke out. Britain at once called up her Fleet Reserve crews, her Royal Naval Reserve men, and other trained reservists, who brought the personnel to almost a quarter of a million. It was recently announced that the number of men in the navy—including probably the crews of trawlers engaged in mine sweeping and patrol work—was over rather than under 250,000. The loss of life in the navy since the Amphion was sunk on August 7 has been remarkably light. Including 400 men as the likely number of deaths through the sinking of the Triumph and Majestic, and 250 sailors as the loss through the destruction of the Princess Irene, the navy has had 7,028 men killed in action. The number of wounded has been exceedingly few, the losses have been incurred almost entirely from torpedo attacks or mines. In such cases the survivors of the disasters were almost all uninjured. In only three instances have British cruisers been sunk by shell fire—the Pegasus off Zanzibar and the Good Hope and Monmouth off the Chilean coast. In the latter action the entire ships' crews were lost.

Germany's losses of life in naval actions are not known, but the losses of ships which sank with their entire crews or a proportion recorded in official reports, would make a death list of at least 5,834. In personnel therefore, the British navy has lost far fewer men in relation to its strength than the German crew. Less than three per cent. of the crews of British ships have been killed in action, and the fighting power of the navy in men has not been impaired in any material sense by ten months of war.

How does the record stand in regard to ships. Of cruisers and smaller craft Britain has sunk far more German tonnage than Germany has sunk British, and the Empire's superiority in these classes is now overwhelming. Germany has only a few fast light cruisers left, and not one of them to-day is at sea. The loss of vessels like the Augsburg, Madgeburg, Mainz, Koeln, Ariadne, Hela, Emden, Karlsruhe, Leipzig, Nurnberg and Dresden, has put an end to all attempts to destroy British commerce by above-water attack, and has forced the German Admiralty to rely entirely on submarines as commerce destroyers.

It is in the class of vessels fit to take a place in the line of battle that Britian's loss has been greatest and Germany's least. Of battleships or battle cruisers Germany has lost but one, the cruiser Goeben, which was forced to take shelter in the Dardanelles, and afterwards was sold to Turkey. So far as operations on the high seas are concerned she no longer counts. Britain on the other hand has lost the following capital ships: the pre-Dreadnoughts Bulwark, by accident; Formidable, torpedoed; the Ocean, mined; Irresistible, mined; Goliath, torpedoed; Triumph, torpedoed; Majestic, torpedoed. The Dreadnought Audacious has also been sunk, although no official admission of her loss was ever made. These losses though heavy, in no way endanger Britian's supremacy in line-of-battle ships. Mr. Winston Churchill, speaking some time ago, said that Britain could afford to lose a battleship of the Dreadnought class every month for a year and still be relatively stronger at the end of the period than at the beginning. This is due to the fact that when the war broke out there were in process of completion in British yards four Dreadnoughts for foreign powers and ten for the British Government, while in Germany there were only two altogether. Two battleships intended to strengthen the Turkish navy have been added to the British fleet, as well as one built for Chile. Five of the battleships in process of construction for Britain in the fall of 1914, have already been completed, and five more will be finished by October, as well as a second Chilean vessel commandeered by the Admiralty. Britain therefore has lost one Dreadnought and added eight. Germany has lost none and added two. In Dreadnought cruisers Britain has added the Tiger since the war began and lost none. Germany has added the Derfflinger and lost the Goeben. Here also Britain's strength is relatively increased. Taking all vessels of the Dreadnought class, battleships and cruisers together, Britain to-day has thirty-tight in commission, and six nearing completion, while Germany has twenty in commission, two nearing completion, and two that will not be completed till 1916. The British strength is now almost two to one, and by the fall will actually be two to one in numbers. In weight of metal and fighting strength it is very much more.

In pre-Dreadnought battleships the comparison is still entirely favourable to Britain, despite the serious losses in this class. Britain had forty pre-Dreadnoughts when the war began. She now has thirty-three, having lost seven. Germany had twenty and has lost none. But Germany's twenty pre-dreadnoughts are far inferior to Britain's. Not one of them has a speed of over eighteen knots, and not one a 12-inch gun. Eleven of the twenty have guns of but 9.4-inch calibre. Five of Britain's pre-Dreadnoughts steam 19 knots and ten 19½ knots, while every one of them is armed with 12-inch guns except the Swiftsure. In a fleet action the British pre-Dreadnoughts would smother the fire of the German vessels of the same type. These figures indicate clearly the British strength upon the sea is in no danger of collapse. The submarine is an ever-present peril but up till now not a single Dreadnought has been torpedoed. If that fortunate immunity continues Britain will emerge from the greatest war in history with more ships fit to take their place in the line of battle than she had when the titantic struggle began.—The Globe.

SIGNS OF KIDNEY TROUBLE.

In the early stages kidney troubles are known by backaches and urinary disorders. Later come dropsy, sweeny, rheumatic pains and perhaps diabetes. Don't wait for them. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills will help you in a few hours. Their thorough action on the liver, kidneys and bowels will clear away the pains and aches and make you well again.

Free Treatment of Joint Disease

Owing to the serious losses of young foals, in some localities, amounting to sixty per cent. of the total number of young animals, the Provincial Board of Health has prepared a vaccine treatment for the prevention and also for the cure of this disease. Dr. Fontaine has obtained enough of the vaccine to treat a limited number of cases, and while the supply lasts will treat a number of cases in each locality for a nominal fee for experimental purposes.

A full history of the case will be required in every instance. All communications should be addressed to Dr. Fontaine, V.S., Hunter Street. 'Phones 669 and 668. 5d-tf

1st Communion Received By The Children

One Hundred and Two First Communicants at St. Peter's Cathedral and at the Church of the Sacred Heart

One hundred and two children at St. Peter's Cathedral and the Church of the Sacred Heart received their first communion on Sunday morning. At the Cathedral there were sixty-one children, almost equally composed of boys and girls, from St. Peter's school and St. Mary's convent. In the South End parish there were thirty-eight children from the Sacred Heart School and three from St. Joseph's School, Otonabee. At both churches the girls were dressed in white and wore white veils; the boys, in black suits and with a knot of white ribbon on their left arms. At the Church of the Sacred Heart Rev. Father McAulay preached, and in simple language spoke of the importance of the event to the children. He told them they could be an example to their parents, and, addressing the latter, Father McAulay reminded them of the necessity of always showing the children a good example in the conduct of their everyday life, and by attendance at mass and the sacraments. In the afternoon the children assembled on the Church lawn and proceeded with the other Sunday School children into the Church, where the first communicants were enrolled in the Scapular. Rev. Father McAulay presented each boy and girl with a sacred picture as a souvenir of their first communion. In conclusion, there was the benediction of the Blessed Sacrament, with the children singing the hymns and responses. They will not receive confirmation until next year.

At St. Peter's Cathedral the sixty-one children were addressed by His Lordship Bishop O'Brien, who said he shared with them the happiness of their first Communion. His Lordship gently admonished them in regard to their future, and spoke of the spiritual aid from frequent communion.

At both Churches the children had spent the last three days of the week in retreat, and previously had been examined as to their knowledge of the short catechism. To the Sisters of the schools the most of the latter knowledge was due, as also in a general way, the preparation of the children. The processions at both churches, with silken banners and ribbons, the bright Spring sunshine, and the light soprano voices as the children sang "O Sacred Heart" and "Come Holy Ghost" were impressive in their simplicity and in the faith and innocence of the children whose average age was about eight years.

Army Supplied By Girls' Toil

Make 2,000,000 Cartridges a Week in One English Munition Factory

LONDON, May 29.—In these days of much talk about "slackness" among those who are making the munitions of war in this country it is quite refreshing to get, now and then, a glimpse of the other side of the picture. And quite a striking one has been afforded, curiously enough, by the prosecution of a firm of cartridge makers in Leeds who were charged with working two girls in their employ many hours in excess of the time allowed by law.

SUIT BROUGHT BY HOME OFFICE

The action was brought by the home office acting on the report of a factory inspector in its service. One girl it was stated had gone to work at 8 o'clock on a Friday morning and had remained at work until 7.30 on Saturday morning, a period of twenty five and a half hours, or allowing for the meal intervals, of twenty-one actual working hours. The other girl remained at work for thirty hours, and owing to an accident, had had the end of a finger taken off by a machine she was working.

A famous British lawyer, Marshall Hall, K.C., who appeared for the defence, described the prosecution as a piece of fatuous folly which could only be justified by extreme ignorance. The cartridge firm, Greenwood and Batley, were he said, straining every nerve to keep up their output. Everything had been done to encourage in their girls the spirit of patriotism, and they had responded by making every possible effort. They had gladly worked extra time.

2,000,000 A WEEK

One girl, said Hall, had never had her clothes off for seven days. So enthusiastic were the girls that when they got the output up to 2,000,000 a week, they bought at their own expense ribbons and flags with which to decorate their machines.

It would have been better, Hall added, to issue to them a special medal in recognition of their splendid services than to prosecute their employers. The magistrate before whom the case had come dismissed it.

What "One Who Knows" Says

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Sir,—You have several times made the mistake of saying that the late superintendent of the Trent Valley Canal is in the employment of the Government again. He is not, and does not pretend to be. He is travelling for a large brass foundry, wholly unconnected with the Government.

ONE WHO KNOWS.

Found Dead In the Park

Mr. Geo. Wheeler Succumbs to Attack of Heart Disease

Mr. George Wheeler was found dead on a bench at the entrance to Victoria Park, shortly after 7 o'clock yesterday morning, by Wm. Teabe and Ernie Lawrence, two employees of Messrs. Blewett and Middleton. The Coroner, Dr. Greer, when called, pronounced death as due to heart failure.

The late Mr. Wheeler, who has been complaining of having heart trouble, for some time, left for his home about 8 o'clock Saturday evening. It has been his usual custom to take a short-cut through Victoria Park, to the London Street Bridge, through Nicholls Oval and to his home, which was near the Finger Board, the other side of the Oval. It is thought that he felt weak when he got as far as the entrance to the Park, and sat on a bench for a while to recover. He was noticed there by several passers-by during the early part of the evening and later, but none was close enough to see what he was in trouble, and he was allowed to remain there until early yesterday morning, when the above two men went to rouse him as they were passing. When seen the evening before he was in a sitting position and would not claim the attention of anyone particularly as many people use the benches in the Park at all hours, and people who go through there regularly would not be likely to think it in any way singular to see a man asleep on a bench. At midnight one gentleman stopped a short distance from him, but heavy breathing was very audible, and, not knowing who it was, did not disturb him. Had he been rescued at that hour it is possible his life could have been saved.

Death from Heart Failure.

The Police Department was notified after the finding of the body yesterday morning, and P. C. Dixon was sent to the Park, Coroner Dr. Greer arrived shortly after and found the body lying on the bench. He pronounced the cause of death as being heart failure.

Worked at Auburn.

Mr. George Wheeler was born in Peterborough, the son of the late George Wheeler. He was 57 years of age and has been employed as a carter at the Auburn Woollen Mills for about twenty years. He was married and is survived by his wife and four small children, residing on the River Road; two brothers, Messrs. Harry and Wm. Wheeler, residing in the city, and two sisters, Mrs. C. F. Gray, and Mrs. G. T. Chisholm, both of Toronto survive.

The funeral will take place tomorrow afternoon from the residence of his brother, Mr. Harry Wheeler, Norwood Road, at 3.30 o'clock. Interment in Little Lake Cemetery.

Voice of The People

Peterborough, May 31st, 1915.

Editor Examiner:

Dear Mr. Editor,—Kindly allow the Municipal committee of the Labour Council to reply to some of the statements made at the Board of Works meeting on Wednesday last re the 25c. minimum. Alderman Edgar stated that the Labour Council had gone too far, and it was not their province to dictate to the City Council. The Labour Council is the central body of all the Labour Unions of the city, and they are quite within their province in making a reasonable request in a reasonable manner. It is their duty to safeguard the interests of their class, and to strive to lift the lowest paid members of that class into a better position. They have never attempted to dictate to the City Council, and if Ald. Edgar cannot support any request they make he can speak and vote against it. There is no question of dictation about it, as it is a perfectly reasonable request put forward in a perfectly reasonable manner. With regard to his insinuation that members of the Labour Council have brought stone masons from Toronto, there is not the slightest truth in the story. There is only one employer of labour in the Labour Council, Mr. J. J. Hartley, and he has no contracts in the city at present. Mr. Alderman Stratton stated that men were employed by the city for charitable reasons, and if dropped from the pay roll would become objects of charity. At the present time those men are paid the same wages as the good men, and it therefore follows that either the good men are not getting the wages they should get or the city is not getting anything like value for the money paid to the other men. How much worse would the city be if those men were dropped and came on the city for charity? The Labour Council do not regard the old men in the callous spirit that Ald. Saunders' statement would make appear, they strongly object to a man past his prime being thrown on the scrap heap, they consider the City Council should be a model employer, and they would like to point out that under the present system the old men are receiving the same wages as the other men, and why cannot they continue under the 25c. minimum. It is not the Labour Council that objects to the old men, or wishes to throw them out, but some of the aldermen who have used the question of the old men as a red herring to draw across the path and prevent a discussion of whether 25c. an hour for labouring men in seasonal employment is too much to provide for a family in decency and comfort. The Labour Council have not only asked for a minimum wage of 25c. per hour for city employees, but they have also asked that a clause be inserted in all city contracts calling for a 25c. minimum, a 9 hour day, and local labour only (where practicable.) Alderman Evans' complaint that the paving contractors work their men 10 hours a day is the fault of the City Council, who have a rule calling for a 9 hour day, and never attempt to enforce it. Mayor Baller made a prophetic utterance, "Everybody will be elected by acclamation next year." We shall see. Thanking you on behalf of the Labour Council for your valuable space, I am,

Yours truly,
R. MITCHELL.

AUSTRIANS REFUSED TO CREDIT REPORTED USE OF POISONOUS GAS

BUDAPEST, VIA LONDON, May 28.—News of the use of asphyxiating gases by the Germans in the western theatre of war has reached here from Italy, in extracts from French and British newspapers. The Budapest journals reproduced these items in full, giving a technical description of the gases, although at the same time commenting upon the report as "an absurd and ridiculous slander." One of the morning newspapers characterized the news as one of the usual French and Italian libels on Germany, "to whose fairness in the war," it was added, "no suspicion can attach. They have tried to discredit German heroism by many such tricks already, but never with a slander of so grave and libellous a nature as this newly invented form of accusation."

It will thus be seen that the report obtained no credence, not because of any high conception of German fairness but because the resort to such unworthy devices appeared to argue military weakness on Germany's part. When the use of these gases was confirmed from Germany itself there was nothing else for the newspapers but to keep silence on the subject. The "slanders" were, after all, not slanders, but the popular disappointment and disillusion are so deep and thorough that it ill take some time to recover from their effects.

In the parliamentary lobby surprise was expressed that Germany, which claims a military super-efficiency, should resort to weapons with which neither Austrians nor Russians have soiled their hands. To Hungarians it is inconceivable why Germany, with all her powers and resources, in a war against a foe which she persistently has proclaimed to be weaker to unscrupulous tactics. It is argued that Austria-Hungary, in fighting Russia, is contending against a powerful and determined enemy, but, while excesses may have to be admitted on either side, there have been no flagrant violations of international conventions or the unwritten laws of humanity.

When the history of this war comes to be written by an unbiassed pen, though atrocities and breaking of conventions will have to be recorded, it will be recognised that the war of Austria-Hungary and Russia was in the main waged on humane and self-respecting lines.

Of the many chivalrous incidents supplied by the Austro-Russian campaign it is only necessary to take the case of three Serbian soldiers who found a wounded Austrian officer lying in a wood one night. As the Austrian line was the nearer, in order to save his life they brought him in there, and then asked for permission to return to their own lines. In return for their courtesy and humanity they were escorted half way back. Compared with instances like these, German "kultur" and "humanity" take a very secondary place.

OBITUARY

MR. BENJAMIN COONEY.

The funeral of the late Mr. Benjamin Cooney, who passed away Saturday evening in the Peterborough Protestant Home, was held this afternoon, from the residence of Mr. James Long, Reid Street. Interment took place in Little Lake cemetery.

The late Mr. Cooney was a member of Peterborough Lodge, III., I. O. O. F. The pallbearers were Messrs. J. Long, Bert Watts, M. Brackenbridge, Samuel Jordan, John Brownlee, and Dr. Morrow.

The deceased was a very well-known resident. He was an enthusiastic gardener and florist, and for a number of years took care of some of the local parks.

KINDNESS OF BRITISH NOT APPRECIATED

In presence of the achievements of the Army of Asphyxiation in their desperate dash on Calais, and the refined cruelty of throwing into felons' cells British officers bearing illustrious names, how long does England intend fighting with kid gloves a foe which uses knuckle-dusters says a writer in the Montreal Standard.

I take the liberty of asking because it grows more painfully apparent to those who know the Prussian that people in this country do not realize that he respects absolutely nothing but brute and brutal force. Germany does not make war under rules in vogue on the playing fields of Eton or in the prize ring. The war has shown that the first law of German war is lawlessness. The doctrine proclaimed by Bismarck—that an enemy must be left nothing but eyes to weep with—is the doctrine which inspires German armies to suffocate, burn, pillage and violate.

"STOP MILK AND WATER"

For a decade I lived with the Prussian forces. I have felt it on my head more than once—years before last August. Knowing that of which it was capable in peace, I often shuddered when I thought of what it would do under the red licence of war. This is no indictment of the German people as a nation. I am morally certain that millions of them would be just ashamed of the excesses of Prussianism in war (if they knew them) as they detested and feared them in peace.

In my judgment the hour has come to cease waging war with Germany in accord with the milk and watery laws of sporting etiquette. They are as grotesquely out of place as they would be if a member of the new British army were told off to kill a Spanish bull and went at him with a tennis racket. If Englishmen were fighting only sportmen around Ypres, the traditions of Lord's Hurlingham, and the Crystal Palace ought never to be deviated from.

But my first teacher in Berlin once told me—it was a woman, and a German woman knows—that there was no "gentleman" in her language. Herr may mean the lord, mister, master, man or sir. Mann means a male person. There is nothing equivalent to "gentleman." My teacher was only half-joking when she explained "You see, there are no gentlemen in Germany!"

It is not my province to offer suggestions how to meet "frightfulness." I do not even recommend reprisals in kind. But much will be gained, it seems to me, if Englishmen forthwith abandon the notion that they can beat the Germans by continuing to "play the game." Germans neither "play the game" nor have respect for those who do. When England praises the "sportsmanship" of Muller-Emden and Weddigen, the Germans snort with scorn. When an English headmaster advocates sportsmanlike treatment of the vanquished-to-be, they send up the gleeful cry that "England is hankering for peace." I do not favour sheer retaliatory torture for the Germans but I earnestly and vociferously urge the wisdom of a policy based on their character and ideal, to which they could not object—instead of on Anglo-Saxon conceptions of humanity which they neither understand nor esteem.

DOG RUN OVER.

A fox-terrior, the property of Leo Longo, was run over at the corner of George and Simcoe streets this morning by an automobile, and so badly injured that it had to be chloroformed at the police station. Its owner in picking up the dog after the accident, was badly bitten.

Italians Show Great Anxiety to Enlist

ROME, May 27.—With Italy formally at war with Austria, the Government to-day issued a drastic decree forbidding all civil and religious public meetings. The decree suppresses the Government parcels post, and institute a rigid censorship over the mails and the telegraph. It fixes severe penalties for all violations.

Gen. Codarna, who left Sunday night for the front, will assume direct charge of the operations of the entire army, it was officially announced. General Carlos Canova probably will be designated as second in command.

Volunteer recruiting offices were opened early to-day, and within a few hours ten thousand names were on the rolls. Crowds of Italian youths fought their way to the recruiting stations and offered their services. The Government already has officers to drill the volunteers.

Students not yet called to the colours, but anxious to enlist, besieged the military authorities. Announcement has already been made that volunteers 18 years old or older, who are physically fit, will be accepted by the Government for the duration of the war.

Members of yacht clubs and boat clubs in all parts of the kingdom, almost to a man, offered the Government their services and the use of their craft. Persons in all walks of life pledged their services to the Red Cross, and gifts of all kinds were received by that organization.

Expressions of regret are being heard on every side that the nation is unable at present to assist persons of Italian blood or sympathies who are being arrested wholesale by the Austrian authorities in Trent, Trieste and Dalmatia. Intense indignation has been caused by reports that thousands of Italians have been detained at stations along the Austrian and German frontiers, where they have been subjected to ill-treatment.

Details concerning Italy's declaration of war against Austria-Hungary were given by Foreign Minister Sonnino Sunday afternoon at a Cabinet Council which lasted three hours. He told also of communications sent to the allies and to neutral nations. Diplomatic relations between the Vatican and the belligerent also were discussed.

Financial measures were taken up and, it is believed a loan will be floated either at home or abroad sufficient to meet the needs of the nation, even though the war lasts longer than is expected.

Strange Tales of Forgotten Prisoners

There are many places where a man may be lost, whether he loses himself or is purposely placed in a maze from which he cannot find his way out. But the case of Rocco Ruggiero, who was recently dug out of the Queen's County Jail by accident and placed on trial for murder in the first degree, is very much out of the ordinary. Six months previously Ruggiero was indicted for murder and placed in the jail. The papers in his case disappeared. The district attorney wanted to check up his cases and asked the jail warden for a list of his prisoners. Ruggiero's name was on the list. Nobody seemed to know anything about the case. Search of the records disclosed the indictment. Strange as this case is, a Chicago incident of like character two or three years ago was even more remarkable. A prisoner named Philip Dubois was arrested and placed in jail on a charge of felonious assault. Political friends were able to secure a series of postponements of the case and have the papers altered so that the charge was changed to simple assault. To help the deception discovered. Dubois was clared to be dying, and was sent to the hospital pending the disposition of his case.

One day at the hospital the screen that had separated his cot from that of the next patient was unexpectedly taken away, and happening to look across, Dubois saw that the very man he had assaulted was his hospital neighbour. On recovering from the wounds inflicted by Dubois the man had contracted pneumonia and had been transferred to the pulmonary ward. He was on the verge of asking to have his bed changed when Dubois begged him not to do so, promising to pay him well if he would keep his secret. This he agreed to do for a certain sum.

It was when part of this sum was being passed to him by Dubois' friends that an attendant's suspicions were aroused. Investigation was made and the deception discovered. Dubois was convicted and sentenced. When the time came to arraign him new papers had to be made out, for he was officially lost on the books as a man charged with felony.

Which recalls the case of William Haverhill, a forger of Philadelphia, who was being brought from San Francisco to the Quaker City some years ago by a special deputy sheriff named McCarty. McCarty had an attack of brain fever just before being sent across the continent with the requisition for Haverhill.

They were nearing Denver at noon on their return journey, and were seated in the Pullman, McCarty having handcuffed his left wrist to Haverhill's right. Suddenly McCarty managed to jerk McCarty forward a trifle breast. Haverhill surmised the reason at once. He lost no time. He managed to jerk McCarty forward a trifle in his seat, so that his body reclined more toward the back of the chair, and then tilted the officer's head back so he seemed asleep. He waited his chance and when most of the passengers got out to stretch their legs he took the handcuff key from McCarty's pocket and unlocked himself.

He was searching for McCarty's money when the "All aboard" sounded, so he had barely time to slip off the train. Without a cent in his pocket he could not ride a mile or purchase a meal. But he was a man of quick thinking. He walked right up to a policeman and spat on his shoes. He was rebuked; he "sassed" the officer; thereupon he was arrested, receiving a sentence of three months as a vagrant. He had served two months when an intercepted letter sent from the jail by him gave the necessary clew to the mystery that had been puzzling the San Francisco and Philadelphia police ever since the unconscious McCarty, stricken anew with fever, was carried from the train to a hospital.

RUSSIANS DRIVE BACK THE ENEMY WITH HEAVY LOSSES

GIANT ARMIES OF OLDEN TIMES

Ancient Thebes, it is said, could send 100,000 fighting men out of each of its hundred gates.

Ninus, the Assyrian King, in the twenty-second century B. C., led against the Bactrians 1,700,000 soldiers on foot and 200,000 mounted.

The old historians credit Xerxes with land and sea forces counting up to 2,641,000, with enough attaches, hangers-on, woven, suttler, etc., to make a host of more than 5,000,000.

Artaxerxes had at one time, before the battle of Cunaxa, an army nearly a million and a quarter strong.

Darius of Persia, brought more than a million soldiers to Arbela.

Tamerlane is said to have met Bajaret's 1,400,000 with a force of 1,600,000.

Terah, King of Ethiopa, had a million soldiers to call to his standards.

Compared with the extended battle-line of to-day in Europe, the ancient Cannae was but a skirmish formation. There were 86,000 Romans and allies against 50,000 Carthaginians.

Hannibal is recorded as having destroyed 300,000 men during his campaign in Italy. Just before his time that country could send a million men into battle.

Pte. Connelly Was One of The Lucky Ones

East City Boy Was Unhurt in the Langemarck Battle

Mrs. Dan Connelly, 367 Rogers Street, has received the following letter from her son, Pte. Dan Connelly with the 57th boys in the 2nd Battalion, now in England. Pte. Connel-Jas. Connelly, is with the 21st Battalion, now in Englannd. Pe. Connelly writes as follows:

My Dear Mother,— I have just received your most loving letter and was glad to hear from you. Major Bennett was killed and a lot of the batalion was wounded and killed. Thank God I am living in the very best of health. This is a very nice country and we are having a rest for the boys need it. I suppose James is a fine soldier by now. When he gets out here I will likely see him. When a shell hits the ground it makes a hole large enough for two teams of horses and waggons to get in and you would not see it. It makes a fellow think when he sees the shells bursting over his head and under his feet. I could tell you a lot of news but we are not allowed to do so. Bye, bye, from your loving son,

DAN.

Italian Troops Reach Lavaronne Plateau Encounter Here Fierce

Italian Airmen Shell Pola---Bombs Dropped on Austrian Naval Base in the Adriatic---Now Within Ten Miles of Trent.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, June 1.—Italian troops have pressed forward to the Lavarone plateau which dominates the city of Trent, only ten miles away, according to an admission of the Austrian War Office yesterday. The account says that the encounter on this elevated stretch of land, where there are Austrian fortifications, was afierce one, which resulted in a reverse to the Italians. The fact that the Italians are so near Trent, however, is regarded here as highly significant, and as an indication that the bombardment of Trent itself may be expected very shortly.

Farther to the north Italian troops have penetrated to the town of Paneveggio, according to Vienna reports, where they appeared in considerable strength. Paneveggio is but a few miles east of the railroad which runs from Innsbruck through Bozen to Trent. This railroad is the main source of Austrian supplies for Trent, and its capture at a point in the neighbourhood of Paneveggia would consequently mean the isolation of Trent. It is therefore apparent that the Italian general staff, by an enveloping movement, is attempting to deprive Trent of its source of supplies in the north while preparing to attack it in strength from the south.

Italy has retaliated for the Austrian air and naval raids along her east coast by bombarding Pola, the Austrian naval base, from a dirigible, while Italian destroyers have made a dash on Monfalcone, doing considerable damage to Austrian shipping and getting away unscathed.

SET ARSENAL ON FIRE.

The official statement issued by the Italian Ministry of Marine announcing the raid on the Austrian naval base of Pola says:

"One of our dirigibles flew over Pola Sunday evening, dropping bombs on the railroad station, a naphtha depot and the arsenal. All the bombs burst with full effect. A big fire started in the arsenal.

"The dirigible was subjected to a violent fire from the land batteries, but was not hit and returned intact.

"Yesterday morning our destroyer flotilla bombarded a shipyard at Monfalcone, causing considerable damage, as the commander of the destroyers was able to observe. Several large boats laden with flour were surprised and destroyed by the same flotilla, which returned, having accomplished its mission, without being hit by the fire of the guns on the Austrian coast. The crews suffered no loss."

KING TO EMPEROR.

King Victor Emmanuel has sent the following message to the Russian Emperor:

"At the moment when the soldiers of Italy are advancing boldly against the common enemy, binding closer the brotherhood of arms between us and the brave Russian army, I send to your Majesty with joyful heart my cordial greetings and fervent hopes."

The Emperor replied: "I am deeply touched by the considerate thought of your Majesty. I desire to express to you the great pleasure I feel at seeing our two armies united by the bonds of brotherhood, and I beg your Majesty to accept my most fervent wishes for victory."

The Bulgarian envoy to Rome, who was an intimate friend of Prince von Buelow, the German Ambassador, and who is said to have systematically misinformed his country regarding the progress of the Austria-Italian negotiations, has been recalled in disgrace, and will shortly be replaced by the present Bulgarian envoy to Paris.

Many Are Wounded As Result of Zeppelin Attacks on London

Only Names of Victims So Far Reported by Press Bureau Are Two Young German Tailoresses, Named Schrader ---Strict Censorship Being Enforced.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 1.—The Zeppelins have reached London. How many there are, over what section of the city they have flown, what damage has been done may not be told at this time. The statement of the official Press Bureau may only be transmitted.

Following many rumours after midnight the Official Press Bureau early this morning issued the following bare announcement:

"Zeppelins have passed over the outlying districts of London."

Immediately thereafter came this notification, which is self-explanatory:

"The Press Bureau reminds newspapers that no statement must be published dealing with the places and the neighbourhood of London reached by aircraft or of the course supposed to have been taken by them."

The statement adds:

"The Admiralty communique gives all the news that properly can be published."

The Press Bureau a little later permitted the information to be sent that the Zeppelins were first seen over Ramsgate, on the North Foreland, and later were reported over Brentwood.

The statement read:

"Zeppelins are reported to have been seen near Ramsgate (on the Kentish coast, 67 miles east-south-east of London), and Brentwood (17 miles east-north-east of London), and in certain outlying districts of London. Many fires are reported, but they cannot be absolutely connected with the airship visits.

"Further particulars will be issued as soon as they can be collected and collated."

PROBABLY STARTED FROM BRUSSELS.

The strict censorship is designed to keep the enemy uninformed of the effect of his long expected raid over the British metropolis. The raiders, it is expected, have come from the neighbourhood of Brussels, where the new Zeppelin sheds have been erected and where, it was reported within the past week that six new dirigibles of very large type had been assembled. They have flown over Bruges and crossed the Channel at a narrow point, striking the North Foreland, within about 60 or 65 miles of London. Their course, if straight from there, would have been over Ramsgate, Maidstone, Chatham and Sheerness and the first outlying district of the capital they would have struck would have been Greenwich, with its sailor's home, munition factories and observatory.

Instead they have been reported from Brentwood, which is seven miles northeast of London, which means they crossed the Thames or an estuary and, swinging in a half circle, have approached the city from the northeast. This would bring them first to Romford as the first section of the city, after which would come Ilford and then the Whitechapel district of London.

The morning newspapers in their early editions confine themselves to brief official statements regarding the Zeppelin activity in the outlying districts of London, although they naturally give these statements most prominent space in their newspapers.

LONDON, June 1.—The only victims whose names the Press Bureau permitted to be made public were two young German tailoresses, named Schrader, living in Westend.

They were removed to a hospital. Many others are wounded.

Great German Drive Toward Peremysl Has Spent Itself

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 1.—The great battle on the San, to which the Russians fell back after retreating over half of Galicia, still rages, but the Russians assert that they have assumed the offensive. This statement is taken in London to mean that another mighty German effort has expended itself. Though the fate of Peremysl is still uncertain, it is contended that the Austro-Germans have failed of their purpose to crush the Russians in Galicia, and that their rush forward, costing as it did thousands of lives, has fallen short, just as did the repeated thrusts at Warsaw and Calais.

The official statement issued last night by the Austrian War Office makes no claim of any noteworthy advances in the east, dismissing the Peremysl region with the brief declaration that "the fighting continues," and asserting that there have been no serious engagements elsewhere on the eastern front.

The Russians, on the other hand, claim victories at many points on the front, and state that the battle in the Peremysl district is developing favourably. On the whole San front they successfully assumed the offensive on Sunday night, while the German offensive easterly from Jarosiau has been stopped by the Russian fire. All hostile attacks have been repulsed in the trans-Dniester region, towards Bukowina, where a resolute offensive was assumed by the Russians on Saturday night, resulting in the capture of over 7,000 prisoners and 30 quick-firing guns. The enemy, the report states, has begun a disorderly retreat on this front.

It is also announced in the Petrograd statement that nearly 19,000 prisoners were taken by the Russians between May 12 and May 24 in the fighting between the Pilica and the upper Vistula, in Southern Poland.

The Austrian official report issued in Vienna yesterday says:

"On the San and to the east no serious fighting occurred Sunday. Fighting continues on the northern and southwestern parts of the Peremysl district, and on the upper Dniester. In the region of Stry the Austro-German troops, in the course of heavy fighting, captured several positions and a Russian battery. The situation in the northeast is unchanged."

GAS FILLED BOMBS OF ENEMY NO LONGER EFFECTIVE

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

PARIS, June 1.—Scientists, aiding the war bureau, have discovered, it is believed, a means whereby the poisonous gas-filled bombs of the Germans can be rendered ineffective. Representatives of the British War Office are here now purchasing hundreds of ordinary garden syringes, such as are used for watering flowers. With these it is planned to squirt hypo-sulphide of sodium into the air as the poisonous gases reach the lines. The soldiers are to be equipped with masks covering the head, soaked in some chemical and which is coated with glycerine to prevent evaporation.

London automobile busses, it is discovered has shown an unexpected utility in the treatment of gas victims. If they can be picked up immediately and rushed to the hospital at a high speed it has been found that the journey through the air is of great benefit.

Conference With German Ambassador

Von Berstorff Will Discuss With President Wilson Germany's Latest Note to the United States

IMPORTANT MEETING

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 1. — Facing sweeping changes in the nation's Mexican policy and Germany's unsatisfactory rejoinder to President Wilson's submarine warfare protest note, to-day's Cabinet meeting was expected to be one of the most important in two decades.

It was certain before the members gathered for consultation, the first step towards forcing the creation of a stable Mexican government would be taken.

While President Wilson was understood to have prepared in rough outline the note to Germany it will be witheld, and its contents closely guarded until after to-morrows conference between the President and Count Bernstorff, the German ambassador.

The conference was asked for by the ambassador. At the Embassy it was stated he hoped to be able to discuss with the President, Germany's latest note to the United States and find out, if possible, "what further action" the President planned.

One of the humours most frequently heard was that Germany had sent word to her ambassador to explain that she was willing to make material concessions to the United States, but that it had been necessary to make the first note evasive and unsatisfactory to prevent antagonizing the military element.

It is admitted by those in a position to know that yesterday's note is in every respect at variance with recommendations made by Ambassadors Von Bernstorff and Dumba to their home governments. They suggested that every possible concession be made to United States. According to information reaching here, however, the military element dictated the reply. If that reply is to stand, a break between the two nations is certain.

Whether the ambassadors have since been addressed that their suggestions may be acted on later, is not known.

Some officials are placing such an interpretation on to-morrow's conference between Count Bernsterff and the President.

GERMANS GIVING GROUND BEFORE BRITISH AT YPRES

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, Tuesday, June 1.—The British troops are advancing on St. Julien, according to a message from the correspondent of the Daily Mail, in northern France.

The German line is said to be greatly weakened and is giving ground north-east of Ypres before vigorous attacks, which have been preceded by an effective bombardment of their trenches. They have made desperate efforts to hold their positions and are said to have been ordered by the German headquarters staff to hold their ground at any cost.

The ground which the Germans won a month ago is gradually being pierced, according to the correspondent, at various points. The resistance has been of a desperate character, every cottage, clump of trees and every wall being held on to until the last with grim determination. Their line is no longer the regular one that it was following the advance in this region, but now is an irregular series of hastily improvised forts, practically all the way between Ypres and Dixmude.

CLYDESDALE NEWS

Special to The Examiner.

The weather has been quite cold, and in the mornings the farmers have noticed ice in their rain barrels.

Mrs. P. Hobbins of Peterborough is at present visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Gooley.

Reeve Bullied is very busy buying cattle and he reports good prospects for the farmer for the ensuing year, by the appearance of the crops in localities through which he has passed.

Pte. W. Campbell of B Company, Belleville, was home for a few days, visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Campbell. He reports very good treatment in Belleville. Pte. Campbell is a young man and he certainly has shown an example to the young man of Clydesdale. He is the first volunteer from this place to enlist, and his parents should feel proud to think that they have a son who would if necessary give up his life for his country.

Mr. John Dafoe, cheesemaker, has started making cheese, and reports a very good turn out for the present. Cheese being such a high price the farmers believe there is more money in sending their milk to the factory than feeding it to calves or making butter at home.

Automobile Turned Turtle

BRIDGENORTH, June 1.— David Guiry was seriously injured as a result of an automobile accident that occurred near Bridgenorth last evening shortly after six o'clock. The car, which was in charge of Mr. John Young of Ennismore, was proceeding north when something went wrong with the steering apparatus, causing it to turn turtle. Mr. Guiry was thrown out and in the mix-up suffered a broken leg, a broken nose and several other minor injuries. Comstock's ambulance was summoned and he was removed to St. Joseph's Hospital, after receiving first aid treatment from Doctors Mann and Cameron of Peterborough. Mr. Guiry, who is over seventy years of age, is in a serious condition.

The discovery of a considerable deposit of uranium ore in South Australia is believed to indicate a new source of radium.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

"When I said you ort to be ashamed of yourself, I didn't mean on account of the hosses," sez I; "but on account of the cows. If your eyes couldn't see anything, why you might be excused for havin' such a run of cow cattle; but when you can get together such a band o' hosses as this, why it shows you have been plumb lazy when it came to learnin' the cow game."

"I'm not tryin' to compete with the cheap down-country bronchos on price," sez he, "and they won't try to compete with me on quality. I have been able to sell off my surplus right here so far, and next year I'll have a lot to market right. The best cavalry stuff in this country is right here on this ranch, and I know it."

When we got home he showed me his stallions. They were all good ones; but one was the apple of his eye. It was a black one about sixteen hands high, and he could talk about him for hours. Some nobility had brought back from Arabia a colt which had been one of his chief treasures of the High Bug of that country, and that colt was a far-back ancestor of this stallion that Jim had. I had been used to lookin' at a band of hosses a good deal like a box of matches; some of 'em might be worse than others but runnin' purty much the same on the average, and it took me some time to get resignated to the extra fuss Jim was takin' with his.

The black one was called Crusador, and had a stable all to himself, and his own private run-lot. Each of the other stallions had a big box stall to himself, but for the most part they ran in a band over a big enough fenced-in range to give 'em ample grazin'. Jim had done his fencin' by plowin' out a deep ditch and throwin' the dirt up as a wall on one edge of the ditch. This wall was sodded and it held its shape remarkable. He also used split logs for some of his fences. When it came to hosses, Jim had idees a plenty; but he had paid out too much to get his work done. He was some consid'able ahead of the times, but he hadn't took the trouble to study up on American cow-punchers.

Over in his country, from what I could gather, they looked on blood a good deal like they looked on grape-juice—it had to age and ferment some before it was worth much—while out our way, any blood was good blood if it put nerve and action in a feller. I used to set Jim back on his haunches about twice a day, but it took him a good long time to get over tryin' to rope me with a haughty stare. He had a way of throwin' back his head and jerkin' the corners of his mouth and his eyelids down at the same time that he pulled his eyebrows up, and this was to indicate that his nobl blood was lookin' down at my common blood—but it was done unconscious for the most part and even he learned after a time that it wasn't successful.

We didn't have near big enough an outfit to put that ranch on its feet, and I was stumped to know what to do with his rag-taggle cows. Next mornin' I sent the boys out under Phil McLaughlin to cut out the young stuff and drive it to the north part of the range and keep the poor stuff away from it, and I went over to see if Dan Cooper had got back. Dan was there and he was a big, solid man with a trustful face. He told about havin' seen a man up at Camp Supply who had an Injun contract still unfilled, and was gettin' purty nervous about it, the boom havin' made things scarce.

I went over to Supply and found him stewin' audible. He had been tryin' to buy a trail herd, but hadn't found any for sale at a figger which would let him out on his contract. I told him we were goin' in mostly for hosses and would close out our stock cows to him if he'd do the right thing, and he took the Fort Elliot stage and got off at Dan Cooper's and came over to see our stuff. He paid us two dollars a head more than Jim figured the cows to be worth, and he also bought eighty head of hosses on speculation.

His outfit was camped near Supply and he left to get it, feelin' purty fit. On the way I asked him what could be done with the old bulls, as even the government balked on feedin' the noble redmen on aged bulls. I hadn't expected much when I asked the question, but luck was my way, and the contractor gave me the name of a soap factory buyer in St. Louis who would buy any sort of an animal dead or alive, and I had Jim write him a letter right now.

The contractor came back in about ten days and we helped him do his road-brandin', and got him well started; but we had our own troubles with the aged bulls when they were left to herd by themselves where we wanted 'em to stay. It's common enough for bulls to flock by themselves later in the season, and especially if they can go off jauntin' into the mountains; but these fellers were sure pests, and the hardest brutes to handle ever I dealt with. Jim and Tom Smith looked after the hosses mostly, and it kept the rest of us busy keepin' track of the bulls.

Finally word came that the soap-factory buyer would give eleven dollars a head such as we had described if delivered at Dodge City, so we made ready to break a lot of home ties. Dan Cooper had been on the lookout for some more hands and had rustled up eight, which gave us fourteen regular ridin' men, Jim and Tom Smith stayin' behind to look after the place and Flames stayin' to chore for 'em.

It was the custom all through the South-west to leave every tenth male calf a bull, and the consequent struggle for special privilege resulted in the survival of the most ornery. We tried for the best part of a week to get these brutes into an orderly herd, but they'd break back on us every time and finally I rode over and told the hermit I was whipped out. He sat smokin' just as peaceful as though he' was ninety hours in a day and fifty days in a week, and then sez: "I can get 'em started for ya—if you don't mind winkin' at the law a little."

This was some mysterious to me, but I told him that I wouldn't mind knockin' the daylights out of the law if it would get those bulls to Dodge, and he said he'd be ready day after the next; but that we'd have to kill a few beeves. I caught a glimmer of his game and I wunk as solemn as a full-fed cat and told him the beeves would be ready. There were several stray brands in our herd, and I decided to barbecue them.

On the evenin' of the followin' day the hermit rode in and said he had induced a small camp of Comanches to come over and frolic with our bulls and after they were worn down some, he reckoned we could take 'em wherever it pleased us. There were about forty young bucks under a young chief and we turned five off-brand steers over to 'em. They drove 'em off to where their squaws were campin' in the Territory and then came back and we sure put the fear of man into those bulls. The Injuns used blunt-pointed spears and the bulls had more respect for them than they had for gettin' their noses burnt by a forty-five, so we all armed ourselves with prods and it wasn't no time at all until we had stampeded the bulls in the direction we had selected to travel. Twenty or thirty of 'em got away, but we just let 'em go.

The Injuns stuck with us for two days, but by that time the bulls were so beat out that if ya so much as pined your finger at one, he'd sit up and beg for mercy. The Injuns had steered us along a trail of their own runnin' still farther west than what was known at that time, as the Western Trail, so when they left us we sheered over to it and we kept our pet cattle a-movin' steady. It was about one hundred and seventy miles to Dodge and we made it and delivered the stuff in eight days, and sheep never got any tamer 'n those bulls were when we said good-bye to 'em.

I paid off the extra men Dan Cooper had got for us and they all chose to visit a while in Dodge except the two Jones brothers, Windy and Slim, who decided to go back with us as far as Supply. Just before we reached it we came across a young feller with three thousand cows, all she stuff, young and thrifty, and one large sized bunch of trouble. His dad had sent him up on his first drive from a ranch away down on the Frio River to sell these cows for stock cattle to the ranchmen of the North-west, and the boy had one bother after another. His entire outfit were Mexicans and they had been all right under their own foreman, but he had got killed in a row with another outfit when their herds mixed, and now the Greasers were sullen and ready to stampede at any moment.

When I found out that the young feller only expected to get as much per head as I had got for the stuff I sold to the Injun contractor, I put on a solemn face and told him that rather than see him risk it any farther, I'd take 'em off his hands; so we turned his herd around and headed it for the Lion Head, and everybody was happy except the Greasers who were made to walk a very narrow chalk line.

Jim was plenty able to see where he'd bettered himself in the exchange and he paid the cheque mighty joyful. All we needed now was about a hundred good bulls and I'd begin to feel like bein' in the cow business again. I told Dan Cooper to shout it around what our needin's were, and he said it wouldn't be any trick at all to pick up that many for a song. I told him that Red bein' the only singer we had I couldn't pay such a price, but would try and have Jim raise the cash.

The Lion Head was so much like home to me by this time that I took on th two Jones brothers to help get the new cows set to their range.

The Experience of One Who Knows and Places Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills First

It is not difficult to secure a medicine that will effect movement of the bowels To cure Constipation and the complications which arise from it is another matter.

Constipation of the bowels is usually preceded by torpid action of the liver. Hence it follows that if Constipation is to be cured the liver must be set right. And here lies the secret of the success of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. They awaken the action of the liver and insure a good flow of bile, which is nature's cathartic. ITALY BREAKS WITH AUSTRIA

Italia! too, Italia! looking on thee,
Full flashes on the soul the light of ages,
Since the fierce Carthaginian almost won thee,
To the last halo of the chiefs and sages
Who glorify thy consecrated pages;
Thou wert the throne and grave of empires; still,
The fount at which the panting mind assuages
Her thirst of knowledge, quaffing there her fill,
Flows from the eternal source of Rome's imperial hill
—BYRON'S CHILDE HAROLD.

By Richard G. Conover.

AFTER ten months of tugging at the taut leash of diplomacy Italy has slipped her collar to spring at the throat of Austria. Four centuries of constantly baffled hate are in the spring.

There is a cornucopia of reasons for this hate. Call the roll of causes-in-ordinary and you'll soon possess a lengthy list. Check up the causes-fundamental and you'll find the Italian hates the Austrian for the same reason the Frenchman hates the German. It's the Goth against the Roman—the Teuton against the Latin.

But it is one thing to tell why a nation hates and another thing to tell why it wants war or goes to war. History is full of instances of bitter hatreds held in check by very nice political balances, so that war never came for decades. And when it did come the superficial reason for the conflict was not at all the animus at the heart of things.

The devil in charge of the Subterranean War Department must have emitted a sardonic cackle in 1882 when the famous Triple Alliance between Germany, Austria and Italy was signed. Germany had soundly and expeditiously whipped Austria only sixteen years previously. Austria had thrashed, ravaged, divided and subdivided Italy for centuries. All through the historic "boot" peninsula the men who had fought with Garibaldi and their sons itched to throttle an Austrian. Yet the Triple Alliance was signed.

Such an incongruous and unnatural combination could hardly be expected to survive. Revenge was seething in the Italian breast even while his statesmen signed their names to the most important document of the time. Across the Gulf of Venice the gaze of the Italian steadily turned. Back to the fifteenth century went his thoughts, when the entire eastern coast fringe of the Adriatic Sea belonged to the Venetian. Bit by bit they had been torn from their home flag, and the colonial ties of hundreds of years were severed by the Austrian's sabre or his diplomatic double dealing.

Land love revenges are the longest lasting. Strike a State a blow and the humiliation of the buffet will lessen and fade with the years. It was the fortune of war, and defeat did not mean disgrace. But seize a slice of the same State's soil as a supplement to the buffet and you've acquired a regular St. Vitus' dance of secret rebellion. Every time the sliced State beholds the foreign flag go upon territory once her own the wound is torn open again.

So it has been with Italy and Austria. It is the real reason why the descendants of the Romans have been straining to get at their ancient enemy. All the Green Books in the world will not give the true explanation. Diplomats desire to have the world think the superficial reason the animating cause of martial action. Language of state does not permit of saying that popular demand is, "Get out of my way and let me at him!" But Rome has rung with cries of this sort for many months, let the Green Book say what it will.

In tabloid the lingual veneer setting forth why there has been demand for war is this:—When Austrian troops invaded Serbia Italy announced that such a movement entitled her to compensation, in accordance with Article 7 of the Triple Alliance Treaty. After waiting from December, 1914, to March, 1915, Austria consented to discuss the question of compensation. On April 2 Austria announced that she would give to Italy the districts of Roveredo, Riva and Trentino, besides a few villages, if Italy would guarantee to maintain:—First, benevolent, political and economic neutrality during the war; second, give Austria a free hand in the Balkans; third, agree to the maintenance of the existing accord regarding Albania, and fourth, renounce all further compensation.

Italy declared this a contemptible offer and prepared an ultimatum. News came from Vienna that Austria did not believe that Italy "meant business" and would not declare war. This maddened the pro-war party more than ever. They pointed out that Austria's invasion of the Balkans meant a new cutting up of the States there if Germany and Austria won. This meant trouble for Italy. And across the Adriatic, stretching all the way down to Montenegro, was the strip of coast that was once hers and which she meant to get again from Austria. It was coming no nearer her flag through Austria's invasion of Serbia. Better get hold of it while the general trouble was on and be occupying it when peace came. So Italy prepared her demands on Austria, reading thus:—

1.—Cession of the entire province of Trent, in the Austrian Tyrol. It belonged to Italy in 1811.

2.—The cession of Eastern Friuli as far south as Nabresina, embracing Paiborgeth, Piezzo, Tolmino, Gradisca, Goritz, Monfalcone, Comen and intervening territory.

3.—The creation of a State independent of Austria, consisting of Trieste, Capo Distria and Pirano.

5.—Absolute abandonment of Austrian interests in Albania and the acknowledgment of Italian sovereignty over Avlona.

These five demands are likely to go down into history as the reasons why Italy mobilized for war in 1915. They will suffice. They mean an addition of territory that Italy for generations has considered hers by right. They are a good diplomatic reason for war. But the "way-down-beneath" reasons in detail—what are they?

Well, if Germany and Austria and Turkey win this war, goodby Balkan States. Austria will push forward as far as she can get in the dicker over the division of dominion. She will stretch as far toward the Aegean and Ionian Seas as she can go until she encounters Turkey stretching in opposition to her. Between the two the Balkans may be nothing but a land of deposed kinglets. Montenegro and Albania will be likely to land under the Austrian flag, and everything along the coast fringe of the Adriatic Sea will fly the banner of Franz Josef. The old time provinces of Italy will be further away than ever, for the ending of the war with a German-Austrian triumph will cement the Teutonic power for decades.

This is the diplomatic "dope" of the Italians who have been urging war for months. They say there will be no stop to the two Kaisers if the Allies are defeated. In fact, Italy has been warned by her political analysts to beware that she is not torn in twain by such victors because of her refusal to stand by the Triple Alliance. Not only will the Adriatic seacoast fade further and further away from her, but her antebellum frontier might be in danger.

And the crafty ones of the Italian war party have also pointed out that should the Allies win the division of the spoils might not include Italy as generously as she would like. Not to have lived up to the Triple Alliance has benefited the Allies, but to be negatively helpful only does not make for bountiful bestowals of territory when the plums are picked. So these shrewd advisers have urged that the land wanted by Italy be occupied now and when peace is signed possession will be held nine points of the law in the situation.

Pretty fair reasons for fighting, as present day reasons go. Merely political prudence, many would say. It satisfies the diplomats. It's a good-enough surface explanation. But away back of it all, the call of the past to "get hunk!" Here is what the Italian remembers:—

About the beginning of the sixteenth century Italy became the prize Christmas pie of three Jack Horners—Spain, France and Germany. Three royal thumbs were stuck into the peninsula crust and the province plums were distributed among the land greedy trio. The beautiful land was politically dismembered. The earth where Caesar had trod a world conqueror was made the object of cheap bargaining and allotment. Italian patriotism might be considered as dead, or so hopelessly divided that it was bewildered as to where its allegiance should be placed. The conquerors and dividers took care that the peninsula was so cut up that union was all but impossible. It must be remembered that the Germany that seized her slice of Italy was Austria of that time. The Prussia that afterward became the supreme German speaking state was a mere cipher in the Austrian political scheme. The legacy of Italian hate that dates from this period ascribes to Austria in principal the deed of political dismemberment.

In 1713, at the Peace of Utrecht, Austria helped herself to Naples, Sardinia, Milan and Mantua. Venice, perhaps the greatest of the Italian states, later had Scutari wrested from her. Toward Scutari the eyes of the patriot of Italy turns even now. Cyprus, Corfu and Crete were torn from Italian rule. By the terms of the treaty of Campo Formio, Austria got Istria, and Dalmatia was formally annexed to the Austrian dominions at the same time—and still is part of the country that Italy hates. Then, later, came the absorption of Trieste, and finally Venice passed under Austrian rule and remained so until 1866.

All these were bitter years for Italy. And of all who took part in the divisions Austria was the most strenuous in its rule of its conquered territory. The Italian remembers him most keenly through the complainings of his forefathers. He never assimilated his conqueror's language or customs. The heel was on his neck all the while. There never was a hope of amalgamation.

In the revolt of 1848 the Austrian ordered no prisoners taken. The Italian has never forgotten it. Women were flogged in the streets of Milan because they would not pay attention to the conqueror. Tally another bitter remembrance in this.

Little by little, as the result of lending aid to the bigger nations in their troubles, Italy began to unify. At the time of the Prussian-Austrian War, in 1866, Italians clamored for the chance to help the country that is now Austria's ally. As a result of this help Austria was forced to cede Venetia to the nucleus of modern Italy. She did it grudgingly, turning the territory over to Napoleon III. of France, who in turn ceded it to Italy. In 1859 Italy—represented then principally by Victor Emmanuel and the kingdom of Sardinia—fought side by side with France against Austria. If what they did at the battle of Solferino be any earnest of what they might be expected to do against Austria in present day battle, then there is little doubt that Franz Josef's soldiers will find their hands full whenever they come in contact with the descendants of the Piedmontese.

In an article recently published by the author, entitled "Garibaldi—Fighting Qualities of the Italian," it was pointed out that it was at Solferino that an Italian bayonet charge turned the tide and won the brilliant victory at the San Martino portion of the field, after many repulses. All through this war the Italian attacked the Austrian with the greatest fury and sometimes in the face of the greatest odds.

The negotiations for the agreement upon the details connected with the Triple Alliance indicated very clearly that while a treaty might be concluded it was plain there would be no particular love covenanted between the Italians and the Austrians participating in it. In fact, for quite a time it looked as if the negotiations would fall through. Bismarck, however, had set his heart upon it, and through his superior diplomacy the signing was brought about.

Austria's desire was to so associate herself with Italy in some kind of an international agreement that the latter country would feel bound not to attempt to regain the Italian provinces still in Austria's hands. She also figured that with Italy tied to her by solemn compact in the event of war with Russia she would not have to keep so watchful an eye on her Alps border, thus enabling her to turn all her attention to her Muscovite enemy.

Prime Minister Mancini, who represented Italy in the Triple Alliance negotiations, had his hands full with Bismarck, one of his rival negotiators. Austria refused at first to acknowledge the integrity of the Italian kingdom because of not wishing to hurt the feelings of the Vatican. Mancini, not to be impeded that way, at once refused to acknowledge the integrity of the Austrian territory, which then included several Italian provinces subject to that empire. Mancini also demanded that in exchange for the assistance Italy might give Austria in accord with her expansion plans in the Balkans both Austria and Germany should guarantee to help protect her interests in the Mediterranean. This Austria refused, and it looked for a time as if the once famous Triple Alliance would never be an accomplished piece of diplomacy.

Finally Bismarck found the solution. He induced Austria to suggest that Mancini draft a note setting forth all of the demands essential to Italy's acquiescence in the alliance programme. Mancini did so, and the list of demands was long. Austria sent the draft to Bismarck. His solution was to have Austria agree to the acknowledgment of the territorial integrity of Italy, provided Italy agreed to the same acknowledgment of Austria's territorial integrity, Italian provinces included, but without the provision that Germany and Italy should assist Italy in case of Mediterranean trouble. There was also a final clause that the contracting parties should confer upon questions of common interest.

Thus pieced together the famous Triple Alliance treaty was signed May 30, 1882. Italy did not publicly acknowledge it, however, until March, 1883. It was only revealed then by indirect allusion by Mancini in the Italian Chamber. The complete text has never been made public. At various times, however, in the Parliaments of all the three signatory countries reference has been made by Cabinet members clearly indicating that in the main the agreement is for defence of reciprocal territory in the case of attack. It has also been said, from time to time, in connection with debates covering crises, that the Triple Alliance contained a stipulation that Italy would never aid in war on Great Britain, because of common ties and interests in the Mediterranean and otherwise.

Several times those supposed to know have said that the famous treaty contained a military convention fixing the amount of military forces each country was to place at the disposal of the other, in case of attacks that might be made on them by France or Russia. But the existence of such convention has never been proved.

The attempt on the life of Franz Josef by a young Triestine, Guglielmo Oberdank, shortly after the Triple Alliance was signed, showed that the agreement on the document had not cemented the friendly feeling between Italy and Austria. Oberdank was a deserter from the Austrian army and a student in an Italian university. He was executed, and there was a great wave of anti-Austrian feeling throughout all Italy. A bust of Oberdank was set up in the Democratic University Club at Rome, and its seizure by the police provoked a riot. Men went to the Austrian Embassy and discharged revolvers at the Austrian escutcheon.

The Triple Alliance was for five years. Between times Germany and Austria signed a treaty with Russia—one of "benevolent neutrality"—without saying anything to Italy about it. This did not add to the good feeling necessary for the proper carrying out of the ideals and intents of the document, and Italy bided her time to snub any proposition to renew it after the term of its expiration. In 1886 the diplomatic smellers began sniffing around to get her to offer to renew, but the Italian Foreign Minister, Count Robilant, was not made of milk and water stuff. He insisted that as a first necessity Bismarck himself should make overtures for renewal. And Bismarck had to do it.

Pending the renewal of the treaty, Robilant resigned because he did not get sufficient support to warrant his continuing the negotiations. The nation was with him, and he resumed his duties in the Foreign Office and carried the negotiations through with an amended stipulation that Italy's Mediterranean interests should be guaranteed, with the aid of Great Britain. At least so those who say they know about it have made known from time to time. It is a fact, though, that just as in the case of the first treaty, so in the case of the second there is no one except a government official who has had access to the document who can say positively what it contains.

The second treaty was signed March 17, 1887. Prominent politicians have said that Italy promised Great Britain, in return for Mediterranean aid, that she would co-operate with her in the different Balkan difficulties that might have to be surmounted. The adherence of Great Britain to Italy's Mediterranean policy and purposes was deemed at the time a decided diplomatic victory. Another and third Triple Alliance was signed, this time for twelve years, in June, 1891. In 1902 the Triple Alliance was again renewed, this time to extend to 1914.

Feeling against Austria sufficient to cause a great part of Italy to wish for war was aroused a few years ago by the attempt to destroy the Italian character of the population of Trieste and Istria and Dalmatia that for centuries, since the old Venetian occupation, had remained active. The Italian subjects of Austria in these places insisted that they had a right to an Italian university, instead of having to attend a German university or repair to Italy. Austria refused to consent to the establishment of an Italian university. This led to a storm of protest and incipient uprisings. Austria tried to compromise by creating an Italian faculty of law at the University of Innsbruck. But this did not effect a cure and there was constant trouble.

In Vienna attacks were made against Italian students and in Italy anti-Austrian demonstrations were the retaliatory order of the day for a time. Along the Adriatic there was continued manifestation of the anti-Austrian feeling. It was plain that nothing short of absolute independence of Austria would bring anything like content to her Italian subjects.

So, cut loose from her thirty-two years' alliance with her ancient enemy, Italy stands facing the House of Hapsburg and the House of Hohenzollern, both of which have taken a hand in carving her up in the past. On paper it looks as if the desire to fight was just a passing condition, having for its animus a desire to take advantage of an opportune time for territorial aggrandizement. But along lines that paper ultimatums do not reach the old Austrian grudge must be reckoned with when you seek real reasons.

For Italy has not been attacked. She has been promised more territory than she now possesses if she will "keep out of it." She has not been threatened. She is in no immediate danger. But she stands facing Austria with a legacy of hate to satisfy. Look for the reason in the Hapsburg partitions of the past and the cry of the Italian from across the Adriatic.

SOLDIER DENOUNCES GERMAN BARBARITY

"Tell Social Workers," Wrote Man Who Experienced Effects of Poison Bombs—Saw Strong Man Weep

A letter sent to his relatives in England by a Britifsh sergeant forms a scathing indictment of German methods, which is all the more striking because the writer was in the beginning loth to believe that they could be capable of such acts. The sergeant is describing an attack on his section of the line:

"I take the opportunity of telling you that all the terrible charges made against the Germans in regard to the way they conduct their warfare are true. I know you are in touch with social workers; tell them all. They are using, for instance, a fishbone bayonet—an inhuman weapon, fairly broad, with one edge sharpened and the other jagged darkly, so that it should make a tearing wound. Then, again, they are using explosive bullets, which make a small wound on entry and blow out a great piece on leaving the flesh. The asphyxiating gas which they use hangs over the ground, smells sweet and sickly, and has most disastrous effects upon the lungs and eyes. From personal knowledge, I assure you that these charges are true, and, in addition, they practise the white flag treachery dodge freely.

"I used to regard reports of such things as so much ink-slinging, but it is not. It is all true, and I have seen terrible evidence of it. I have seen soldiers who have distinguished themselves during this war weeping for comrades whom they have had to leave suffocating in the trenches. And it is an awful thing to see a man cry. There are fighting men of all nations here, but, however brave a man might be, from the Britisher to the Turco, his bravery is of no avail against the poisoner and the assassin.

"Some Fireworks"

"About three o'clock there commenced the most fiendish din I have ever heard. It was obviously a heavy attack on the part of the enemy, and we all rolled out to watch the fireworks. And they were some fireworks! Without intermission the 'Kr-u-u-pp!' 'Kr-u-u-pp!' of the great German guns pounded away. Observation balloons could be seen swaying in the breeze. Since I was a child my eyes have been good, but quickly affected by anything abnormal, which will account for the fact that of all of us watchers I suddenly put my handkerchief to my eyes which had commenced to water and smart terrib'

[illegible] in the air, and made the remark that 'they are using some chemical mucit for blinding our troops.' At first this was treated as a huge joke, but when I had reached the stage when my head was burning and aching and my eyes streaming, other soldiers began to complain of similar symptoms, and also retired.

"There was a stampede for the pump by some, and others were compelled to lie down indoors. Personally, I felt so convinced that my deduction was the correct one that I constructed a sort of protector out of a handkerchief and a piece of window glass. I bound this round my head and was then able to watch the artillery fighting with a minimum of discomfort while others were applying handkerchiefs, etc., to their eyes.

"Within a couple of hours some of the men came down the road. They were sorry-looking savages, for some of them were walking like drunken men, and others were blood-stained and weary. Soldiers of various nationalities were on the road, being picked up by motor ambulances from time to time.

Suffering Children

"The air reeked of sulphur or vitriol or some such horrible chemical which an inhuman enemy had let loose. The dozen or so children still left in the village were weeping and screaming with pain, and their fathers and mothers stood in a silent knot with handkerchiefs to their eyes, waiting.

"Our cottage commanded a good view of the surrounding country, and huge masses of smoke, wicked-looking yellow in tint, rolling slowly towards us, while here and there the golden rays of the sunlight were splashed and spoiled by the black bursts of 'Jack Johnsons,' while the rifle fire, and outburst of crackling spitefulness from les mitrailleuses contributed to the general uproar. Men staggered along with cloth-stuffed mouths and streaming eyes, endeavoring to escape this new 'weapon' of the enemy. Despatch riders clumsily got off their motor cycles, and sought refuge indoors. Women and men bathed their eyes beneath the pump, and the children, because they were children, made a great and protesting uproar."

Sailors Honor Nelson

There is a general belief that the black silk neckerchief is worn in the British navy in commemoration of the death of Nelson, and that the three rows of tape round the collar refer to his three great victories, Copenhagen, the Nile, and Trafalgar. The three rows do commemorate those victories, but the black silk neckerchief was worn long before Nelson's time, and old prints show that before going into action the sailor was in the habit of stripping to the waist and tying his neckerchief tightly round his forehead, no doubt to mitigate the shock of gun-fire. In Nelson's day, however, there was no actual naval uniform.

SKIN SOFT AS A CHILD'S.

"I was a great sufferer from eczema and salt rheum for years," writes Mr. John W. Maas, Lunenburg, N.S. "Five years ago three boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment cured me and the old trouble never returned. My skin is soft as a child's now, and I shall always say a good word for this Ointment."

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

NEAT AND NOVEL NEGLIGEE.

By Anabel Worthington.

A very simple négligé is this one cut on Empire lines, very easy to make and inexpensive, because requiring little material. In lawn or cotton crêpe, for instance, the cost should not be more than seventy-five cents. There are three pieces in the skirt, with a seam at centre back and at each side. The body is plain, with slight fulness in front at waist line. Rather odd in shape is the collar, which develops into a front facing and extends to meet the skirt.

The sleeves may be made long or short, as preferred, the long sleeve gathered into a straight wristband and the short sleeve finished with a turn back cuff. As illustrated, the gown is made of pale pink crêpe with gray green figures and bound at waistline and collar and cuff edges with satin in the green tone. Another pretty way to make it would be to use a dimity and trim the collar and sleeves with narrow Valenciennes. Still another effective combination would be figured lawn with collar and cuffs of plain lawn in the color of the figure.

The body is made by merely seaming at shoulder and under arm and laying the fulness in three little plaits each side. Then the sleeve is seamed and sewed in the armhole and collar and cuffs attached. After the skirt seams are closed the front and lower edges are turned under for hems and the upper edge joined to the body. Medium size requires 5 yards of 36 inch material. The pattern, No. 7,178, comes in six sizes, from 34 to 44 inches bust measure. Price 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give number and size of pattern required. Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

BRITAIN'S COASTS ARE WELL GUARDED

Marvellous Forts Armed With Guns Fired From Control Station Perhaps Miles Away

A glimpse of the perfection of British gunnery and forts, which gives supreme confidence to the British authorities that the tight little island of Great Britain has nothing to fear from an invasion by sea was given to a newspaperman in an interview with Mr. Neil J. Beggs, a Toronto architect. Mr. Beggs is an Irishman, born in Bray, County Wickford, Ireland, and for a long number of years was engaged in building many of the famous British fortifications, not only in Great Britain, but in different parts of the world. Naturally he is very guarded in what he tells. "You can understand," he said, "that a great number of things I must leave unsaid." It is true that I have aided in the designing and constructing of some of the most famous fortifications in the world. Take a general description of the most modern fort, and its battery of guns. The guns range from small ones, to 4.7-inch, 6-inch, and up to 12-inch ones, which will throw a shell weighing as much as three-quarters of a ton 15 miles.

Away from these guns securely hidden, stands an officer in a conning tower, or eagle's nest, possibly five miles away. Near him is a key board, almost like piano keys. Stretched in front of him is a chart of all the surrounding country or sea within range of the fort and ready for use is a splendid telescope. The country, sea, guns, and everything is minutely and accurately recorded for his observation, so accurate indeed, that a mistake is almost impossible.

Fired by Electricity

"Now for the guns. Miles away at the fort, resting on concrete bases over forty feet thick, they are mounted. In subterranean chambers deep down under the forts are the rooms where the shells and ammunition are kept. The guns are operated by hydraulic pressure and fired by electricity. Suppose a ship of the enemy comes within the radius of the sea on the chart of the officer at the tower miles away. When the line on the telescope which he uses comes opposite a stud on the chart, showing a gun, he simply presses one of the keys, and the gun is fired. Then the re-loading. From the subterranean chambers there are lifts specially constructed which reach the level of the gun floor. A soldier in the shell chamber places a shell on the lift; the hydraulic machinery carries it up to the gun floor opposite the breech, and a ram worked by the same pressure sends it home into the gun. From another chamber comes the cartridge on a lift; it is deposited in front of the breech; the end cut off automatically; the same machinery sends it into place, and at the same time the connection is made for exploding the charge. It should also be stated that when the gun is fired, it is immediately cleaned automatically by the machinery. From the firing of the gun to the reloading, no human being has been nearer than the underground chamber where the ammunition is hoisted into the hydraulic lifts. The man in the tower with his keyboard can elevate the guns, depress them, swing them around to any angle, and fire them off without human aid other than his own.

Exploding the Mines

"The coasts are mined, and the mines are operated on a somewhat similar principle to the guns. An officer can set them off miles away. These observation mines are all located in certain places, and are connected with the tower of the officer in charge. Suppose a British ship was cruising along the coast, she would sail all across these mines without any notice being taken of her. But suppose an enemy's ship was sailing across the mine velds. When she was over one of these mines, and the officer has apparatus right before him by which he can see everything in the radius under his control; when the ship of the enemy sails over one of the mines, all he would do would be to depress a key, and good-bye ship. Oh, yes, the coast is well guarded."

A Gallant Ghurka

The famous Queen's Own Guides are considered one of the finest bodies of Indian troops serving under the British flag. An anecdote illustrative of their devoted gallantry can be told. In an expedition against a troublesome tribe of hill robbers a little party of the Guides, twenty-five in number, with an English officer in command, had rushed one of the enemy's sangars (a sort of rifle-pit, built up with loose stones) and held possession of it. But the enemy were still in strong force in the immediate vicinity, and it was apparent that anyone leaving the shelter would be hot.

A Ghurka trooper stepped forward and, saluting his officer said, "Sahib, we mustn't stop here all day. I will jump on the top of the parapet; they will fire at me, and we shall be able to rush on them before they can load again."

So saying the gallant fellow sprang on the parapet, and, defiantly waving his sword, shouted insulting epithets at the enemy, who, boiling over with rage, all discharged their muskets at the Ghurka.

Strange to say, the gallant fellow was absolutely unharmed, and jumping down, he cried out, "Now, Sahib, come!"

In an instant the Guides were charging at the enemy, who soon fled headlong down the hills.

RANGE FINDER AT SEA

An Instrument Which Gives Observer Eyes Twenty-one Feet Apart

A range finder on a battleship is an ingenious optical contrivance which gives the observer who looks into it exactly the view he would have if his eyes were twenty-one feet apart. An enemy's ship therefore appears as if seen from two points of view separated by that distance.

This line, twenty-one feet long, represents the base of an imaginary triangle, the apex of which touches the hostile vessel. The instrument shows the two angles at the base of the triangle, which, together with the known length of the base, give the distance of the enemy's craft or in other words the range.

There are three or four other range finders in various places, on top of the turrets or elsewhere, each instrument being erected on a tripod. The observations of all of them are communicated by telephone to the plotting room, which is under the water line of the ship. There the whole problem is worked out on a mathematical basis, but with utmost celerity, and thence the proper ranges for the guns are sent to the turrets.

Officers of exceptional cleverness are employed in this kind of work, on which so much depends. The spotting room is provided with all sorts of instruments, including a master dial, with a switch which, when turned to one figure or another, causes corresponding figures to appear on dials in all of the turrets.

Edison Device Takes Record of Telephone Talks

NEW YORK, May 30.—Thomas A. Edison announced recently that he had perfected an invention whereby telephone conversations are automatically recorded by a phonograph. He had been working on the invention twenty years. This will make 1,500 patents issued to Mr. Edison.

Outside of its commercial advantages one of the most important uses for this combination of the telephone and the phonograph will be in court cases, where in the past it has been almost impossible to use telephone messages as evidence. With the telephone message now recorded it is predicted that such messages may be admissible as evidence.

"It should also be valuable to newspaper reporters who obtain interviews or statements by telephone," Mr. Edison said in his laboratory, in West Orange. "Frequently persons interviewed make statements which after they are printed they will disclaim. With the telescribe, which is the name of the new instrument, this will be impossible. It also will be a certain check upon reporters to assure the persons interviewed that they are quoted correctly."

The telescribe is a small instrument which may rest on any man's desk. While he is speaking through the telephone this instrument, started by the pressing of a button, is recording the conversation on a wax cylinder. A needle attached to a delicate piaphragm at the end of a receiver inscribes the vibrations upon a wax cylinder. When the conversation is finished the cylinder is sent to a typist and is run off like any other phonograph record, the typist transcribing the conversation on a sheet of paper. This may be kept for reference. If the speaker's voice is desired to be preserved the wax record may be kept.

Mr. Edison said the instrument could be attached to any telephone, and that it would record conversations with the speakers even 3,000 miles apart. In business houses the telescribe is expected to be of much value. When a person called for is out of his office, the person calling him may speak his message and it will be recorded on the wax cylinder so he may read it when he returns.

Notable Success Won By Italians

Enemy's Offensive At Przemysl Stopped

Enemy Entirely on Defensive North and South of Przemysl

TERRIBLE LOSSES SUSTAINED BY TURKS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, June 1.—"The Austro-German offensive around Przemysl has been definitely stopped," said a semi-official announcement this afternoon. "Both north and south of Przemysl the enemy is now entirely on the defensive." General Mackenzen's left wing is being forced back against the San and across the river Lubaczowka. The Russian line is pushing forward in a north westerly direction rolling back an army corps of exhausted Germans.

The Russian cavalry are harrassing the flanks of the enemy, who is now reported to be falling back in confusion.

South of Przemysl in the region of Chyrof, the Russians have taken the offensive and have made some slight advances. The number of Austro-German prisoners is steadily increasing. "Conditions on other fronts are satisfactory," said the semi-official statement.

CAIRO, June 1.—The Turkish losse in killed and wounded in the Dardanelles fighting totalled more than 40,000 two weeks ago, an official statement declared. These figures were obtained from Turkish officers who were made prisoners a fortnight ago. The British won brilliant success in repulsing an assault near Gaba Tepe, says a Paris statement. The 20th Turkish regiment was annihilated in the fighting on the Gallipoli Peninsula, headquarters reported, the colonel being the only officer who escaped. The 15th and 56th Turkish regiments were nearly cut to pieces. The Turkish officers made prisoners of war said that the searchlights of the allied expeditionary forces often broke in on the Turks with night surprise attacks, and that the allied guns caused terrible losses. Near Gaba Tepe they reported two Turkish battalions attacked each other by mistake in night fighting, and inflicted heavy losses. 'The prisoners say they cannot understand why Turkey is in the war," said the headquarters' report. "They curse the Germans for their troubles."

ROUMANIA TO COME IN

LONDON, June 1.—Bucharest despatches received here this afternoon said that the entire Roumanian press now favours Roumania's intervention into the war on the side of the allies. The progress of the Italian offensive movement against Austria is reported to have aroused great enthusiasm in the Roumanian capital.

AN EARLY SESSION

OTTAWA, June 1.—An early autumn session of Parliament is predicted at the capital. Some think that the House is sure to meet in November while others predict that the Dominion legislators will meet in late September or October. The sessional predictions are based upon the assumption that an increased demand for men and munitions is likely to deplete the war roll of a hundred million dollars, and more money votes will be required.

CANADIAN CASUALTIES

OTTAWA, June 1.—The Canadian casualties up till noon to-day were Killed, 1006; wounded, 4218; missing, 1365; total 6589.

BIG SUCCESS FOR ITALIANS

ROME, June 1.—In a bloody engagement in the Tyrolean Alps, the Italian troops stormed and captured Monte Sugna, a strong Austrian fortress dominating the Austrian fortified town of Rovereto, north east of Lake Garda, and the strongly fortified Austrian positions at Mori. This capture is one of the most notable successes gained by the Italian forces in the Trentino campaign.

ATHENS, June 1.—Because of the recent British submarine attacks on Turkish transports, the Turkish troops are now being sent to the Dardanelels by railway. The route is very roundabout and tedious through Uzur Koupri, thence southward to Gallipoli.

LONDON, June 1.—The Exchange Telegraph's Copenhagen correspondent wired the following to-day:

"Berlin advices say that the opinion in German political circles is that America not only played into the hands of Great Britain in her note to Germany, but that she has entered into a formal understanding with the Allies."

Will Act As Instructors

Sergt. Major Succee of the 57th Regiment, and Col. Sergt. Dawes of No. 4 Company of the same regiment, have left for Barriefield Camp, where they have been appointed to positions on the instructional cadre. They will likely remain at Barriefield during the duration of the camp.

TOBACCO FOR OUR BRAVE LADS AT THE FRONT

A Splendid Chance for Peterborough Citizens to Assist in a Movement That Will Supply Comforts for the Boys in the Trenches

YOUR 25c. WILL HELP

Almost every letter shows how the Canadian soldiers at the front need and appreciate gifts of tobacco. Many individual donations have been sent, but the demand is far ahead of the supply. Here is a way in which Peterborough citizens can help to relieve the situation. The Overseas Club, of which Mr. F. Bowness, 290 Boswell Ave., is hon. secretary for the Peterborough district, has arranged a tobacco fund which has been in operation practically ever since the war broke out and which has been responsible for sending a vast quantity of tobacco to the front. Mr. Bowness, working quietly and with no publicity, has raised a considerable amount by local subscriptions, the majority of them from C.G.E. employees.

The Examiner believes that this convenient and satisfactory manner of supplying should be encouraged. The fund is practically a shilling (25c.) fund, although the subscriber may give more if he sees fit. Each 25c. means $1.00 worth of tobacco will be sent, 1-4 of a pound of smoking mixture, and 50 cigarettes, as every cent contributed is spent in actually purchasing tobacco. The entire cost of organization, postage, correspondence, etc., is borne by the Overseas' Headquarter's Fund.

A subscription list has been opened at the Examiner office and subscriptions can be left here or with Mr. Bowness, 299 Boswell Ave. The tobacco goes to any unit desired, as the Overseas' Club Tobacco Fund is as broad as the Empire—wherever a British soldier or sailor is to be found—hewing their way trench by trench to the Rhine—fighting their way to drive the Turk out of Europe—or keeping command of the four oceans—his heart is gladdened by your kindly thoughts, and as he smokes his pipe or cigarette, he forgets his weariness and is more ready than ever for the foe.

Drop into the Examiner with your quarter as soon as possible.

Bonner-Worth Picnic Going to Niagara Falls

The employees of the Bonner-Worth Co. intend holding their annual excursion to Niagara Falls on July 17th. During the past few years the Bonner-Worth outing has steadily grown in favour and many of the citizens join with the employees on their picnic day. It is not likely that other excursions will seek Niagara this year and the excursion should be all the more attractive. All those who are looking for a pleasant trip should mark off July 17th now. More particulars will be given later.

FOUR PEOPLE WERE KILLED

Millions of London's Inhabitants Slept Through Last Night's Zeppelin Raid Which Did Little Damage

THREE FIRES CAUSED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, Eng., June 1.—Four persons were killed, one badly injured, and others sustained lesser wounds in German Zeppelin raid on London early this morning. An official statement from the Admiralty to-night said the dirigibles threw ninety bombs, mostly incendiary and caused three large fires. No public buildings or fortified works were damaged.

Several million inhabitants of the Metropolis slept peacefully through the raid and all they know this morning are brief facts in the Admiralty announcement.

The ordinary life and business of London is being carried on as usual, except one sees small groups discussing with intense curiosity crop wild rumours.

LONDON, June 1—"No public building was hit, but a number of private houses were damaged, so far as has been ascertained. One infant, one boy, one man and one woman were killed, and another woman seriously injured. The precise number of victims has not yet been ascertained. The situation was kept thoroughly in hand."

No official statement regarding the activities of the British air squads organized to combat Zeppelin attacks upon the capital has yet been made.

The Admiralty's statement that "the situation was kept thoroughly in hand" was interpreted to mean that British airmen engaged the Zeppelins and drove them off.

STEERING GEAR WAS AT FAULT

Mr. Young, when seen by The Examiner to-day, gave it as his opinion that it was the steering gear that was at fault when the car turned over at Bridgenorth last evening. He recalled an instance which occurred early in the season when something went wrong with the steering gear, and the car travelled on both sides of the road. It was turned into the garage for repairs. Mr. Young says it was impossible to control the car once it swerved from its course. He considered he was going at a safe and reasonable speed.

Dr. Fortune, veterinary surgeon, who has driven with Mr. Young on previous occasions, vouched for Mr. Young's ability as a careful driver.

The hospital authorities reported that Mr. Guiry was somewhat improved this afternoon. He seemed a little more cheerful, although his condition is still serious

D. Hall, President of the Board of Trade, and officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with a view of bringing about an improved train service. LIEUT. GRAHAM IS WOUNDED

Lakefield Boy Given a Commission for Bravery at Langemarck Now Figures in the Casualty List

PTE. FALLEN WOUNDED

Wounded—

Lieut. Gordon H. Grahame, 2nd Battalion, Lakefield.

Pte. Gordon J. Fallen, 14th Battalion, 213 Simcoe Street, Peterborough.

To-day's casualty list contains the name of Lieut. Gordon H. Grahame of the 2nd Battalion, who is reported wounded. Lieut. Grahame, until a short time ago, was Pte. Grahame of the Machine Gun Section of the 2nd Battalion, and earned his commission by conspicuous bravery during the battle of Langemarck. It will be remembered that Grahame, who, before the war broke out, was a member of the staff of the Grove School, Lakefield, escaped from the hospital, where he was being treated for an injured arm, and walked thirty miles to join his comrades, when he heard that the 2nd Battalion was in the thick of the fighting. His promotion to Lieutenant followed and in the fighting of the past week he has been wounded. A son of the Hon. Lawrence Grahame, Lieut. Grahame is widely known in Peterborough, especially among the Stoney Lake colony as the wounded officer spent his summers at the popular resort, and was a prominent figure at the different regattas. He has been a resident of Lakefield for a number of years. His sister is at present living in New York.

PTE. GORDON J. FALLEN.

Private Gordon James Fallen of Peterborough, with the 14th Battalion, First Canadian Expeditionary force, has been officially reported wounded. His mother, who resides at 213 Simcoe Street, received a telegram to that effect, this morning. Private Fallen enlisted in the 45th Regiment, Lindsay, and was later transferred to the Royal Montreal Regiment. He is twenty-two years of age and was born in Norwood. Withing the past day or two field postcards have been received from Pte. Fallen. One was written on the seventh, and another on the thirteenth of May. On both dates he was well, so it is evident he has been wounded in a very recent engagement.

Save Your Papers And Magazines

Progressive Club Need Them to Provide Funds For Their Military Hospital Work

The Peterborough Progressive Club proposes selling old newspapers to make money to purchase supplies for the military hospitals. If the citizens will co-operate and save all the old papers and magazines they have, and may have in the next three weeks, the sum the club can realize will be considerable. Further notice regarding collection of the papers and magazines will be given.

A BREAK IN THE CHAIN

Mr. James Gates Dies at the Age of 91 Years

Mr. Jas. Gates, Dunlop St., has received word that his father, Mr. Jas. Gates, Sr., had passed away at his home in Chelsea, England, at the advanced age of ninety-one years. The death is the first break in the chain of four generations rejoicing in the name James Gates. In Peterborough are Mr. James Gates and his son and grandson, all bearing the same name. The ages respectively are 91, 50, 29 and 4 years.

American cotton mills are now using more than 5,000,000 bales of cotton a year as compared with 1,000,000 bales 45 years ago.

French Capture Strong Position

Occupy Enemy's Post on the Plateau East of Notre Dame de Lorette —Fierce Battle is Raging Around Mill on Outskirts of Souchez.

THE RESULT IN DOUBT

Special to The Examiner:

PARIS, June 1.— (French official communique).— The French troops stormed and captured strong German positions on the plateau east of Notre Dame de Lorette after the French artillery had rained shrapnel on the enemy's positions for several hours. A number of prisoners were taken. Around a sugar mill on the outskirts of Souchez the most violent battle in the region north of Arras is now proceeding. Heavy shells sent the walls crashing in upon the German defenders, but standing in the ruins of a factory the enemy is maintaining a most stubborn defence. The battle has been waged since early yesterday with the result still in doubt. The War Office regards the French victory east of Notre Dame de Lorette and the fighting at Souchez as of great importance. The beginning of a new German offensive in the Vosges was announced by the War Office this afternoon, but the enemy has been repulsed with heavy losses.

PTE. J. ASPEY, Peterborough boy with the 2nd Battalion, who came through Langemarck safely. A letter was received from him a day or two ago.

"14TH, HOLD ON AT ALL COSTS" WAS THE ORDER GIVEN

Former Peterboro' Boy, Pte. Patrick Duggan, Gives Graphic Description of the Experience of the Montreal Battalion at Langemarck

MADE A GREAT STAND

Pte. Patrick Duggan, a former Peterborough boy, employed for some time in the C.G.E., and who is at the front with the 14th (Montreal) Battalion, in the first contingent, has in a letter to a relative, Mr. Chas. Duggan, in this city, given a most graphic account of the experience of the 14th Battalion in the Langemarck fight. He writes as follows:

A line to let you know I am quite well and back again with my regiment. I have not received any mail since the 22nd of April, that was the day the battle of Ypres started. We came out of the trenches the night before and I received your letter dated April 6th the next morning with addressed envelope enclosed. I was answering your letter and was about half way through when the order came along from one billet to the other to stand to and leave our packs behind. Thinking it just a little bit of a scrap we left all our things behind, rations included. We were about two miles or so from the firing line. The artillery was now pounding away like the devil, and we could see big clouds of yellow smoke all along the left of the line where the French were. The wind was blowing towards us so we had quite a sniff of the gas. They had increased the range of their artillery, and shells began to drop all around, within a hundred yards or so. We marched off and met the remainder of the battalion down the road, and then proceeded on our journey to the battle line.

We now began to realize that something serious was going on. Shells were dropping around us and civilians were running all over the place; old men and women, children, and women with children in their arms. It was an awful sight. We got along a little further, and then we saw some of the wounded coming. Some were hit on the head, some in the arms and legs. The more serious cases were being brought back in motor ambulances.

We were now about 400 yards from the firing line, so we were put out in extended order and were told to dig ourselves in. It was getting dusk now, and the infantry had practically ceased fire. The Germans were firing very little, although a battery of 4.7 guns were pounding away. The row they were making was almost deafening. By morning we had dug ourselves in, and got a litle straw from the barn where they were dressing the wounded. We had to stand to once during the night. That was about 3 p.m. when the Highlanders

Rejuvenation of King Edward Park

A New Bandstand is Being Erected —Park Will Be Cared For

Ald. McIntyre, chairman of the Property Committee, reports that progress is being made towards putting King Edward Park into shape for band concerts. In a day or two work will be commenced on the erection of a brand new bandstand similar to that which adorns Central Park. For some years King Edward Park has been little used. It is located in the south end of the city, near the King Edward School. A few weeks ago the matter was brought up in Council, with the result that Ald. McIntyre was authorized to proceed with the rejuvenation of the park property. This he has done. Arrangements have been completed for the erection of a band stand and the installation of lights. It is hoped to hold band concerts in the Park at

THANKS RETURNED FOR A BALE SENT

The Peterborough Progressive Club received a letter of thanks from the Hon. Secretary of No. 4 Base Hospital of the University Supply Association, Toronto, for a bale which was sent to them a few days ago, the contents of which will be sent to France.

The Lord Jesus the First Member of the New Creation — Steps to the Glory Plane—The Church Called to Follow Him—Real and Imitation Christians — Preparations For Appearing in the Presence of Jehovah — Cleansing Our Garments—The Infallible Stain-Remover — Garments Spotted and Garments White.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publiction.]

San Francisco, Cal., May 30. — Pastor Russell is here, in attendance upon the I. B. S. A. Convention assembled at Oakland. He spoke in our city to-day, from the text, "All things are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's." (1 Corinthians 3:22, 23.) The Pastor spoke in part as follows:

The Apostle Paul tells us that before God created the world, in His infinite Wisdom He purposed in Himself to have a Church class, and arranged the terms and conditions upon which membership in this class tion was to be offered specifically to certain created beings. As the Father wished that in all things His Son, the mighty Logos, should have pre-eminence, the first offer was made to Him. This new nature was to be the highest of all creation. To gain this prize the Logos must demonstrate His love and loyalty to the Father by obedience to the Father's will. So He voluntarily left the Heavenly glory and humbled Himself to take a human form—not a sinful form, but perfect human nature, "a little lower than the angels."

Then the Logos humbled Himself still further, even unto the ignominious death of the Cross, on the charge that He was a blasphemer against God. After His death came His resurrection, after which He ascended into the presence of the Father, where He did a work for the Church, as the Apostle points out. Then the Father gave our Lord the Holy Spirit to shed forth upon the faithful little band of disciples who had been with Him during His earthly ministry. This indicated that Christ is God's—that God had glorified Him and had empowered and authorized Him regarding this blessing of the Divine nature; and that the begetting to this Divine nature would be granted to all who would follow in Jesus' steps.—Philippians 2:7-11; Hebrews 9:24; 2 Corinthians 5:17.

For eighteen centuries the Gospel Message has gone forth, the object being to call out from amongst mankind those who will follow in Jesus' footsteps and become members of the Body of Christ—a new Creation. These are to be His joint-heirs in the Heavenly inheritance. (1 Peter 1:4, 5.) We are living in "the last time," the end of this Gospel Age, when this special salvation of the Church is to be revealed.

Those who desire to become members of the New Creation must first turn away from sin and toward God. This must be a heart turning—a change of disposition. They must really see that sin is a most injurious thing. The penalty which the Divine Court of the Universe has attached to sin is death, bringing degradation, sickness, sorrow, pain and dying; and those who turn to God should fear sin, lest it should contaminate them and jeopardise their future life. But they were born with the disease of death, which they have inherited as members of the Adamic race. By his sin of disobedience Father Adam brought upon himself the death penalty and has entailed it upon all his posterity.

But God has made an arrangement by which they may get back into His family. He has provided that His Only Begotten Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, should taste death for Adam; and since mankind were condemned in Adam, our Lord's death redeemed not only Father Adam, but all his posterity. (1 Corinthians 15:21, 22.) God has provided this way by which those desirous of turning away from sin may have their sins forgiven; but each must avail himself of the way.

All mankind are criminals before the great Court of the Universe. The only way by which that Court can recognize a sinner is through a great Advocate who is not a sinner. That Advocate is Jesus Christ the Righteous (1 John 2:1), the only One qualified in the sight of that Court to represent convicts. Whoever desires His services must comply with His terms: "If any man will come after Me (be My disciple), let him deny himself, take up his cross and follow Me." (Matthew 16:24.) To deny himself means to give up his own will and accept instead the will of Jesus; in other words, he ceases to be his own, and becomes the Lord's. Those who take these steps are then begotten of the Holy Spirit, and counted members of the Body of Christ.

There are very many who seem not clearly to see what it is to be a Christian. This is the reason why we can look out over Europe and see several hundred million so-called Christians killing each other. They neither know what Christianity is nor manifest its spirit. But God knows who are tares and who are wheat. When the wheat class are changed in the First Resurrection, the tares will be burned—destroyed as tares, not as human beings.

In the parable our Lord explains that the field is the world—neither the wheat nor the tares are the world. The earth represents the world, out which grow the wheat and the tares. The seed of Truth entering the world has brought forth the children of the Kingdom. The seed of Error dropped into the earth has brought forth children of error, children of the Devil, the great source of error. They should neither think themselves Christians nor be imitation Christians. All should know that there are but two classes, real Christians and the world.

According to the Bible God desires only 144,000 members in the Body of Christ. He sends forth His Message, and it reaches only those for whom it is designed. All others will have their opportunity during the Messianic Kingdom, when a thousand years The Christ will restore and uplife all the willing and obedient of Adam's race to the original perfection lost in Eden and redeemed at Calvary.

There are different things which hinder people from understanding and appreciating the Message. The one quality which God is seeking seems to be that of honesty. Wherever the Truth goes, it touches those honest-hearted ones who are not too much blinded by the Adversary. Gradually these realise that our great God has generously purposed a New Creation, of which Jesus is to be the Head, and the Church the Body. When we begin to see this, our minds gradually open; for God begets us with His Holy Spirit and, as the Apostle explains, we receive a spiritual enlightenment enabling us to understand the deep things of God, which we could not understand before we became members of God's family.

It is one thing to enter into a covenant, however, and another thing to keep it. Some have very fallen flesh, and others very noble flesh. But God is not proving the flesh; He is trying the spirit. (Deuteronomy 13:3.) What counts with Him is the real sentiment of the heart, the desire. Do your best to strive against sin, and earnestly seek to put away all the weaknesses of the flesh. God does not wish any of the called to fall. Only those who are not sufficiently loyal and who fail to develop the right character will be rejected.

God has so arranged that if overtaken in a fault we may be helped out of our difficulty. From the time when we were presented to the Father, the merit of Christ's righteousness covers our unwilling imperfections. We must wear this robe of Christ's righteousness until we shall have finished our course; for after our resurrection change we shall have no blemishes. Rev. 19:8; 7:14.

We must watch, and keep our garments unspotted from the world. The New Creature must pass through the world, coming in contact with it in all the affairs of life, and yet keep unspotted from evil.

Probably every New Creature except our Lord Jesus has gotten spots on his garment at some time. But these must be removed; for no one will be admitted into the presence of Jehovah God whose robes are spotted. There is only one cleansing fluid which will remove these spots —"The blood of Jesus Christ His Son cleanseth us from all sin." (1 John 1:7.) These words do not refer to the original cleansing; they are not addressed to sinners, but to those who are robed in Christ's righteousness. Both in the original Greek and in the English the thought of a progressive work is set forth—the blood keeps cleansing. As long as we retain these robes and have need of cleaning, the blood of Jesus Christ is the stain-remover which God has provided.

When we first came to the Lord for forgiveness all our sins were counted as Adamic sins — those which came through Adam's failure to obey the Lord. If we had an individual responsibility in the sense that we consented to some of these sins, we no doubt received a measure of punishment. This we may still be bearing in the way of sickness, disease, etc. But our share in the condemnation inherited from Adam is all covered by the merit of Christ's righteousness.

After we become the Lord's, we have the new nature, which does not love sin; but we also have weaknesses of the flesh, against which the new nature is striving. Nevertheless it is not possible for any fallen human being to live without sin. St. John says that whoever thinks of himself as being sinless deceives himself. (1 John 1:8.) He may not know that he is lying, but the Word of God says that not one of mankind can keep himself perfect. St. Paul says the same thing; we cannot do the things that we would. (Romans 7:15-21.) The New Creature would do perfectly, but it is hampered by the flesh. Not one in the whole world is righteous, as the Scriptures declare. (Romans 3:10.) All God's people have these inherited blemishes and imperfections. Therefore He has arranged for the cleansing of these things. If it were possible to be without sin, there would be no arrangement for our being cleansed.

The blood of Christ, which represents the merit of Christ, is sufficient not only for the sins of the past, but for every sin which is attributable to the weaknesses of the flesh, our inheritance from Father Adam. But the blood of Jesus Christ does not cover one wilful sin. God knows how to provide for sins partly wilful and partly due to inherited weakness. The New Creature cannot sin wilfully. If one delighted in sin and wished to commit entirely wilful sin, it would be proof that he had lost the Spirit of God completely. Whatever transgression is not wilful is one of weakness of the flesh—either Adamic weakness in the person or by reason of temptation from others.

Whoever finds a spot on his robe should go to the Lord in prayer, expressing regret and by faith accepting the offer of cleansing through the blood of Jesus Christ. The spot is removed by the asking of forgiveness and the application of the blood. Some one might say, If people realized that they could be so easily forgiven of their sins, they would become very careless. But the tendency is rather in the opposite direction, we reply.

Every New Creature in Christ is very desirous of being an honor to his Heavenly Father. Therefore he is very much disappointed when he finds himself committing sin — speaking evil, showing impatience, acting unjustly, etc. As soon as he recognizes his conduct as wrong, he takes it to God and asks forgiveness. Perhaps in a short time he does something similar, and is more disappointed than before. He thought that he had learned his lesson thoroughly. Then he goes to the Heavenly Father again, but finds that it is not so easy to go the second time. Yet go he must, or else the spot remains. By and by he does something wrong again, perhaps in a little different form, and must go again in God's appointed way. These become the most serious times of our lives as New Creatures. But just as sure as he has had such experiences, just so sure he has been faithful to the Lord.

Another class of Christian people, however, are different. The first time they got a spot on their robe, they went in the proper way and had the spot removed. But the second time, they said, "No; I cannot go to the Lord. I will not pray to-night." In the morning they brush away all thought of the matter. During the day they are so busy with the cares of life that they forget it. At night, they think of it again, but retire without praying. And so time goes on. Perhaps another difficulty comes up. Another bitter word is spoken, another angry word uttered, something done or thought that was wrong. They are getting spots all over their robe. Should their attention be called to the spots, they reply, "Everybody has these. I have made up my mind not to pay too much attention to these things." Meantime their robes are becoming so spotted that it is practically an impossibility to cleanse them. They must be washed.

This class is pictured in the Scriptures as a great multitude, who must wash their robes white in the blood of the Lamb. (Revelation 7:9-17.) All these will be washed eventually in the great Time of Trouble such as was not since there was a nation. They will not be counted worthy to escape these things coming upon the world—the Time of Trouble just before us. They have not been walking with our Lord in white, not walking with Him at all.—Revelation 3:4.

There is no way to keep our garments white except by continually being in relationship with the Lord. In this way we shall gain the victory over sin. But those who do not remove the spots as they come, cannot walk with Him in white, cannot go in to the wedding, not being a part of the Bride class. (Matthew 25:10-12.) They will miss the promised glory, honor and immortality.

But God in His Wisdom has something even for them, for in one sense they are really overcomers. Even when besmirched with sin, they were not in sympathy with sin. In their minds they were fighting against sin, even though not getting rid of it. The Lord will put them to the final test; and if then they deny the Lord, they shall die the Second Death. But if in that test they say from their heart, "Oh, now I see my mistake! I see where I should have done differently. I will now be faithful to the Lord; I will stand ready to die for Jesus instead of denying Him," they will receive the palms of victory. But they will not get the Crowns of Glory; for they did not become "more than conquerors," as did the Bride, the Lamb's Wife.—Romans 8:37; Revelation 19:6-9.

Those of this second company, "whose number no man knoweth," the Scriptures declare will serve God in His Temple and before His Throne, while the first company, the bride class, will be in the Throne and living atones of the Temple. The second company might just as easily, and with much more satisfaction, have attained the glories of the Divine nature had they kept their robes unspotted from the world. The fact that they will receive palm branches indicates that they finally come off victors; but their lack of zeal hindered them from being accepted as of the "more than conquerors." Thus they fail to receive joint-heirship with our Lord in His Messianic Kingdom. But in His infinite mercy the Heavenly Father has another, though inferior blessing for them; for apparently they will attain a place similar in many respects to that occupied by the angels.

Here is the difference between being in the Throne and before the Throne. Each spirit-begotten child of God decides the matter for himself. If we walk with Him in white, we shall sit down with Him in His Throne of glory, honor and immortality. If we do not so walk, we shall have our portion with the other class. Dear Brethren, permit nothing to separate you from the love of God in Christ. If we walk with Him in white, all things shall be ours—things present and things to come. No people in the world should be so happy as we are; no people are so happy. It is worth a fortune to realize that our God is a God of Love and to realize what He has in store for us—"All things are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's."

Had Heart Trouble FOR YEARS.

Weighed 87 Lbs. Now Weighs 138 Lbs.

Miss Beatrice Lougheed, Staples, Ont., writes: "I feel it my duty to tell you what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I had heart trouble for quite a few years. I doctored for it, and altogether my bill amounted to $400, and still no cure. One day when very sick I was lying on a couch close to where some almanacs were hanging. I took one down, and was reading about what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills cured, and thought I would try them. I got six boxes to start with; have only taken three boxes and I never felt so well in my life as I do now. I only weighed 87 pounds when I started to take them, and now I weigh 138 pounds. I hope all poor sufferers will be benefitted by them as I have been."

Wherever there is any weakness of the heart, Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills will strengthen it and build up a strong healthy system.

Wife Locked Husband In

New York, June 1.— The Amazonian qualities of Mrs. Dorothy Levy, wife of Michell Levy, No. 220 West Forty-ninth street, led to her being held by Magistrate Krotel in the West Side court.

Two days ago Levy, who is a strongly built man, returned from a tango party to find his wife on guard in their apartments. She refused to let him go to bed, he declared, and kept him for two days and nights without food or sleep because he would not sign a cheque for $125.

During the time he was besieged Levy declared his wife cut up his clothes and attacked him with a pair of scissors. He brought the mutilated clothes into court with him and showed the magistrate his lacerated hands.

It developed during the hearing that she had been committed to an institution because she was addicted to drugs. It was then that Magistrate Krotel held her for further

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

NOT A SECRET NOW

By HILDA CLIFFORD.

I really wonder if every girl feels as I do under similar circumstances. Certainly, I hope so, for I am too happy to draw a long breath. What is it that has made me so wildly joyous, oh little typewriter of mine? I will tap out the story on your keys, for you are indirectly responsible for it all.

First, do you need an introduction to me? If so, I am Daisy Kilrain, stenographer, and happiest girl in the world, just nineteen. Yesterday I could have said nineteen and never kissed, but today, well, typewriter, I'll tell you all about it. I've had several other places, but came here six months ago, and am the only girl in the business, the other employes being all men and boys, from the Head down to Kit the office boy. Of course my work was taking the letters of the Head, and occasionally ones from the rest, although they talk so slow that I can write them right off on you. The Head can rattle them off so fast that it keeps my pencil flying to keep up. It's hard to tell you just what the Head looks like, for you aren't a girl with eyes in your head; but he's great and big and such a man! His eyes look right into yours, and woe is me if you ever tell even a tiny fib; but I never have. There is something about such a man that inspires confidence, and, yes, love; I might as well write it and get it over. Some of the fellows in the outer office said that he was a woman hater, but I never believed that, for there are kind lines about his mouth, and when he smiles his whole face lights up, and you feel better and stronger for having known him. There is a lot of work here, but I like to work and keep busy, so I didn't mind, until the bookkeeper began putting off some of his work on me. He found out that I can add better than he, and then he kept on giving me more and more of his figuring to do, so that I had to stay overtime every night. At first I said nothing; then I thought I was entitled to dinner money, and spoke about it. He smiled, a rather unpleasant smile, and said:

"Is It Possible You Can Care for an Old Crusty Fellow Like Me?"

"Righto, Miss Daisy, you shall have your dinner, but I'll pay for it," and of course that ended dinner money for me, because I wouldn't have let him pay for anything for me, not if I starved.

Some one once told me that no girl ever married her employer unless she was fearfully in love or wanted a home very much indeed. Perhaps she is right, but I wonder why. Of course a man's stenographer does know him better than his home folks, in a way, but when he has only nice traits of character to show, why shouldn't she love him all the more? When a girl sees a man bear up under misfortune, keep his temper, show consideration under circumstances that would make a saint long to break all ten of the commandments, why, that tends to show how awfully nice he is, doesn't it? I think so. At last, yesterday morning, things came to a climax. The bookkeeper had piled things up on me the day before so that it was nine o'clock before I left the office, and I had not stopped for dinner. I left the work on the desk ready for him, but when I came down in the morning I found Kit the office boy nearly frantic because he had spilled ink all over an that carefully tabulated stuff, and I knew I would have to do it all over. This upset me so (though I didn't say a word to Kit; poor little chap, he couldn't help it) that my hands were shaking when I went in for dictation, and everything looked blurred before my eyes.

The Head began, speaking in his usual rapid way, but it really seemed to me that he, too, was nervous. Suddenly I found that he was beyond me, and I said, my voice trembling:

"Excuse me, but you are talking too fast."

He stared at me, and no wonder, for it was the first time I had ever asked him to speak slower.

"What's the matter?" he asked kindly, and I broke down. Just think of it, I cried like a baby, and all the time he was patting my shoulder with the ruler which he had snatched up in his excitement, not knowing what to do with a sobbing girl. I kept on crying harder and harder, and he kept on patting my shoulder with renewed force, until at last I couldn't stand it any longer, and so I gasped out:

"Please don't hit me any more, you're fairly pounding me," and then he looked at the ruler and realized what he was doing. He gave a gasp himself, and said kind of breathlessly:

"Why, bless my soul, what have I been doing?" and gazed at me, as I could see through my fingers, for my hands were over my face.

"I didn't mean to do this way," I began to apologize.

"And I never meant to pound you," he explained, still holding the ruler and looking from it to me and back again. The funny side of it struck me and I began to laugh through my tears, and then to cry again, and then it all happened so suddenly.

He bent nearer, asking in that kind, nice way of his: "My poor little girl, what is it? Who has been imposing on you? Bless me, I can't bear to see a woman cry.

"My dear Miss Kilrain, I am going to ask you a very strange thing."

"Yes," I said encouragingly.

"I am wondering if you would feel hurt if I asked for your resignation," he blurted out.

"Why?" I asked simply.

He turned towards me, and caught my eyes. I did not try to hide my secret any more. There was no need. The dear reached forward, caught my hands in his own, asking eagerly:

"Tell me, little girl, if it is possible that you can care for an old crusty fellow like me?" Dear typewriter, he is only thirty-five, and to call himself old!

"It not only is possible, it IS," I said, rather mixed up as to words, but certainly not as to meaning; and then I ceased to belong to the unkissed, and this is my last day here. The poor dear thought it his duty to send me away because he feared his love for me might disturb me. Do you wonder, typewriter of mine, that I am the happiest girl in all the world?

POPE STAYS AT ROME.

Refused Spain's Offer—Enemy Representatives Leave Vatican.

ROME, June 1.—Reports that Pope Benedict XV. would leave Rome because of the entrance of Italy into the war were formally denied at the Vatican today. Premier Dato, of Spain, acting for the Spanish Government, placed at the Pope's disposal one of King Alfonso's palaces during the course of the war, but the Pontiff replied that he had no intention of leaving the Vatican.

Discussing the vexed question of the departure from Rome of representatives of belligerent countries accredited to the Holy See, the Osservatore Romano, the Vatican organ, says:

"Admitting that the Italian Government is under responsibility to the Holy See, such a position did not correspond with the dignity of their office. Their departure from Rome must be attributed merely to a new situation created by the participation of Italy in the war. The position of the Holy See is rendered most difficult as it cannot confer directly with representatives of the belligerents, thus restricting the internationality which is so necessary to the Pope to carry out his mission to Christian society."

Auto Accident Near Bridgenorth

One of the Occupants of the Car Suffered a Double Fracture of the Leg—Condition is Serious

BRIDGENORTH, June 1. — John Young, David Guiry and James Corkery, all of Ennismore, were thrown out of an automobile which turned turtle near here, last evening. The accident occurred about 6 o'clock in the evening, almost opposite the residence of the Rev. R. J. McLaren. David Guiry who is well up in years, suffered a double fracture of the leg, a broken nose, and several minor injuries. The two remaining occupants of the car received a bad shaking up. Nothing definite could be obtained as to the actual cause of the accident. The Rev. Mr. McLaren was at tea when he heard the car strike the mail box, outside of his gate. He went out and assisted Mr. Guiry on to the lawn, where he remained until medical aid was summoned. Dr. J. B. Mann and Dr. G. S. Cameron of Peterborough arrived soon after. They were followed by Comstock's ambulance, which removed the injured man to St. Joseph's Hospital, where he lies in a precarious condition. The other occupants of the car were able to proceed to their homes in Ennismore. The car was badly damaged.

After considerable commenting on snow shovelling bills, the following accounts were drawn on the Treasury, for snow shovelling:

Italy Prepared To Take Over Country's Machine Plants

LONDON, June 1.—Italian advices indicate that the government at Rome is prepared to take over all the private machinery shops in the Milan and Turin districts for the manufacture of war material. Arrangements looking to this end, it is understood, were completed several weeks ago, but according to the best information the private plants will be diverted from commercial pursuits only as national necessity arises.

Many automobile shops having works at Milan, Turin and Genoa will be included in the list of works to be utilized for war munitions manufacturing, but for the present these plants will confine their efforts to turning out automobiles for the army.

Since the beginning of the European war the Terni small arms works have been working night and day. These are government works devoted to the making of military rifles. The principal government shops in Italy are those located at Brescia, Turin, Naples, Terni, Venice and Spezia. The Brescia, Turin and Naples shops are under the control of the army. The Venice and Spezia shops are operated by the navy. In addition there are the works known as Laboratorio Precisione, located in Rome, devoted to the manufacture of sights and instruments of precision in military service. This last named plant is under the control of the army.

The principal machinery plants to be utilized comprise the works of Franco Tosi at Leguano, the Breda locomotive works at Milan, the Breda Car Works, Dubosc Machine Tool Works and the Ansalde Works," all three at Turin, and the automobile shops at Turin and Milan.

The Pirelli works at Milan are now working more than 5,000 men in the production of cable and wire for military purposes. The Tosi shops at Leguano are now working nearly 4,000 men. This is one of the foremost machinery plants of Europe, and the output for several months has been confined almost wholly to naval and military equipment. The Tosi shops have for several years specialized in turbine engine and steam engine building, and many of the engines of the latest Italian war ships were built there.

The Breda Locomotive Works are engaged in building locomotives for the Italian Government, but during the last few months arrangements were made whereby entire buildings in the plant were set aside for the manufacture of shrapnel. The Breda shops are handling for the most part field gun projectiles.

The Ausaldi shops, at Turin, are building submarine engines, and also are utilized for ammunition work, and the Dubose shops, in the same place, are working night and day in turning out machine tools for rifled manufacture.

The main reliance of the Italian Government for small arms is based on the Terni shops. This plant was equipped with machinery throughout by a Leeds firm, save for the rifling machines, which for the most part, came from Liege.

Forgings for heavy guns, both for the army and navy, and armor plate for the ships of the navy come from the Terni Steel works. These are private steel works located at Turin. The facilities are very modern and the heaviest gun work can be undertaken there.

The Italian government controls its output of war material under the supervision of officers of the navy for the service afloat. All the government plants are directly under the control of officers of the services.

Kitchener Did Masterly Work In Time of Crisis--British Stirred Against Hostile Press

LONDON, June 1.—When the war was breaking over Europe like a sudden tempest Lord Kitchener was in London, having come for consultation regarding the tense situation in the army over the Irish situation, which had brought the United Kingdom to the verge of civil war.

Everybody was asking, "Who shall head the War Department?" Everybody replied "Kitchener." At that time, it will be recalled, because of the sedition in the army, Mr. Asquith, the Premier, was discharging the functions of Secretary of State for War, but it was clear to all that the very best and the very strongest man who could be found was needed [illegible]

Cabinet Was Tardy.

But the suggestion which was on the lips of entire Britain did not seem to meet with a hearty response from the Cabinet. It was announced that Lord Kitchener was leaving for Egypt. Consternation was expressed on all sides, because it had been expected that the government would lose no time in availing itself of his services. Then came the news that he had actually started for Dover on his way to Cairo. Simultaneously with this report come the news that the war portfolio had been offered to Lord Haldane.

The Evening News, one of the newspapers of the corporation known as the Associated Newspapers, Limited, opened fire on Lord Haldane instantly. It declared he had been a German sympathizer, that he had been responsible for limiting the arming of the British forces and that he was not to be trusted with the destinies of England in this emergency.

Recalled From Journey.

This is the sum total of Lord Northcliffe's contribution to the selection of Lord Kitchener as War Secretary. "K. of K." was at Dover when the government, in the face of the fierce fire which had been opened on Lord Haldane, about faced and telegraphed to the hero of Egypt to return. And the next day the appointment was made and for the first time in two days England breathed easy. There is very good reason for the belief that the post had been offered to Lord Kitchener with restrictions of a character which led him to refuse and pack his trunks. And it is a fact that the government tried to force the assistance of Lord Haldane on Lord Kitchener. But "K. of K." entered the Cabinet only with the distinct understanding that he should have a free hand.

That was what England needed at the time — a free hand for Lord Kitchener. He was three men in one. He cut at one stroke a million bands of red tape. He looked at an inadequate military force and out of the material at hand—part regulars, part territorials and part veterans out of the service—he manufactured an expeditionary force of 25,000 men and put it across into Belgium before the public realized that a British soldier was on the continent. That was one of the greatest feats ever performed. It saved Paris, because it delayed the advance of the Germans and enabled the French to operate further to the east, delaying other invading armies more.

Britain Taken By Surprise.

England had been taken by surprise by the war, and only a man of Lord Kitchener's organizing ability could have coped with the situation. From the minute he took hold a steady stream of troops began to move from England across the Channel and from all points in the empire toward England. An army had to be created. It had to be trained, clothed, transported, armed, fed and outfitted. Every branch of the service had to be built from the ground up.

But above all, every move had to be concealed from the enemy, and this was a tremendous task, when one considers that England was and still is overrun with German spies.

It was on this point that Lord Kitchener incurred the enmity of the newspapers that drove Lord Haldane out to make room for him, just as they are now trying to drive Lord Kitchener out to make room for some one else.

These newspapers wanted special privileges. They, above all things, wanted to have their correspondents at the front, Lord Kitchener put his foot down.

"Berlin has ten thousand spies who are waiting for your reports of our movements," he said. "Do you suppose I am going to allow any English newspaper to spread broadcast the news that Wilhelmstrasse will give millions of marks to possess? Go to! This is war, not journalism."

Marked For Slaughter.

From that time Lord Kitchener has been marked for slaughter, and for nearly the entire time that he has been in office the newspapers whose correspondents he rejected have been hammering away. First it was the necessity to have accounts of English gallantry published in order to inspire enlistment. It would be impossible to raise an army, they said, unless these stories of how this or that regiment fought were spread broadcast. Lord Kitchener sent an "eye-witness" to the front to describe the operations for all the newspapers, and a mighty good "eye-witness" he proved.

Then the newspapers opposed to the War Office insisted that the army could not be raised unless the government resorted to conscription. That lasted a long time, until Lord Kitchener in a speech in the House of Lords showed that he practically had his two million men under arms without conscription.

Howl of Yellow Press.

Those newspapers that have set to themselves the task of breaking Lord Kitchener to their will then began to hint that France felt that England was not bearing her share of the war. Bad blood was created. The situation had to be met. Lord Kitchener had Mr. Millerand, the French Minister of War, invited to England and in a trip of four days he learned the truth. The British newspapers that had been fouling their own nests, for selfish reasons had deliberately misrepresented the situation. Mr. Millerand issued a statement declaring that the things which he had seen had delighted and amazed him. Britain was doing its full duty by France and the allies and no ground could be found for complaint.

British Surprise Germans.

These are examples of the annoyances to which Lord Kitchener has been subjected, because he would not treat the war as a journalistic enterprise and insisted on cloaking the military preparations from German eyes. The German generals did not know that the British had a soldier in Belgium until at Mons they captured some of them.

Again, the Germans did not know they had British troops in front of them at La Bassee until wounded Britons fell into their hands. They thought that Field Marshal Sir John French's army was still away to the eastward, several hundred miles on the Aisne. But by cloaking their movements in secrecy the transfer of the entire British force was made and the advance on Calais stopped in October.

And yet it was no fault of the anti-kitchener newspapers that this great movement, which perhaps saved the Channel ports, was not known to the Germans. One of them outlined the movement, but fortunately the news did not get into German hands.

The persistent nagging of the man at the head of the War Office is what has led to the outburst against these newspapers. British patience has broken down—that's all.

Condemned Man Uttering Threats

With Hope Gone and Money Stopped Confessions May Ensue—Becker's Fate Hangs in the Balance

NEW YORK, June 1. — Charles Becker, completely crushed and sitting in his cell in the death house in Sing Sing, swayed from side to side, now weeping aloud and then bursting into loud threats against the men who had caused his conviction.

Becker had what is known in Sing Sing as "death house hysteria." It usually comes on doomed men two or three days after the last court has upheld the conviction.

On Thursday evening Martin Manton, Becker's lawyer, told him that there was not a possible legal loophole for an application to be made to the United States Supreme Court for another trial.

It has been pointed out plainly to Becker that his only possible hope of living after the week beginning July 12th is to make such a confession involving others in high places in New York, as will force Gov. Whitman and the State authorities to take cognizance of it and cause them to make some sort of deal with him. He believes this can be done and so do others to whom he has talked.

Until his second trial and afterward money came to Becker from some mysterious source. Where this money came from no one ever knew except Becker, and possibly one or two intimates.

But the money supply has stopped now. The provider has deserted the condemned man as have others who have stood by him since his arrest. Becker is particularly bitter against these men. He has declared that should he make a confession to save his own neck, not one of them will be spared and no one will be spared.

According to a most excellent authority, if Becker cannot make a deal with Gov. Whitman he will leave a written statement to be made public after his death. This statement, it is believed, will go into details and name men who will be accused of having profited by the police graft from gamblers, keepers of disorderly resorts and excise violators.

Town Growing As Result of Joke

MINNEAPOLIS, June 1.—Sheridan (Wyo.) is the fastest growing town in the West. Its population is going up by leaps and bounds and, surprising as it may at first glance seem, the town is so mad about it that a letter has been written by the Commercial Club to the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association.

"Somebody," the letter says, "put up placards in railroad stations all over the West announcing that 5,000 men are needed in Sheridan and that jobs are waiting.

"We are willing to grow by leaps and bounds," the letter says, "but we do not want to grow by 'leaps and bums.'"

It is all wrong, the letter says. There never were 5,000 jobs looking for men in Sheridan.

For emergency use a woollen automobile tyre has been invented made in sections which are bolted to the rim of a wheel.

UNIQUE TRIBUTE TO PETERBORO'S HEROES

Memorial Service in the Armouries Last Night Attended by 2,000 People — Hundreds of Slides Showing Scenes at the Front and Pictures of Peterboro' Men Shown

The big patriotic and memorial service in the Armouries last night, arranged and conducted by Adj. McElhiney of the Salvation Army, was an unique and impressive tribute to the memory of those brave sons of Peterborough who have died or suffered at the front. About 2,000 people attended, the huge crowd including the relatives and friends of nearly all those whose names have appeared on the casualty list and the event was a notable one. It was made the more impressive by the fact that the building in which it was held was one familiar to most of those in whose honour the service was held, and in the hall from which last August the boys of the 57th Regiment and 24th Battery marched gaily out. Many of them never to return.

With the earnest co-operation of the Roy Studio and after many arduous efforts on the part of himself and his assistants, Adjutant McElhiney had secured a remarkable collection of photographic slides of Peterborough heroes, nearly every officer and man who has been mentioned on the list was shown. The loss that Peterborough has sustained was borne home to the crowd as picture after picture was shown, Major Bennett, Sergt.-Major Howarth and on down the long, pathetic list. Those who were known to have come through safely or who had escaped with injuries were greeted with cheers, but the pictures of those who had gone to join the great majority were received with a silence that was more eloquent than any cheering could have been.

The service was opened with a display of war views of general interest, the front, naval pictures, trench views, a splendid collection of slides. The different heroes were roundly cheered and the display of a picture of King George caused the crowd to break into the national anthem. Views of the Canadians at Valcartier, and of the departure of the huge fleet carrying the first contingent, pictures of the 2nd Battalion officers and non-commissioned officers were also shown and a picture of the Peterborough boys in A company of the 2nd Battalion at Salisbury was the signal for a long sustained applause. Other slides showed officers of the 57th Regiment, scenes at the final service in Central Park on the departure of the first contingent, pictures of the 8th Mounted Rifles and 39th Battalion at Belleville, the visit to Peterborough of the Duke of Connaught, Princess Patricia, Col. Farquhar, gallant commander of the Princess Pats killed in action, as he was photographed here last June, the funeral of Pte. Harold Nicholls, Peterborough officers on active service, including Col. Clegg, Major Mills, Capt. Ackerman, Maj. Hall, Maj. Medd, Lt.-Col. Young, Capt. Carruthers, Capt. McPherson, Lieut. Kelly, Lieut. Rogers, Lieut. Cameron, Lieut. Eastwood, Lieut. Rackham and many other interesting photographs.

Then came the honour roll pictures showing the men from Peterborough who have been killed or wounded or reported as missing.

Other views showed the Cliveden Hospital, where many of the Canadian wounded are being cared for.

During the service familiar hymns including "Lead Kindly Light," and "Nearer My God to Thee" were sung by the crowd, led by the Temple Band and the latter also played several enjoyable selections.

The National Anthem and the Benediction brought the service to a close.

Adjutant McElhiney is to be congratulated upon the success of the event—which was made possible by his earnest efforts.

France Has Made the Last Great Sacrifice to the God of War

France has made the last sacrifice to the God of War, writes Philip Gibbs to the Montreal Standard. She has sent her youngest sons, the first flower of her youth to kiss the tricolour and to take up arms in defence of "La Patrie":

"Allons, enfants de la patrie,
Le jour de gloire est arrive!"

The words were sung through the streets of Paris, the other day, by thousands of young lads belonging to the class of 1916, which has just been called to the colours. Boys of 18, whose fathers are already at the front, unless they have gone across the great river to a never-ending peace, and whose elder brothers have been fighting in a nine-months' battle, unless they fell early on the field of honour. They went away as gaily through the sunlit streets as though to a schoolboys' fete on the last day of the term. These "Marie-Louises," as they are called, put on a splendid swagger as they marched down to the stations. With slouched caps and with their hands in their pockets, or carrying little bundles on shouldered sticks, they swung out gallantly, laughing, chattering, singing, shouting.

From thousands of these young throats came the old hymn of liberty, and men of older years who heard "La Marseillaise" chanted in this shrill clarion chorus felt a "frisson" of pride, of pity, of emotion beyond analysis. Young France was passing. The eternal youth of France which never grows old, in spite of all the world's wisdom and cynicism, and doubt and disbelief, came singing on its way to glory, fresh, radiant, audacious, and beautiful in the first flush of ardent boyhood:

"Allons, enfants de la patrie——

Dear children of France! I watched them as they passed, with light in their eyes, and a flush of excitement on their smooth faces. These were not the sons of a degenerate race. They carried themselves proudly, with well-poised heads. They had lithe young bodies, with the spring of steel in their frames. Their dark eyes had the "gamin" look, roguish, alert, quick to see the jest of life. The young aristocrat was here (for not all heads were lopped off in the days of revolution), and his straight nose and finely chiselled lips betrayed the noble blood of France, strengthened by democratic strains. Here also, shoulder to shoulder with him, walked the son of the people, young Jacques Bonhomme, with his bullet head and square jib. All types of French boyhood were mingled in these battalions, but in all of them there was the prevailing strain of vivacity and self-reliance. Their steps beat a lively tattoo on the flagged stones, and it was like the sound of the drums to some of the old Frenchmen who stood close to me — as though the drummer boys of France were beating the march to victory. The drums of youth! Old men jerked up their heads, and their lips tightened, so that they should not betray a weakness. But they could not hide the moisture in their eyes which blotted out for a moment all those gay faces, and those young, swinging bodies.

The Children of France.

From the crowds lining the pavements shouts went up.

"Bravo, Marie Louise! Bonne chance, mes petits! A bientot!"

The answer came back with a rattle of clear voices:

"Vive la France!"

Then rising, and with a steady rhythm, there thrilled out the old song of victory and defiance:

"Allons, enfants de la patrie,
Le jour de gloire est arrive."

Mothers and sisters walked along the roads, hardly able to keep up with the swift stride of the boys, except by running now and then. Girls run out of the crowds with flowers, which they threw to boys who caught and kissed them, and pinned them to their caps. It was a gay scene. There was the sound of joyous laughter. Only quick ears and understanding hearts could hear the sob in it.

A mother in mourning, with red eyes, dry of all tears, embraced her son for the last time outside the station. His head dropped upon her bosom, nesting for a moment where as a child he had gone for comfort and courage.

"Adieu, maman. Au revoir."

He went abruptly from her, not looking back.

The woman followed him with her eyes, but her lips did not whimper. She turned and spoke in a quiet voice:

"My last little one," she said, with a gesture of beautiful resignation. "I have three others. That is to say ——".

For the first time her voice trembled and her breast heaved.

"Come, mother," said a girl standing by her side.

"Yes, said the woman, that is my fourth boy. I have only two of them left."

WOODMEN HALL

The topic delivered Sunday night in the Woodmen Hall was one of special interest, being as it was an explanation of the appearance of Moses and Elias on the Mount. Moses had died many centuries before and was buried in the land of Moab. How then could Moses appear on the Mount? According to popular theology, when a man dies he goes straight to heaven. But this is right, the opposites to what the Lord declares; for according to God's word no reward will be given until the resurrection and the sound coming of Christ. As proof of this Elder Johnston referred to the following: Luke 14:4, Matt. 16:27, and Rev. 22:14. If, therefore, there isn't any who goes to reward at death, the following cannot be true when people sing: "Millions have Reached that Blissful Shore." And again:

"Fair as the morning,
Bright as the day,
Loved ones in glory,
Looking this way."

And again:

"You Must be a Lover of the Lord,
Or You Cannot go to Heaven
when You Die."

Mr. Johnston said these expressions are false, though no doubt the ones who wrote them were honest. No one goes to heaven or hell until they receive a resurrection. Common sense alone, to say nothing of the Bible, confirms this thought. For if people go to reward at death there is no necessity for the second coming of Christ and, therefore, no need of resurrection.

But the question will arise as to how Moses went to heaven if people do not go when they die. The answer is plain. He was raised from the dead. Hence the reason why Satan, according to Jude 9, disputed with the Lord when the body was raised. The enemy claimed to have a right to the tomb, but as his claim was false, the Lord rebuked him for it.

Mr. Johnston also referred to the raising of Lazarus as a proof of the power of Christ. The fact that one person, a human being like us, was raised from the dead by the power of Christ, is a proof that all can be raised by the same. And all will be raised, as it says in John 5:28, and when the Saints are raised, that vast multitude now sleeping in the tomb, will be changed to immortality, and taken to heaven for the first time. Then they will live eternally—1,000 years will be occupied in heaven and after that they will live in the earth made new.

A splendid gathering were present and listened with much interest. Mr. Johnston is soon to leave this city for Ottawa, and another will shortly take his place here. He requested all present to give to his successor the same hearty support that has been given him since he has been here.

14TH, "HOLD ON AT ALL COST" WAS THE ORDER GIVEN

with two companies of our battalion and some of the 10th Battalion made an attack. We heard the fellows shout "Come on boys," so we knew they had attacked the enemy. About half on hour later the rifle fire sounded quite a distance off, so we knew by that that we had driven them back quite a piece. It was in this attack we recaptured our 4.7 battery.

Under Hot Fire.

The next morning about 8 o'clock a company of the Queen's Own came up with some of the Buffs, and we had to give up our trench to them. It was now broad daylight and, the Germans were continually sniping at us, so we had to leave the trench in batches of six. The range from where we were was about 600 or 700 yards. We lost only two men. Our Colonel then took us around by a hedge and into a field. We lay down in extended order. The idea was to try to get up into the first line of trenches to reinforce the 16th Highlanders as they had lost a lot of men in the attack the night before. We hadn't got very far before we were spotted by a German biplane. A few minutes afterward they started shelling us. They put a few in front of us and a few behind. Things were beginning to get pretty hot out there in the open, so we got the order to retire again to the hedge. We then dug ourselves in again and stopped there till dusk.

Hungry As the Dickens.

It was now Friday evening, and we were feeling as hungry as the 'dickens' We hadn't had anything to eat since Thursday noon. The officers were the same. They likewise had not brought anything with them. However, our officer, Lt. Whitehead, told us some rations were coming up that night, and that we were going to another part of the line. So we left a party behind for the rations, and proceeded on our new journey. I think it was a couple of miles south of St. Judien. I wouldn't be sure as it was pretty dark, and we went in a round about way. As we went through one small village where the houses were almost shelled to the ground, we came across a box of biscuits, and our officer shared them up between us. While this was in progress a couple of German shells came over, but they both fell short and didn't do any damage. (Just received your letter dated April 14). So we proceeded on our journey, digging into our biscuits as if we hadn't had anything to eat for a month, instead of two days. I was so taken in at the find that I didn't notice the weight of the 600 rounds of ammunition I was carrying. We went on for about two more miles and then reached our destination.

A Memorable Day.

It was now about 11 p.m. and we got the order to dig ourselves in. About 3:30 a.m. we finished our trench and the N.C.O. had just finished serving out the rations when rapid fire started on our right. Down came are order to stand to. So began Saturday, April 24th, 1915, the day I shall never forget as long as I live. Five minutes later over came shells in dozens, all sizes, from 14 pounders to shells 17 inches in diameter. They got the range on our trench in no time, and for about an hour and a half we had the awfullest shelling you could imagine, up and down the line from one end of the trench to the other. Believe me it was hard on the nerves.

Pretext a Light Shadow.

Our parapet only consisted of the loose earth we had dug out of our trench. Twice a shell burst near my parapet and shot the earth over myself and the chap next to me. A little way down on my left some of the shells fell right into the trench; of course there is no need to tell you what happened. It was now getting a desperate moment. Orders were coming up and down the line to beat the band, and we had to shout before we could hear each other. The shells were kicking up a fierce row. A fellow would start to give an order. Then there was a "bang" and the rest of the sentence was drowned. And then the next fellow would say "what's what" and then there was another bang. Well we got them after a while.

Feverish Messages.

I will here give you a few of the messages at the last moment. "Fourteenth hold on at all costs!" . . . "Troops advancing in large numbers on the right." . . . Two minutes later—"They are Germans." . . . "Have the 14th retired?" Ans. "No!" . . . "Will the 14th retire?" Ans. "No!" . . . "Morphine wanted on the left." . . . "The 14th must retire." . . . "What are we to do with the wounded?" . . . "Pass down their bayonets." . . . "Have the 14th retired yet, for God's sake answer?" Ans. No!" . . . "Fourteenth are to retire at once!" "Fourteenth retire."

"We Got Our Medicine."

Seeing we were getting surrounded and our line being very thin with nothing at the back of us we had to retire, and then we got it wholesale, machine guns and shells following each other up to beat the band. Well, this is where we got our medicine. We had to go up a slight decline and the ground was pretty level all the way up, so we were unable to get behind any cover till we got over the ridge at the top. I was pretty cool all the time, so I waited a few minutes and took a good look at the ground. I discovered that in one place the ground went in this shape (diagram of a very wide "V") the line the centre indicating a ditch running from the hill down to the trench. The ground sloped a little each side — ditch 6 inches deep, 8 or 9 inches wide—made for drainage crops on either side—distance to the top of the hill about 800 yards. Some of the chaps tried to make a run for it, I don't think one got through without a bullet in him. Some crawled on their hands and knees and got through, but quite a few got hit in the rear. Only two men took the course I had picked out. I decided to run along the trench till I reached the course I had picked out and then crawl along, frog fashion, taking great care to keep as flat as possible and get as much of myself in the ditch as possible. Of course there was no way out of the shell fire. One had to take chances on that. Next to me was a private named Baby, and next to him was the platoon sergeant.

Well we just started to move along the trench when a shell burst about three feet in front of us. A piece of it caught Baby, in front of me, in the head. The sergeant, Jack Arundell, asked him if he was hit, but got no answer. He was unconscious. He stood upright with his head rested on his arms. The trench was hardly 18 inches wide. In places it was awfully narrow, and fellows who were hit were stuck there upright. This meant jumping out of the trench and in again. I had to do this about five times before I got to the point I wanted to reach. That meant I was a target five times. I felt lots of "pep" coming around me, but none of it hit me.

Well, I got out where the ditch was and lay flat a minute. They stopped peppering at us. Guess they thought I was hit. I hadn't got no more than six yards when one shell came about 15 feet to my left. I hugged the ground, and I heard some of it burst over my back. No sooner did that one go off than it was followed by another. This one came on my right about a foot from my hip. I saw it go into the ground. It looked to be a 14-pounder. It made a hole about 14 or 16 inches wide. I am here to-day because it didn't go off.

Well, I proceeded on my way, making the best of my cover, and I got through without a scratch. The nearest I had after that was when the Germans trailed a machine gun on a dozen of us behind a bit of a heap. I was lying flat at the time, so the shots went over my legs. I could feel them going across, but they were not low enough to hit me. Rifle fire was coming across the other side. It was coming across there when Sergeant Arundell got shot through the chest while helping the platoon officer along. He was hit twice in the foot. Lt. E. A. Whitehead. I had to make a dash for a hedge opposite on account of this machine gun, and then around a building and across the road. I was pretty safe then. My feet were very sore. They had been like that for the last day or two, but I couldn't do anything owing to the situation. So later in the evening, when we were taken back a little way, they were getting worse, having been in one trench with about a foot of water in it. My boots and socks were soaked. I asked a R.A.M.C. chap who had just come up with the new bunch of troops if he could give me something for them. Just then an officer came along, his captain. He told me to take off my boots and show him my feet. He looked at them, stuck a label on my coat and sent me to the dressing station. So I left the field about six o'clock Saturday evening and I wasn't sorry either. I felt all in and tired and hungry as the devil. I was in the hospital up till the night before last, April 28th.

Pte. J. Tully Has Many Narrow Escapes

Former Peterboro' Boy Says It Is Quite a Sensation to See the Man Next to You Blown to Pieces

FIRST AID WORK

A local brother of Private Jack Tully of the Fifth Battalion, First Overseas Contingent, and formerly of Peterborough, has received the following interesting letter from "somewhere in France". It is dated May 9th.

"The duty we performed in other places was only a joke compared with the battle we have just come through. We lost half of our Battalion in action, and the Third Brigade was cut up pretty bad. It is quite a sensation to see the man next to you blown to pieces and more wounded. There a big (shrapnel) shell broke between No. 1 and No. 2 sections of our platoon while advancing. Two of No. 2 section were killed and five wounded. I was next man to MacDonald. The next two were killed. Pretty tight squeak. "Mac" being one of my chums I was detailed to take him to the nearest dressing station, which I did after administering first aid. I had to go about two miles. On my way back I got about where I left the Company who were advancing. I found a fellow with his hand blown off which hadn't been tied up. He had no first aid bandage in his tunic so I used mine and took him to the nearest dressing station and started back again. I didn't care much about travelling alone at night. It was pretty dark. I could see hundreds of shells bursting around me; some were pretty close. I met a fellow at an empty reserve trench that had been hit on the head. It knocked him out for a while. I bandaged his head. He said the Battalion had been relieved while I was away, so the two of us got lost together. We knew where we were, but couldn't find the 5th Battalion, so we chummed up with the 5th Shropshire Regiment, then with the Irish Rifles, and landed at Brigade Headquarters in time to meet our boys coming out. I had no sleep for eight nights and was all in, dead tired and afraid to sit down for fear I couldn't get up again. This has been more like a trip to hell than anything I know of. Now we are rested and anxious to go at it again when we get another draft to fill our ranks. Most of us have had a bath and new underwear. I got your paper and the Peterborough boys all read it. I am well and will drop you a card if we are in action again.

The Annual "Y" Camp

A large number of boys are looking forward to the 29th of June, on which date the local Y.M.C.A. contingent will embark for their annual outing on the shores of Clear Lake. Already twenty of the boys have made application to attend, and it is expected that twice that number will be on the deck when the steamer lands its human cargo at the well-known camping grounds near Kawartha Park.

The summer time is a period of moral deterioration with most boys. Free from the restraint of school and ties at home boys wander during the vacation time into paths of wrongdoing largely because of the lack of directed play life and a natural outlet for the expenditure of their surplus energy. The vacation problem, therefore, becomes a serious one for the boy and his parents. Camping offers a solution. In this regard Prof. C. W. Votaw has said:

"A boy in the process of growing needs the outdoors. He needs room and range. He needs the tonic of the woods and the streams. He needs to walk under the great sky and commune with the stars. He needs to place himself where nature can reach him. He ought to get close to the soil. He ought to be toughened by the sun and the wind, rain and cold. Nothing can take the place for the boy of stout physique, robust health, good blood, firm muscles, sound nerves, for these are the conditions of character and efficiency. The early teens are the most important years for a boy physically. Through the ages of thirteen and fifteen the more than can be done in the open free from social engagements and from continuous labour and study the better. He should fish, swim, row and sail, roam the woods and the waters, get plenty of vigorous action, have interesting, healthful things to think about."

Unfortunately the great majority of parents are so busy that they cannot take time to give the boys even for a short time in the summer, a taste of outdoor camp life. To do so without proper supervision would be detrimental rather than beneficial to the boys' interests. But there is an easy and profitable solution of the problem which offers itself in most alluring terms than ever this year. That is, the annual boys' camp of the Y.M.C.A.

The camp this year will begin on the 29th of June and end on the 11th of July. It will be in charge of the secretary of the boys' department of the Y.M.C.A., and will be run on lines that will insure the boys, not only barrels of fun, but a healthful, invigorating vacation, and an experience to which he will always look back with pleasure. The camp is a feature that local parents will do well not to overlook, as the advantages to their sons offered in this splendidly supervised outing are apparent.

THE RING OF ALLIES—A map showing all the battlefronts in Europe illustrating how the allies' net is gradually closing in on the German-Austrian forces on every front. The entrance of Bulgaria into the war on the allies' side would prove very effective.

"I Am Afraid of One Thing—Am Afraid That I Might Be Afraid" Says Brave Warrior

"I am afraid of one thing — am afraid that I might be afraid!" The man who said these words was just off for the front, as gallant a fellow as could be found to-day under Sir John French's command. He is an amateur scientist of repute, whom the writer has seen pass through his hand an electric current powerful enough to stagger humanity, a man [illegible] all sorts of hair-breadth escapes on dark roads at night with a paralyzing car of his own remaking, and motorcycled on mountain tracks with both brakes out of order. An utterly fearless man, yet he fears, or did fear — for that stage is past—feared that he might be afraid under fire. Well, that man is typical of thousands at the front who are writing British military history in characters whose lustre will not fade.

Men are not cowards because they realize their danger; they are the greatest heroes in that they master their fear. A man afraid of fear will march breast forward to the foe, and he will sit unmoved in the dentist's chair while a villainous tooth is drawn. Our greatest warriors all experience emotion in battle. There is not a more daring man in the British army than Sir Ian Hamilton. He was enthusiastically recommended during the South African War both by Sir John French and Sir George White for the Victoria Cross for incomparable bravery in action, but was denied the distinction as being too high in rank for the honour. He has been in all the fighting of his time, and has been smashed up again and again by wounds, to come up smiling and indomitable as ever.

Every Man Feels It.

Yet Sir Ian once declared to friends at his clubs: "I have always been in a blue funk at the beginning of an action, and wondering how on earth I should get through, and I don't believe that the man has been born who felt much different." That may seem a casual smoke-room jest, but read what he has set down in his book on one of the thrilling pictures that he witnessed in the Manchurian War: "10.30 p.m.—I returned to Kanhuantun at 9, but have been on the roof of my house for the last half-hour. For at about a quarter to 10, just as the moon rose, the firing broke out again on Manjuyama even more furiously than at sunset. The mountains and the river bank and the house re-echo to the continuous angry, growling sound of musketry. The most bitter fighting is illuminating the slopes of the hillock, and I could see its shape outlined by innumerable little dazzling specks, showing the thousands of rounds which were being fired. I wish I had somebody by me to hold me by the hand.'! Yet we know that that man would lead a forlorn hope into the very mouths of the enemy's guns.

Think of all the military heroes of our own time, and ask yourself who was the paragon of physical and moral valour. You will probably decide that Gen. Gordon was that man —Chinese Gordon, leader of the ever-victorious army, heroic defender of Khartoum. Had he no nerves, no qualms? One would say that he could not have had, this man who at the head of little forces of men charged armies numbering hundreds of thousands. Yet read what he wrote in his Khartoum diary, when he was, gazing clear-eyed and unafraid at the death that he knew was coming: "During our blockade we have been discussing the question of being frightened, which, in the world's view, a man should never be. For my own part, I am always frightened and very much so. I fear the future of all engagements. It is not the fear of death; that is past, thank God; but I fear defeat and its consequences. I do not believe a bit in the calm, unmoved man. I think it is only that he does not show it outwardly."

Yet this man, who confesses thus to fear, was found by Gen. Nicholson [illegible] with coolest politics of gunpowder under him, with the lights about of the sappers who were about to lay and explode a mine.

French a Calm Soldier.

Does Gordon's calm, unmoved man exist? If such there be, Sir John French is that man. When the fighting was hottest during the terrible fighting retreat from Mons, he strode through our lines smoking a cigarette as brisk as a bee and with as mellow a hum. Our men noted the cigarette, they noted the demeanor of the smoker, and the two effects were as good to those hard-pressed warriors as a reinforcement of an army corps. That cigarette has already become historic. It matches Moltke's cigar at Koniggratz. The frightful battle seemed to hang on the balance—nay, to Bismarck it seemed lost. He grew afraid, yet not so afraid as to betray his fear nor to lose command of his habitual cunning. He tested Moltke, pulled out his case, offered him a cigar, and closely watched him. The silent warrior critically examined, smelt, selected the best—and Bismarck knew that all was well.

There is an historic lemon, too, which served to stay the nerves of "Stonewall" Jackson on a very bloody field. His staff were falling on all sides around him. "Stonewall" sucked away at his lemon in silence, then, withdrawing the bitter fruit from his lips for a moment, said with a shudder of ecstacy: "Pleasant excitement, isn't it?" Sir John French adds his cigarette to a mutton chop, which has earned its shred of fame. During the Boer War, while he was sitting with officers of his staff at lunch, there came a scared and breathless galloper to report that Boer shells had begun to fall among his cavalry. French's answer was to call loudly for another chop!

But in that same field bad news came to a tent where were men of a different nerve calibre. Junior officers were at mess, when they were suddenly ordered to horse upon a hazardous ride. The men raised their glasses in haste to drink a toast to the success of their foray. One of their number turned deadly pale, and his hand shook so that his wine was spilt. He walked out of the tent with every nerve dancing. But that same nervous young officer, half an hour later, had gloriously won the Victoria Cross.

Bennett Burleigh's Daring.

Then tell of a fine, fat old general in the French army who goes into the firing line with a camp stool and sits amidst the bullets smoking, "Eh bien mes enfants," he will say if his men show signs of wavering. "I am very comfortable here; I do not wish to move." And they stay! Probably few people know it, but Bennet Burleigh, the greatest war correspondent of [illegible] another such a man as this. He saved a British army by his extraordinary coolness and infectious bravery. It was during the Soudan expedition when the fuzzy wuzzies broke our lines at Tamai. Our small force dropped unexpectedly into a nullah which proved to be simply crawling with Dervishes. They leaped up from everywhere. The British force was staggered, surprised, outnumbered. Suddenly a voice was heard, a cheery, confident voice: "Give it to them, boys! Hurrah! Now my lads, give it to them. Hip, hip, hurrah!" It was Bennet Burleigh, fighting like a fiend, and chanting a battle anthem composed upon the spot, and by example, no less than by voice, putting new heart into our men. They caught up the cry, re-echoed it, and scattered the enemy which just previously had seemed destined to annihilate them. Rare Bennet Burleigh!

There was a youthful edition of Bennet Burleigh in the trenches the other week, the youngest of his company. When the others cowered after the death of their last officer, they took the command from their baby, as they called him, took the command to "Fix bayonets and charge," And there were two mad, delightful Irishmen, who, each to test the other's valor, got up together and ran a hundred yards' sprint in full sight of the enemy, and under fire, returning unscratched to their trench, only sighing to repeat the wild adventure. Yet every one of such men has trembled at the first thunder of the guns and wished that the earth would open to admit them.

There are very many men who have this aching fear of being afraid. Counting the risks beforehand, he may, some time add two and two and make the answer five. But he will end up, like his commander-in-chief, with his cigarette in the firing line, or by running a foot race between the enemy's trenches and his own.—Saturday Journal, London.

BASEBALL

In the final game of the Junior Baseball League, played yesterday afternoon at the King Edward School grounds, the King Edward team defeated the South Central by the rather one-sided score of 16—4. The batteries were: King Edward—Daynard and Blondon; South Central—Montgomery, Fuller and Bailey.

Crop Outlook Never Better

Now that June has superseded the variable month of May, farmers should have less cause to worry about the weather, actual and prospective, than they did when the previous month occupied the stage. Cupid's banner month so seldom produces a frost of sufficient intensity to injure the growing crops that farmers have long regarded it as incapable of producing anything worse than a brand new crop of "happily married couples." The crop situation as viewed by Peterborough County farmers is unusually good. If nothing happens to retard the present rapid growth, haying should be under way in another month or six weeks.

Conditions in the West.

Calgary—"During residence of over twenty-four years in this province, I have never seen crop prospects better than they are at present. Indeed I may say that I have never seen them so good."

In these emphatic words President James Speakman, of the United Farmers of Alberta, summed up the impressions he has received concerning the present crop conditions as a result of both personal observation from a tour of South Alberta and of reports from all parts of the province.

'Rain appears to have been ample all over Alberta," he said, "although more has fallen in the south than in the north, but everywhere crops are looking fine and are fully two weeks ahead of the ordinary years. The rains have also greatly benefitted pasture lands."

Saskatoon— Variable weather during the past week has, on the whole, been favourable for the crops. Light and scattered rains fell and these are always welcomed at this season. Weather has turned from dull and cloudy to warm and unsettled. Crops are looking well and are in no need of anything more than sunshine to bring them along. Farming experts report conditions most favourable.

Edmonton— Rains almost continuous during the past few days have given grain growers enough moisture to insure germination of late seed and keep up the growth of early seeding. Wheat is coming up about thirty per cent. better than was the case last year.

Regina—J. A. Mooney, on returning from a trip through the Regina district, reports that grain is growing rapidly in many places. Crop conditions are, however, considered excellent and a good harvest appears probable.

ARMY IS NO PLACE FOR LIARS

Thomas Onions, 27 years old, described as a baker, was charged at the South-Western Court in London, Eng., with making a false statement when enlisting in the County of London Regiment.

The accused, it was said, had been discharged from the King's Royal Rifles, and also the East Surrey Regiment, as he was considered no good as a soldier. He then joined the County of London Regiment, and here again the authorities had no need for him owing to his state of health.

Prisoner pleaded that he was anxious to serve his country. He confessed, however, that he had told a falsehood and he was sentenced to a month's imprisonement.

Sergt. Allen Badly Hurt

Shell Burst Near His Head, Tearing Clothes From His Back

To have a shell burst so close to him that his shoulder was badly injured, his clothing torn off and his back terribly burned was the experience of Sergt. Geo. W. Allen, of Peterborough, at the front with the 10th Battery. Sergt. Allen was reported wounded some time ago, and letters just received from his wife at 555 Chamberlain Street give the details of his injuries.

In one letter he says: "I am glad to say that my wounds are healing first-class, and I managed to get up yesterday for about ten minutes, but I had to faint, so I guess I shall have to stay in bed for a couple of days yet. I have been through awful agony, but have not had to yell yet. The shell that burst near my head tore all the clothes off my back and burned it shockingly. The nurses said they did not know how I lived through the agony. I would not let them give me any morphine as if I had to die I wanted to die conscious, but I am glad to say that all danger has now passed. I have not got the use of my left arm yet, but the nurse says that about two weeks' good massage will put that right. They don't know whether I have any bones broken in my shoulder yet or not."

In an earlier letter Sergt. Allen says: "I suppose you have heard that we were in action at Langemarck, near Ypres, and that the Algerians gave way and left us in a pretty bad hole, but you could not blame them on account of the awful gas that the Germans let loose. We could see it in a big green cloud, stretching for about three miles long on our left flank. From the time we saw the cloud it was only half an hour before the Algerians were running past our guns, even crowding around the guns, and before an hour the Germans had us surrounded.

FIRED POINT BLANK.

"The only thing we could do was to place our guns in a circle and fire point blank every time they attempted to charge us. We had orders from Divisional Headquarters to retire if possible, but our horses were three miles away. A man was sent up for them, and he had to fight his way through the Germans. After losing over 70 horses and seven drivers we had four horses left and managed to get our guns out with them.

GO INTO ACTION AGAIN.

"As soon as we got to St. Julien the ammunition column supplied us with horses and we were put in action at once, supporting the French. After two days helping them we were sent back to St. Julien, and they started the British advance again. The shell fire at this place was awful, thousands of shells coming hourly from three directions. I lost my corporal, my bombardier and four gunners, and was eventually left with one gunner and myself. We got orders to cease firing for half an hour, and I had just dressed Gunner Everest's wounds and sat down alongside him when a shell burst in the sand-bags over my head, killing Jimmy and throwing me across the gun; at least that was where I found myself when I came to. I picked myself up and walked around the gun again, when I saw poor Jimmy was dead, or looked like it. The gunners from the other gun had got a stretcher, and that was the last I knew until I was in the ambulance on my back at Ypres. I have been in four hospitals in France, and now have arrived in England."

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, June 1.—Interboro Met. stockholders have formally approved the readjustment plan.

NEW YORK, June 1.—Very little was done in second hour, but at noon the market was very steady. The street in general was favourable, impressed by the complete absence of nervousness or rather the firm determination on part of holders of stocks to retain their holdings despite the imminence of important international developments. Break in the wheat market was the result of favourable crop conditions, a factor which but for the international difficultigs might send stocks up as grain prices went down.

C. and O. which had been a weak feature a few days ago, was steady, and the selling movement in it appeared to have run its course. It was quite generally believed that dividend would be passed, but such action it was suggested has already been discounted.

The market closed strong with manifest indications of an upward movement. Beth. Steel made a net gain of ten points.

CHICAGO, June 1.—Wheat active and wheat. Grain in Winnipeg Monday, favourable harvesting weather in southwest, weaker cables from Liverpool, and general unsettled political situation were depressing factors. Corn and Oats—Easier.

YOUNG SOCIETY MATRON LAYS DOWN RULES

In discussing the approaching social season a young matron says that the success of every undertaking in home, church or Club, depends upon the foresight of the women months before.

The brilliancy, charm and success of a party is dependent upon the physical condition of the hostess. She cannot be entertaining witty or clever, if she is loaded down with all the complaints a woman is heir to; and very few are free from the troubles which bring with them dizziness, backache, sick headache, sleeplessness and intense nervousness.

Thousands upon thousands of mothers, wives and daughters in every section of this great country, who have regained health, vigour and cheerful disposition after months of misery and even despair are the ones who truly appreciate the marvelous restorative power of Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription.

Every woman who has reason to believe that backache, headache, unnatural pains, low spirits, sleepless nights, is caused by a derangement of the womanly functions, owes it to herself and dear ones to speedily overcome the trouble before a general breakdown causes permanent prostration.

Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription is a remedy that any ailing woman can safely take because it is prepared with pure glycerine from roots and herbs, containing tonic properties of the most pronounced character and without alcohol.

Get Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription to-day, either in liquid or tablet form, at any drug dealer in medicines, if you want to better your physical condition surely and speedily. Every ingredient in Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription is printed along with the directions.

Every ailing woman should write to-day for confidential advice to a specialist who has had years of experience in treating diseases peculiar to women. His advice is given without charge, and writing places you under no obligation whatever. Simply address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y.

The Fighting Around Peremysl Has Reached The Critical Stage

Russians and Germans Engaged in Titanic Struggle for Possession of the Galician Fortress---Russia Does Not Admit Berlin Claim of Capturing Peremysl Forts.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 1.—The fighting around Peremysl has reached its critical stage, and since Sunday Russians and Germans have been engaged in a titanic struggle for the possession of the northern and western defences of the Galician fortress.

The official news of the results of this battle so far from the opposing camps is in direct conflict. To-night's report from Petrograd states that a series of forts known by the numbers of 7 to 11 have been the object of the Austro-German attack, and declares that a battle lasting from Sunday night to the middle of Monday afternoon resulted in the enemy being repulsed with enormous loss, though for a time he secured a footing with the precincts of fort 7. Berlin, on the other hand, alleges that forts 10-A, 11-A and 12 were stormed and occupied the the Austro-Germans on Monday.

Vienna claims to-night that Borj, to the southeast of Peremysl, has been captured from the Russians. Concerning this part of the battle front Petrograd says merely that the result of the fighting is not yet known, and adds that further east over 10,000 prisoners have been taken by the Russians in two days.

RUSSIAN OFFICIAL REPORT.

The text of to-night's report from Petrograd is as follows:

"In the region of Shavli (Courland) there has been no important change. West of the village of Kurkoviany the fighting continues on the front of Travliany-Gailiski. We captured Monday, after a bayonet fight, the latter village, which was strongly organized, and which the Germans defended stubbornly.

"On the left bank of the Vistula Monday night the enemy developed a very active artillery fire on the whole front north of the Pilica River. Toward 4 o'clock in the morning the enemy, spreading a cloud of smoke and making an extensive use of deleterious gas, attacked with considerable forces our position on the Bzura River near Brohow, Sochaczew and Koulow, and displayed special tenacity on the lower Rawka River, in the sector marked by the villages of Miserka, Volia and Szidlowska. Despite the expenditure of an enormous quantity of asphyxiating gas, the odour of which was perceptible 30 versts (about 20 miles behind our front, all the enemy attacks were repulsed.

"In Galicia, the enemy, after preparations made during the preceding days, opened on Sunday a violent fire, and delivered a series of attacks against our front, west and northwest of Peremysl, defined by the line of forts from No. 7 to No. 11. During Sunday night the enemy succeeded in approaching to within two hundred paces of some of these sectors, and attacked and even broke into the precincts of fort No. 7, around which surged an obstinate fight, which lasted until two o'clock on the afternoon of Monday, when the enemy was repulsed with enormous losses. The remnants of the enemy who had entered fort No. 7, numbering 23 officers and 600 men, were taken prisoners.

GERMANS NEAR STRY.

"On the front above the Dniester the enemy, consisting mainly of Germans, threw their reserves into battle in the region close to Stry. The result of the fighting here is not yet known. On the River Svitza our troops continue their success. Of the prisoners taken here, those counted between May 28 and 30 while on their way to the rear, numbered 238 officers and 10,442 men."

It is apparent that the Russians, since being forced back to the San, have been rushing up heavy reinforcements in the hope of averting the fall of Peremysl. But the Austro-Germans, undeterred by stupendous losses, have as yet shown little disposition to accept a purely defensive role, and the British critics believe it is yet premature to say that the German thrust has definitely failed.

To-day's German official report states that Forts 10-A, 11-A and 12 of the Peremysl defences were taken by storm Monday by Bavarian troops, resulting in the capture of 18 heavy and five light cannon, with the survivors of a garrison of 1,400 men. The Berlin report declares that Russian massed attacks east of Jaroslau, by which "the Russians attempted to escape their fate," broke down in front of the German lines, and that great numbers of Russian dead were left on the field.

Child's Play To The Battle Now Raging

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, Wednesday, June 2. — The Daily Chronicle correspondent at Petrograd cables: "It is hard to imagine anything more tremendous than the battle now raging around Peremysl. The neat, compact and picturesque battles of the Napoleonic days were child's play compared with this latest effort of modern warfare, in which details of personal valour, skilful moves and counter-moves are submerged in the blinding and deafening clash of vast hosts. Between Jaroslau and Peremysl Mackenzen has concentrated on the right bank of the San a million men with a corresponding quantity of artillery. The quiet fields on which the peasants were peacefully ploughing when I passed over them six weeks ago are now deluged by a storm of explosives such as has never before been known in all history. The hopeful feature in this carnage on the San is that the Russians are delaying the German advance, and, more than that, in counter-attacks are taking thousands of prisoners. Time, which is all important to the Germans, is slipping out of their hands. Mackenzen's aim is to reach the Peremysl-Lvoff railway, and, meeting the force which has been struggling to break through the Russian lines south-east of Peremysl, to surround the fortress. But the southern force, after a long series of unavailing attacks, is now passive, and communications to Peremysl are still safe."

The Italians Have Advanced 13 Miles Over the Frontier

Italian Armies Continue to Occupy New Austrian Positions ---Tri-Colour Has Been Hoisted on Coni Zugena

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ROME, June 2.—"Avanti Avanti" is the motto of the Italians invading the Austrian territory. News of fresh progress received yesterday concerns several points beyond the frontier where the infantry is gradually pressing forward on Alpine roads and in the mountain gorges. Hour by hour they are occupying Austrian positions which one by one the Italians' heavy artillery has battered to pieces. Monday night, after a stiff fight lasting several hours, the Italian tri-colour was hoisted on the heights of Coni Zugena, which hill is over 6,000 feet high. This cone-like eminence dominates alike the east bank of the Adige which flows past the foothills of Zugena and the railway line running north through Rovereto to Trent.

In the taking of Coni Zugena the Italian infantry did some splendid bayonet work. Several regiments concerned pushed forward from Ala and began a stiff ascent of the towering chain of hills which is bristling with Austrian guns. Upwards and onwards went the Italians undismayed by the fire from the Austrian stronghold. In vain the Austrians attempted to stem the rising tide of the Bersaglieri and Alpinists who, despite the enormous natural and artificial obstacles of their position, pressed forward with splendid courage.

WORK WITH THE BAYONET.

Some of the storming party before coming to close grip with the enemy put aside their knapsacks to give themselves greater freedom of action, rolled up their sleeves and when the moment came charged home grimly with bayonet, completely routing the Austrians. Then there was no restraining impetuosity of the Italians who to the cries of "Viva l'Italie" pressed hotly on the heels of the beaten enemy. So far then the Italians are holding strongly that portion of the Austrian Adige valley which lies deep between the mountains of Baldo and Lessini and their far-reaching northern spurs. So far, and that is 13 miles from the frontier, have the conquered Austrians fallen back. This brings them to their next line of defences south of Trent. These works stretch as far to the south as the bridge spanning the Adige near the railway station between Mori and Rovereto. Its approaches are defended by a triple line of fortifications which rise from the left bank of the Adige, strengthened by what is known technically as wolftraps.

After Weeks of Hard Fighting Ablain Is In Hands of French

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, June 2—Ablain-St. Nazaire is now entirely in the hands of the French. After weeks of the hardest kind of fighting since the German drive the town with all its defences, as well as 500 prisoners, munitions and foodstuffs, was taken. On May 26 the same divisions which had previously captured Carency again did magnificent work. With fixed bayonets they charged through the cemetery, which had been fortified, each tombstone having been raised and stood upright in the ground. But the French charge was too much for the Germans, who soon surrendered. Four hundred of them, including seven officers, ran towards the French lines, lifting their hands in token of surrender, while they dodged the fire of their own artillery which was turned and aimed at them.

Five hundred German bodies were found in the ruins.

After two days of heavy fighting north of Arras, in which the German losses are said to have been very heavy, the French remain masters of Souchez and the neighbouring woods. The fighting in this region was especially fierce around a sugar factory in Souchez, which was alternately held by the [illegible] and the Germans. It is now definitely in the hands of the French.

There has been heavy fighting also in the regions known as the "Labyrinth," a series of strongly fortified trenches held by the Germans. The French [illegible] last night's official, are gradually breaking down the enemy's resistance and raising his works one by one.

GERMANY WILL HAVE TO MAKE DIRECT REPLY

Will Have to Declare Herself on These Principles of the Laws of Nations and Humanity.

WAS UNRESPONSIVE

SPECIAL CABLE:

WASHINGTON, June 2.—President Wilson and his advisers, after considering Germany's reply in the Cabinet meeting to-day agreed on this general proposition:

That it is necessary to require Germany to declare herself on these principles which have been invoked by the United States and ignored by Germany in her reply.

The probability is that the United States will ask for such an expression from Germany before consenting to any discussion of the allied facts recited by Germany in reference to the Lusitania. A majority of the Cabinet members are in favour of such a course, and the understanding is that the President at present is inclined toward it, and has begun the preparation of a note to be despatched to Berlin at the end of the week.

The opinion at the Cabinet meeting to-day was unanimous that Germany must meet the United States squarely on the vital and fundamental issues involved in the acts growing out of her submarine programme before any adjustment of the situation can be hoped for. It was agreed that Germany has thus far wholly failed to satisfy the United States in this regard.

To Meet Again Friday.

There was no effort made by the President at to-day's meeting of the Cabinet to determine finally the actual details of the next step which the United States must take in dealing with Germany. He contended himself with obtaining the views of his advisers, and at the Cabinet gathering next Friday he will submit to them a draft of a note expressing the conclusions reached as the result of his own views and those of his official family.

The verdict of a majority of the Cabinet yesterday was that the German reply to the American note following the sinking of the Lusitania was unresponsive and unsatisfactory, disregarded the good-will of the United States, doubted its facts, and disclaimed all blame for the destruction of the merchantman with American lives. The questions of fact raised by Germany were regarded as irrelevant at this time. The trend of opinion was that the United States must enquire and obtain an early answer as to whether Germany intends to recognize the hitherto accepted principle that neutrals may travel anywhere on the high seas on unarmed merchant ships, whether or not such vessels carry contraband, and that merchantmen which do not resist capture must be visited and searched and the passengers and crew transferred to a place of safety before the vessel is destroyed.

An unfavourable answer to this enquiry would lead, it was predicted in official quarters, to a severance of diplomatic relations, on the ground that the United States could not continue intercourse with a Government which repudiated these principles.

Foreigners Have To Register

Special to the Examiner.

BERLIN, via the Hague, June 2.—Many Americans formally registered their names and addresses to-day in accordance with a recent order providing for registration of all foreigners in Germany between June 1 and 40. Turks and Austrians excepted.

A Michigan inventor has brought out a portable refrigerator, somewhat resembling a suit case, in which there is a chamber for cracked ice above a compartment for holding perishable goods.

SAYS HE TOOK DOWN CRUCIFIED MAN

Prussian Guards Were Responsible for the Atrocious Deed

Special to The Examiner.

LONDON, June 2.—Pte. George Barrie, of the 13th Royal Highlanders, who was wounded, but expects to rejoin his unit immediately, says he was one who helped to take down the body of a Canadian which had been crucified by the Germans in the fighting around Ypres. The victim, says Barrie, was a sergeant in the medical service. From letters on him he appeared to come from Brantford, Ont. Barrie says he lost the sergeant's pay book and letters in thrusting through barbed wire entanglements. The victim was about 24 years old, and was found with one Ross rifle bayonet through his shoulder, also a Lee-Enfield bayonet through his right, two German bayonets through his legs, and directly through the lower parts of the body. The maltreaters were the 2nd Prussian Guards.

Police Force Was Inspected

The local police force was inspected yesterday afternoon by His Honour Judge Huycke and Police Magistrate Dumble of the Board of Police Commissioners. The occasion was the initial appearance of the men in their new summer uniforms. They were lined up in the police court chamber where they were given the "once over" by the officials, after which the squad was addressed by both Judge Huycke and Magistrate Dumble.

His Honour congratulated the men upon their fine appearance and expressed the hope that they would always uphold the honour and dignity of the force.

Magistrate Dumble remarked that he probably knew as much about the workings of the police force as anybody, in consequence of his old magisterial capacity. He concurred in Judge Huycke's opinion as to the fine appearance of the men.

The men who participated in the inspection were Sergeants Brown, Kidd, Reid, Constables Dickson, McCarthy, Dennard, Slade, Lawrence and Detective Meagher.

Following the inspection Chief Thompson put the men through a brief drill.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

CHAPTER XIII.
'JUST A LITTLE DRINK.

An old man by the name of Baldy Hagus had located himself about two miles south of Dan Cooper's, and he had a wooden leg, a wife, and six children, the oldest of 'em bein' a long-nosed gal, and the rest boys, rangin' in age from seven to eighteen.

Baldy Hagus was a right reverend sinner, sure enough, and Jim used to get him to do odd jobs for him, but wouldn't never trust him, 'cause he had liftin' ways. Anything he saw which attracted his attention he'd try to lift, and if he was able to lift it, that proved it belonged to him. He never would take a thing that he couldn't lift alone, but still he was somewhat of a bother. Jim raised some oats, barley, and one thing and another to feed to the stallions, mules and such, and Baldy Hagus had allus tended to this department, Jim furnishin' the work-animals and tools, and Baldy Hagus furnishin' his family to do the work. Baldy Hagus's family had also done the most of the ditch-and-wall fencin"

Baldy himself, was the main boss and he was just lazy enough to be a good parent. Parents which do too much for their children in the way of example are apt to make a botch of it, 'cause stackin' up for a steady ideal is a tryin' job; but those parents who have the grit to make their offspring ibnore example and line out accordin' to precept don't have to put such an easy-goin' limit on a child's moral conduct, and every last one of the Hagus children were models of virtue. Their mother was a good, hard-workin' cook, and she kept 'em patched and clean; but she owned up that she didn't have the heart to belt a child for doin' what she did herself, and so Baldy tended to all the disciplinin"

Baldy Hagus had the gift of showin' respect when he felt like it, and he used to come over and fawn on Jim whenever he wanted to raise a little stake. After he'd wagged his tail around Jim for about ten minutes, he'd suggest in an off-hand way some needed improvement, and Jim would allus give him the contract to do it.

A lot of folks didn't like Baldy's liftin' ways and just before Jim had left to trail his herd to market Baldy had been shot through his hat while ridin' home in the dusk, and this had sobered him so that he turned him over a new leaf and quit drinkin' until he had enough saved up to buy him a big silver watch, which he said would be a token of his changed life. He used to pull out that watch once every minute along toward quittin' time, and while it sure prevented him from ever doin' any overtime, that timepiece didn't save no time for the feller that hired Baldy Hagus.

Well the very next day after Dan Cooper had told me of twenty-five good young bulls he had located about ten miles north of Big Jeff Johnson's, Baldy Hagus brought his sons over to cradle grain, and as he could tend to all the chorin', I took the whole outfit, includin' Tom Smith and even Flames, the kid, and went after the bulls. We took our beds and chuck on some gentle hosses which we herded right in with our extra mounts, and we figured on making the rounds trip in two days.

The boys all stopped in at Jeff's again and they rawhided Tom Smith worse 'n before; but he still refused to drink with 'em. A half-dozen fellers were all sittin' in the back end of the store and they made comments, but not sufficiently pointed to require takin' up. Tom Smith had proved to be a good sort, after all, and the boys all liked him, though they couldn't help lookin' down on him some because he wasn't gamer. He had practised shootin' quite a bit, but didn't seem to have the gift, nor he couldn't seem to learn the geography of a double-cinch saddle, so he didn't handle the cows much; but he suited Jim fine about the hosses, and he had a lot of helpful little half-girlish ways which was comfortin' to the men, even though they made 'em scornful. Tom Smith could use a needle better 'n most women.

This time after the boys had taken a couple of drinks, Tom Smith went outside and waited for 'm to join him, which Red was the, first to do, he havin' taken to Smith more than any of the rest. He talked earnest to Tom Smith and told him pointedly that if he would just do some drinkin' with the boys once, they wouldn't bother him any more, but he shook his head and said his neuralgie was comin' back on him.

The river was low and we crossed without any fuss, and reached the ranch where the bulls were, before sundown. The bulls were all right, and were out of northern stock, bein' better sized than those from below in everything but horns.

We started back with 'em next mronin' and they drove as easy as so many steers, so that we had 'em across the river by ten o'clock. Red had been talkin' earnest to Flames along the way, and I feared that he had some sort of a jink cookin', so I watched close. I told 'em they'd have to take their drinkin' in relays as we didn't have any guarantee as to how long the bulls were goin' to travel on their good behaviour. We all felt purty good to get the bunch across the river without any fuss and I had made the drinks on me and intended to tuck away a couple myself; so I sat on my pony at the doow and kept my eye on the bulls and my ear on the boys as they went inside.

The rest had all gone through the ordeal without much show or fuss and as soon as they came out they joined company with the bulls and kept 'em movin' right along; but when Tom Smith and Red came up at last for their turn, they were in a stiff argument and Flames, the kid, rode close by lookin' important, which never was no great strain for him, the Lord knows.

Tom Smith sat on his hoss close to the door with his face long and serious, as Red and the kid got off and went inside. I glanced purty intent at Tom Smith and was struck by the great change in him, though hanged if I could place it, at first. His neuralgie had come back some and he had tied up his face again; but that wasn't it.

It was a sort of a general stiffenin' up all around, like tightenin' up the tent-ropes after it's dried off again. That was it, he was sittin' his hoss right for the first time, and his mind was intent on something else. I was so interested in this that I plumb forgot Red and that imp of a kid until of a sudden, Tom Smith flung himself from his hoss and said in low, clear tones: "No, I'll be hanged if I let that kid drink!!"

Along with shootin', ropin', and such, Red had been tryin' to teach Tom Smith how to swear with sense and feelin', but Tom Smith had never took to it with any degree of skill, yet this time he spoke his little cuss-word as natural as the best of us could. He sailed up to the bar just as Flames was raisin' his glass to his lips, and he caught that glass a side-swipe with his left hand and sent it flyin' to the rear of the store.

"I'll drink," sez he to Red, "I'll drink, I'll drink enough to fit you out from top to bottom; but I warn you right here that if ever you try to make that kid drink again, I'll make you sorry that drink was ever invented."

His words were bitter as gall and they came out a-crackin' like a volley from ambush. Red backed again' the bar with his glass in his hand and stared at Tom Smith as though Tom Smith had suddenly turned into a rattlesnake. Big Jeff also was so surprised that the scar on his face tightened 'till his lip was lifted clear of his teeth, givin' him such a gruesome expression that even if he'd been tied hand and foot a mad wolf wouldn't have thought it prudent to bite him from the rear.

They stood thus for a long, dragmy moment, and then a quiet voice sez: "You seem to be makin' yourself mighty much at home around here—comin' in and knockin' whisky out o' the kid's hand and all over me."

The speaker had come from out of the gloom in the rear of the store and he was followed by six others, all of 'em lookin' tough and unorganized. When I got a good glimpse of him, I had a little sinkin' spell on Tom Smith's account, for the feller who stood glarin' into him was the man who had slept to one side of that camp-fire so I'd know as light as a panther while the two shots whizzed by him.

His face was to the door now and I could see his eyes plain, they were cat's eyes sure enough, and shivery to a degree. The balls didn't quite fill the space between the lids, and the rim of white around 'em gave 'm an inhuman look while the pupils seemed like points of fire. A child could see 'at this feller was a competent killer, and I didn't just see how Tom Smith was goin' to get out of it. I had been glad to see him find his nerve at last when it was only Red and Big Jeff; but I'm allus prejudiced again' havin' one of my pups get licked to a finish in his first fight, and this sure looked like real trouble.

Mrs. Reiner So Weak—Could Not Do Her Work—Found Relief In Novel Way.

Adrian, Mich. — "I suffered terribly with female weakness and backache and got so weak that I could hardly do my work. When I washed my dishes I had to sit down and when I would sweep the floor I would get so weak that I would have to get a drink every few minutes, and before I did my ironing I would have to lie down. I got so poorly that my folks thought I was going into consumption. One day I found a piece of paper blowing around the yard and I picked it up and read it. It said 'Saved from the Grave,' and told what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for women. I showed it to my husband and he said, 'Why don't you try it?' So I did, and after I had taken two bottles I felt better and I said to my husband, 'I don't need any more,' and he said 'You had better take it a little longer anyway.' So I took it for three months and got well and strong." — Mrs. ALONZO E. BAKER, 9 Tecumseh St., Adrian, Mich.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

HE FOUND HIS OWN

Fireman Unknowingly Rescues His Own Baby Girl From Burning Building.

By HAROLD CARTER.

The first loud clang of the alarm had hardly ceased to echo through the quarters of the sleeping firemen when Halloran had sprung to his feet, his eyes still closed with sleep, found the thick pole, and slid down to the stable, first of his companions. Underneath the horses were neighing excitedly in their stalls. They pictured the gallop through the streets, to the blaze, with the loaded ladder car clattering behind, the urging shouts of the driver. Halloran pictured it grimly, too. It was not his first fire, but it was his first big one. Everybody knew that it was a big one. Why, a whole block of tenements was burning on the East side!

He was at his post upon the car now, holding on grimly as the vehicle swung from side to side. The horses dashed through the deserted streets, and from a thousand windows heads were thrust out and cries and questions showered upon the men. Nobody answered, nobody thought of them. All eyes were turned toward the east, where a line of flame lit up the sky.

Halloran's mind went working back during that wild journey. He had been a fireman only six weeks. He was an ex-convict. Nobody knew that—nobody except Chief Porter. And Porter had believed in him and had kept his secret faithfully. After three years in Sing Sing for a crime that should, at most, have merited a short period of detention in Elmira reformatory, Halloran had been embittered against society. And Porter had found him and plucked him out of the mud and given him his post. Porter believed in him.

But Eileen, his young wife, did not. They had been married only three months when he had stolen the purse, to give her those little comforts which she needed so badly. She had stood in the court beside the pen and watched him with eyes full of anguish and yet of hope. But when the dread word "guilty" was pronounced she turned and walked slowly away without a word to him. That was the last Halloran had seen of her, or heard, either. She had never visited him in prison, she had never answered his letters. When he came out to freedom Eileen was gone. Her friends could not be found. Her family had disowned. There was no trace of her.

Then Porter had found Halloran and picked him out of the mud and made a fireman of him. Some day he would show Porter that he was worthy of his confidence.

The wild journey was ended in front of a block of flames that sent up columns of smoke and spouted fire. The street was guarded by police, who kept back the gathering thousands. Lines of dripping hose writhed like long serpents over the cobblestones and sidewalks. Halloran's company was the last of three to arrive; but there was nothing more to be done except to play the hose upon the burning walls. All the occupants of the basements had long since been removed or fled to safety.

Stood on the sill for an instant.

No! Suddenly a cry went up from the multitudes. Far up on the seventh story a child was leaning out of the window, uttering a feeble cry. A little brown-haired slip of a girl, with outstretched arms and clinging night robe, crying in terror as the ceiling smoke surged round her. Ladders had been run up. "Too short!" shouted a man. That was all Halloran knew. He was already upon the lowest part of the ladder and climbing steadily.

He rose and rose above the tops of buses, until he neared the top of his slender, quivering perch. Then for a moment he looked down. A sickening horror swept over him as he saw the human ants beneath him, with their upturned faces, silent in the face of this tremendous battle. Then he looked upward again. The child still hung in the midst of the coiling smoke wreaths and he was at the top of the ladder, and a full two stories beneath her.

He poised himself and sprang and caught the sill of the window of the fifth story; caught it and leapt there. Then he drew himself up, stood on the sill for an instant, and plunged into the hell within.

Two minutes later a gasp went up from the watchers as they saw a staggering, smoke-blackened figure appear at the window of the seventh story and drag the child upon the sill. It was Halloran. Angry tongues of fire darted out at him, licked at his clothes, greedy for their prey.

Halloran clung to the sill and looked down. The crowd was shouting to him not to jump. The firemen were splicing on another ladder and raising it. Could he last long enough or would the agony of burned flesh and scorching clothing impel him to cast himself down? Halloran prayed for strength, but it was only that slight figure in his arms that gave him the courage to wait.

Slowly the ladder upreared itself until it reached the sill. Halloran felt for it through a cloud of flame-tipped smoke in which whirled fiery, stinging sparks, clung to it with his feet, perched himself upon that swaying thing and thrust the child into the arms of the man who had climbed up to him. And then, when she had passed downward along the line, Halloran collapsed into his rescuer's arms.

At the foot of the ladder was a woman who had broken through the police lines. So tense was her face with anguish that they had suffered her to pass; and now she clasped the child to her breast and laughed and crooned over it, oblivious of all else. The child was soundless. Not a hair had been burned. Halloran's thick coat, scorched to a crisp, bore witness to that. And Halloran, a fire-blackened ruin, with burned-off hair and singed eyebrows and hands that rested limply in the surgeon's bandages, opened his eyes to find the woman kneeling over him.

"He'll do well now," exclaimed the police surgeon.

"Sure he will!" cried the voice of Porter, the fire chief, and in his tones was something that set Halloran's doubts at rest for ever.

But it was not of Porter that he thought that moment. The burned eyes opened widely, staring into the face of the woman at his side. And he whispered:

"Eileen!"

She knew him, had known him. She crouched lower beside him and laid her head upon his breast, her tears falling on his face like rain.

"Tom!" she whispered. "She's ours—your child and mine. And we shall be waiting for you, Tom dear, to make a new home for all our lives."

HIS HEALTH IN A TERRIBLE STATE

"Fruit-a-tives" Healed His Kidneys and Cured Him

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., AUG. 26th, 1913.

Their action was mild and the result all that could be expected.

My Kidneys resumed their normal action after I had taken upwards of a dozen boxes, and I regained my old-time vitality. Today, I am enjoying the best health I have ever had!".

SOMETHING ABOUT GRAIN

THE following experience has been gained from the field trials on the state demonstration farms in North Dakota during the past eight seasons.

Grain may be harrowed to good advantage after it is four to six inches high, providing the soil is firm, the harrow light, and the day warm, dry and the sun shining brightly. Wheat and oats may be harrowed to good advantage just before they come up. If barley or flax are harrowed at any time after they are up, great injury to the crop will result. Wheat and oats are the small grain crops that can be harrowed to best advantage, but great injury may result if the ground is harrowed during cold, damp weather, when the dew is on the young plants when they are less than four inches high, when the soil is loose, when too heavy a harrow is used, or when a heavy, dashing rain falls within 24 hours after.

Experience on the demonstration farms indicates that the best time to harrow is just when the seed is beginning to germinate, which is usually a week or ten days after seeding. There is no implement as good as the harrow for exterminating annual weeds which start from small seeds, such as buckwheat, pig weed, French weed, mustard, etc. The harrow is useful in the early spring in getting the weeds to start and in warming up the soil while later applications of the harrow will, if used judiciously, go a long way toward exterminating annual weeds.

Corn can be harrowed when dry and on a warm, bright day. A light harrow should be used and the corn land should be reasonably compact. It can be completely covered with a cultivator, going 3 or 4 miles per hour. The weeder is an implement that can be used to good advantage on land that is level and reasonably free from trash. It can be used until the grain is six to ten inches high. The weeder, however, is too light to destroy such weeds as pigeon grass or French weed.

Mrs. H. F. Jaeob, Lavant Station, Ont., writes: "I take pleasure in telling you how much good your medicine has done me. I had suffered from intense pains in my back, and was so bad I could hardly do my housework. My kidneys were also bothering me a great deal. I tried several kinds of patent medicines, and was almost discouraged, and was loathing for those other kind of medicine to try when I noticed your advertisement of Doan's Kidney Pills, so I thought it could not hurt to try them. I noticed a great difference when I had used one box, and to my great relief when I had used three boxes I was entirely cured, and I have not been bothered since. I will not hesitate to recommend them to all friends."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c a box, or 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

If a pain attacks you in the back "stop and think" what it is and what causes it.

If the kidneys are at fault—and in a large majority of cases of pain in the back they are—doctor them at once, and doctor them persistently, as it is impossible to have a well strong body without the kidneys perform their functions properly.

Doan's Kidney Pills cure all forms of kidney trouble, and cure them to stay cured.

Stoney Lake After The Holiday

Mosquitoes and Black Flies Have Arrived—Water Still Very High

The lakes have settled down to their normal state after the holiday rush. The mosquitoes and black flies, which very kindly postponed their arrival till after the twenty-fourth, have made their "debut" for the season, nineteen-fifteen. The lateness of their coming seems to have whetted their appetites, and lunches are now being extracted at all hours; the mosquitoes by the hypodermic method, the black flies according to the fashion of the cheese tester; in either case they are after blood. Fortunately, in the case of the mosquito, it is only "the female of the species" that bites (how true to nature-), the male evidently being too lazy. I must be a ladies' man, for the females are all after me.

The water continues to be quite high notwithstanding the fact that it has dropped eighteen inches below high-water mark. The wharf at Juniper Island is still submerged. The buoys in the four-buoy channel are just poking their heads above water.

Mrs. Flynn and son, John Hunter Flynn are visiting Mr. and Mrs. John Hunter at "Glen Oak."

Mr. Quigley's family of Toronto will occupy the Acton cottage for the season.

Mr. Hooper of Toronto, will assist Mr. Stock again this season at the Juniper Island store.

Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Stock motored to McCracken's Landing Friday on their way to Juniper Island.

Mr. J. W. McKinney of Sewickley, Pa., will join Mrs. McKinney at McCracken's Landing next Wednesday.

Mr. John Brown has commenced the erection of H. P. Lindsay's cottage near McCracken's Landing.

Mr. Walter is having his cottage and new boathouse painted cream, the roofs being stained green.

Mr. J. J. McBain is having his cottage "Bona Vista" painted white with green trimmings.

Miss Ray of Lakefield, has sold her summer home, "Rayburn" to Mr. Harston of Toronto. Mr. Harston's family occupied it last season.

Mr. and Mrs. Chink of Toronto came up on the "Libby" to view their new cottage near Vismede.

Mr. Thompson, the guide, has located near Mt. Julian for the season.

Mr. J. N. McWilliams of Bernard Ave., Toronto, spent a few days at his cottage near "Sandy Point."

The Misses Pentland will occupy Mrs. Clegg's cottage this summer.

The drive of logs which the Stoney Lake Navigation Co. contracted to bring down Eel's Creek and deliver in Peterborough to the McDonald Lumber Co. by the middle of June, were safely anchored in Little Lake on Empire Day, over three weeks ahead of time. This establishes a record run.

The steamer "Stoney Lake" has received her usual spring decorations in the shape of a coat of white paint. The same treatment will be accorded the "Islinda," "Empress" and "Manita." The one-trip-a-day service will be started shortly after the first of June.

Dainty little dandelein,
Smiling on the lawn,
Sleeping through the dewy night,
Waking with the dawn;
How we love thy cheery face!
Emblem of eternal grace.

Yes, you are gazing at the sky.
Who could ever wonder why?
Let me whisper in your ear!
'Tis the sunlight makes you dear.

Beauty spangl'd pot of gold—
Sweetness overflowing;
How we wonder at the mold—
Treasures rare bestowing!
Upward gaze from genial sod
To the love of nature's God!

Amen, little children fair,
Seek thy head of golden hair;
Lo! before their frolics close
A silver ringlet grows!

AN EASY WAY TO GET FAT AND BE STRONG

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on dragging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "fat creams," or following some foolish physical culture stunt, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

Thanks to the remarkable new scientific discovery, it is now possible to combine into simple form the very elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This concentration of nature's laboratory is called Sargol and has been termed the greatest of flesh-builders. Sargol aims through its combinative, assimilative power to coax the stomach and intestines to literally soak up the fattening elements of your food and pass them into the blood, where they are carried to every starved, broken-down cell and tissue of your body. Let one small trial prove how your clothes fit out, hollows above your neck, shoulders and bust develop and you take on from 5 to 25 pounds of solid healthy flesh. Sargol is absolutely harmless, inexpensive, efficient. Druggists throughout Peterborough and vicinity have it and will refund your money if you are not satisfied as per the guarantee found in every package.

Sargol is for sale in Peterborough by Geo. A. Chalmers and druggists everywhere. Results in increasing weight to astonishing amounts and many cases of chronic stomach troubles disappear. It should not be taken by those who do not wish to gain ten pounds or more.

"Don't Stop Work at Seventy, But Do More of It" Says Gilbert Parker

"Don't stop work at 70; do more of it," remarked Sir Gilbert Parker, of London, England, a few days ago, and Sir James Crichton Browne, an acknowledged authority on longevity, agrees with Sir Gilbert thoroughly.

"If you want feeble and miserable old age, give up working," said Sir James who, although born as long ago as 1840, is one of the busiest men in the kingdom to-day. "The most vigorous period of human life in its entirety is obviously between 25 and 40 years of age," he added, "but to say that men above the latter age are comparatively useless is to fly in the face of the biographical dictionary, much of the best work of the world has been done by men over 40, and we should by no means stand where we are but be back in the twilight ages if bereft of what these men accomplish.

Emphasized in Music.

"Music expression, like speech, reaches its acme in late middle life. But higher in the cerebral hierarchy than speech or music centres are others concerned in the manifestation of purely intellectual powers, such as reason and judgment, which come to perfection late, and may long preserve their integrity. A preponderance of the work involving calm and powerful reason is done by men from 55 to 70 years of age. Our judicial system in this country has been built up mainly by judges from 35 to 85 years of age, and in almost all countries the most momentous affairs of state have been reserved for the decision of men at this time of life.

"And even memory, so often treacherous in old age, may be preserved intact. Dr. Dollinger, when 70 years old and cursed by insomnia, learned by heart three books besides the Odyssey, in order that he might be able to repeat them to himself in the silent watches of the night. Henry Danodlo, Gibbon tells us, was elected Doge of Venice when 84 and lived till 97, shining in his last year as one of the most illustrious men of his time.

Don't Make Age Peevish.

"The way to make old age peevish and repulsive is to rob it of the hopes by which it is sustained and tranquilized. Depend on it, the best antiseptic against senile decay is an active interest in human affairs, and those keep young longest who love most. It is a cogent argument against celibacy and the limitation of families that they deprive old age of those vernal influences in which parents renew their youth.

"We are justified in holding that, given favourable conditions and barring accidents, 100 years is the normal duration of man's life, the goal which we should hold in view and at which, if we guide our footsteps aright, an ever increasing number of men and women should arrive."

Sir James added that very often old age was made feeble and decrepit because of the maladies of early life. All these maladies leave their footprints behind them, and in aged men were often found the tracks of measles or the marks of whooping cough.

"Russellism" Under the Searchlight

The Red Flag of Warning With Reference to the Movement Known as "Russellism" or "Millennial Dawn"

(By the Rev. A. C. Dixon, B.A., D.D.)

It is my purpose to give simply a statement of the teachings of "Russellism," believing that to those who have even a smattering of Biblical knowledge such a statement is sufficient refutation. And for the public good there should be an exposure of the methods pursued by "Russellism" in popularizing its vagaries.

"Russellism" teaches that Christ was not Divine before He came to earth, but only a created spirit of an order higher than the angels, and that He was not ed in any sense.

It teaches that, when Christ came to earth, He dropped that spirit nature and became simply a human being, nothing more or less—not a man and God, but only man in body, soul, and spirit; while He was on earth, He was in no sense Divine. On the cross a man died, and whatever atonement was made for sin was made by the sacrifices of a mere man.

It teaches that when Christ was crucified He became spirit again. He ceased to be man; His humanity disappeared on the cross. What we know as the resurrection was the re-creation or coming forth of a purely spiritual being, as a reward for His obedience while in the qesh.

To sum it all up, Jesus Christ came down from heaven as a mere spirit, created like other spirits, but of a higher order than the angels. In the incarnation of that spirit there was nothing but the human, nothing of the Divine. On the cross the human disappeared entirely, and He became simply a spirit again with some sort of Divine nature.

A Denial of the Resurrection.

The resurrection of Christ's body, according to "Russellism," never took place. He says we do not knew what [illegible] It may have been dissolved in gases, or it may be preserved as a sort of relic in a museum, but there was never any physical resurrection.

"Russellism" teaches again, that the Lord Jesus in this second spiritual nature returned to this earth in 1874. This was His Second Advent.

"Russellism" teaches, also, that in the year 1878 all the righteous dead were raised and became spiritual. Just as Christ came out a spirit so all the righteous dead in 1878, prophets and martyrs, and all the rest, came forth, and that spiritual Christ and these righteous spirits have been on earth ever since. Nobody has ever known it except Mr. Russell and his followers; and when you ask him what evidence there is that the Second Advent has really taken place, his reply in substance has uniformly been, "You can see it by looking out upon the world, and noting the progress that has been made. Its civilization has developed; peace congresses have been held." There was a fair promise, he thought, of the suppression of war by means of these peace congresses. Every indication shows, according to "Russellism," that the world has already heard the trumpet and the voice of the archangel in the advent of Christ in this spiritual way.

"Russellism" taught that the consummation of the Second Coming of Christ would take place in October, 1914. The changes have been rung upon the claim that from October 1, 1914, "the times of the Gentiles" would be fulfilled, and the Millennium would begin. It looks now as if pandemonium began about that time, and has been going on to a large extent ever since.

As 1914, with its first of October, approached, Mr. Russell began to hedge a trifle. He expressed some doubt as to the certainty of the prophecy. He thought it might run through 1915, and even go into 1916; indeed, he was not quite certain that it might not take till 1920 to bring it all about.

What "Russellism" Teaches About Death.

"Russellism" taught, again, that in 1881 God spued out the churches of Christendom, rejected them all for "the elect," and we are left, for the most part, to read between the lines as to who the "elect" are.

"Russellism" teaches that death means the cessation of existence. "Death means death," it says — it means to cease to exist. Dr. I. M. Haldemann, of New York, has published a booklet entitled "Millennial Dawnism, the Blasphemous Religion which Teaches the Annihilation of Jesus Christ." The Death of Christ meant the blotting out of His humanity. So it is with human beings. Death means the cessation of existence. Whatever takes place after their death must, therefore, be a re-creation.

Though it teaches that death is a cessation of existence, "Russellism" teaches also that all mankind, wicked and righteous, will be raised from the [illegible] they will be re-created, brought forth out of non-existence. They will have an opportunity then to be saved, a second chance, and only a little company will refuse because they will prefer annihilation.

The hope is held out to the wickedest people that they will have a better chance in the time to come than they have now. That accounts to a large extent for the popularity of the movement. A gentleman in America heard a friend of his, the son of Christian parents, say: "I have just bought all of Mr. Russell's works, and I am going to read them through, for I have heard that he teaches there is no hell—I think that I have been hearing about all my life—and that I will have a better chance in the future than I have now." He said: "I am not living a righteous life, and I tell, that sounds well! I am going to find out if it is true, and, if it is, I will be comforted." Of course! Men and women are comforted to live on in sin, if after death they will have a better chance than they have now.

The wicked dead will be raised during the millennium and they will have the choice then of heaven or of blotting out of existence. The fantastic interpretations of Scripture which [illegible] into this meaning would be ludicrous indeed if the matter were not so very serious.

A Rare Example of Exegesis.

Take the interpretation of the parable of the Rich Man and Lazarus. The rich man according to "Russellism," means the Jew, the tribes of Benjamin and Judah; and the five brothers refer to the ten tribes, making each brother represent two tribes, without a word of Scripture for it. Lazarus represents the Gentiles, when the fact is that the Gentiles were the rich folk of that day and the Jews were the ersecuted poor. The Roman world was robbing the Jews, and Gentiles were being enriched. Mr. Russell thinks that the cry of the rich man for a drop of water was partially fulfilled in the appeal of the United States for the relief of the Jewish population. You can hardly restrain a smile as you see the effort that an ingenious man makes to hold intact, so far as possible, an imaginary theory that must be maintained at all costs.

Professor William G. Moorehead, D. D., of the United States Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Zenia, Ohio, who has written a tract upon the subject, says that there is a close kinship between "Russellism" and Mormonism. Mormonism teaches that men become gods. Adam was God with a number of wives. It declares that we, by the same sort of process, can become gods.

Those who have been following in the footsteps of Russell are not conscious of it, but in denying the Trinity, in denying the everalsting Deity of our Lord, there is, of course, denial of the Deity of the Holy Spirit. And in the teaching that we may become gods in the sense that Russell claims that Christ became God after His death Professor Moorehead sees the kinship with Mormonism.

Much is said by Russell about "redemption through the blood," but when you bring it to an analysis, it is redemption through the blood of a mere man who was really annihilated in death. What came out of the grave was a created spirit without any humanity at all. The Bible speaks of "the Son of Man" and "the Son of God," but "Russellism" tells us that there were not two natures in Christ. He calls such a being "a hybrid thing."

The Man and His Methods.

The plan of salvation in "Russellism" is a plan of damnation. It teaches that there is no New Birth here, no present salvation at all, that what we call the New British is associated with the resurrection in the future; that the re-creation and the salvation of the soul come at the resurrection or after, but that in this life we have no complete salvation in Jesus Christ. In this first volume he says: "The ransom [illegible] Jesus does not give a guarantee of everlasting life or blessing to any man."

"Russellism" seems to have adopted the policy of "ruse de guerre." The word "Pastor" as applied to the leader gives him a fictitious standing. So far as I can learn, he has never been pastor of any church, and I know of no church in America that would permit him to preach in its pulpit. He goes here and there renting halls and abandoning churches, and advertising himself as "Pastor" when, as a matter of fact, he is merely superintendent of his own enterprises, which he or his agents originate and carry forward under various guises. Recently it has taken the form of a huge picture show, with a phonographic accompaniment!

"Russellism" began "Millennial Dawn." That, however, became unpopular because of so many exposures in America, and he adopted the "International Bible Students' Association." "I.B.S.A." is all very like "I.B.R.A." that it makes the impression that it is a kindred institution. A clever "ruse de guerre"!

Mr. Russell goes to Brooklyn and rents a mission hall that used to be under the charge of Henry Ward Beecher's church, and he names it "The Brooklyn Tabernacle." That was after the death of Dr. Talmage, the famous pastor of "The Brooklyn Tabernacle." Then it goes out all over the world that "Pastor" Russell is the successor of Dr. T. De Witt Talmage in Brooklyn.

He rents Henry Ward Beecher's old home, and has his picure taken in Beecher's study, so that he is the successor of both T. De Witt Talmage and Henry Ward Beecher! Another clever "ruse de guerre."

How False Impressions Are Spread.

Next he comes to London, rents a building and calls it "The London Tabernacle." Then it is published in a London paper that he is here to establish a work like that of Charles H. Spurgeon. That London paper is quoted on the other side, and all over America the papers have it that "Pastor" Russell is the successor of Charles H. Spurgeon. When the pastors of Chicago were giving me a farewell, one of them rose and said: "Will you tell me, sir, how two men can be pastor of the same church I have just seen it in the papers that 'Pastor Russell has been elected pastor of the Metropolitan Tabernacle."

I have recently received a letter from a pastor in Louisiana, U.S.A., in which he says that the agent of "Russellism" is in his town, advertising in big headlines that "Pastor" Russell is the successor of Charles H. Spurgeon. When he comes to London he advertises himself in big bulletins as "Pastor of Brooklyn and London Tabernacles." It goes out over the world, therefore, that this marvellous preacher is the successor of T. De Witt Talmage in America and Charles H. Spurgeon in London. Another clever "ruse de guerre"!

Mr. Russell brought a suit for libel against Rev. J. J. Rose of Canada, and the following dialogue took place in the court room: "Do you know the Greek?" asked the attorney. 'Oh, yes,' was Russell's reply. Here he was handed a copy of the New Testament in Greek, by Westcott and Hort, and asked to read the letters of the alphabet as they appear on the top of page 447. He did not know the alphabet. 'Now, asked Mr. Staunton, "are you familiar with the Greek language?' 'No,' said Mr. Russell, without a blush. Another "ruse de guerre," which did not work well.

Mr. Russell took a world tour in order to study foreign missions, which he had been speaking against year after year. He went with a committee, rather a committee went with him, and when he came back it was widely advertised, that he would give an exposure of foreign missions in the Hippodrome building, New York City. Money was lavishly spent in advertising. By the way, I have been asked, "Where in the world does he get so much money?" for there are no collections. Another "ruse de guerre." There are no collections in the meetings, and people has become noted for great financial schemes of various [illegible] in order to get money. When he gets hold of people who come because there are no collections, he has been careful to impress them with the prophecy that the Lord is coming very soon, and that the time is short for using their money, and this "ruse de guerre" has worked well. A well-informed American tells me that two rich women in Pennsylvania have furnished him millions.

The Exposer Exposed.

But what took place at that "exposure" in the New York Hippodrome? Mr. Russell told the people that foreign missions were a conspicuous failure. Missionaries were discouraged and the heathen did not have much interest in the movement. What they were hungry for was "the Gospel of the Kingdom" that he preached, and they rallied to him in order to hear it. One sermon he preached in a heathen town was reported and it was said that a great audience listened in rapture to the thrilling truth. Investigation was made, and it was learned that the boat touched at the port, but he never preached at all. There was no audience and there was no sermon. Mr. W. T. Ellis, a journalist on the Continent, a great American paper, had travelled over the world, investigating missions, and he took it upon himself to investigate Mr. Rufsell and his investigation. After a careful inquiry he found that he stopped at foreign ports just long enough for the ship to take in coal and change its freight. He did not talk about missions to a single missionary in the heathen world, except one. He went as a rapid tourist and came back to hold a great meeting in the Hoppodrome, exposing missions as a failure!

It gives me pain to say these things, but some good people in London have been drawn into this terrible maelstrom of erros, and I feel that God would have me raise the red flag of warning.

SHE GAINED 30 LBS.

Mrs. George Bradshaw, Harlowe, Ont., writes: "I was troubled for many years with weak, watery blood and dreamy. I had nervous exhaustion, dizziness and sinking spells, and was, in fact, a semi-invalid. Doctors told me my heart and kidneys were diseased and gave me up. By using 10 boxes of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I gained 30 pounds in weight, all my complaints and gained 14 pounds in weight."

INTERESTING LETTERS FROM A MISSIONARY

Mr. J. H. Taylor, 580 Bolivar Street, is in receipt of several interesting letters from his daughter, Gertrude, wife of Dr. A. E. Best, who is a medical missionary in West China. Mr. and Mrs. Best went to China last Fall in their capacity as missionaries. Mrs. Best previous to residing in Peterborough, lived in Otonabee with her parents, near Keene.

The letters are dated 13th and 15th of April, and come from Tsellutsing, West China. In writing of the season she states the cherry season has come and gone, with the peaches coming in June, and plums and grapes later on. She is greatly surprised at the magnificent fruit produced in China. Most of the missionaries have their own gardens, and a dinner given by Mrs. Best, with the following bill of fare: Roast duck, roast potatoes, green peas, pickle, cherry pie, raspberry pie, tea and raw cherries. From this it will be seen that the missionary who takes advantage of his opportunities can live pretty much after the western fashion.

The weather in April was extremely hot—hotter than Ontario weather in July, and necessitated moving up to the mountains, where it is cooler.

In concluding, Mrs. Best states they are well and are evidently greatly interested in and enjoying their labours in China.

Eminent English scientists have decided that the waters of Bath contain not only raidium but give off radium emanations in as large quantities as any other radioactive waters in the world.

PIMPLES
APPEARED ON HIS FACE AND HANDS.

The primary cause of pimples arises from the blood not being in a good condition. When the blood becomes impure you will find that pimples will break out all over the body, but more particularly on the forehead, nose and chin, and although they are not a dangerous trouble, they make you appear unsightly both to your friends and yourself. What you need, when these pimples break out, is to get a real good blood purifying medicine such as Burdock Blood Bitters. One that will build up the system by cleansing the blood of all the impurities and poisons which cause the skin to break out in these eruptions.

Mr. F. A. McKenzie, Portage La Prairie, Man., writes: "Last summer I was all run down and unfit for work of any kind. All kinds of food seemed distasteful to me. Pimples appeared on my face and hands, and I seemed to grow worse every day. One day a friend advised me to try Burdock Blood Bitters. Half-heartedly I did so, and the results obtained were marvellous. I regained my health, I took on flesh, and in a short time the pimples and skin eruptions disappeared entirely; thanks to the healing powers of B.B.B. I truly recommend it to all sufferers."

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

"Complexion Secrets of an Actress"

In a recently issued volume bearing the above title, the author says: "Continuous use of grease paints, rouge and the like, had ruined my complexion. My skin was colourless, wrinkled, coarse and punctured with large pores. In England I heard of the virtues of mercolised wax: my first experience with this marvellous substance convinced me it was more valuable than all cosmetics combined. Now whenever my complexion begins to go wrong I get an ounce of mercolised wax at the nearest drug store, spread on a thin layer of it before retiring, washing it off next morning. The wax, after a few such treatments, seems literally to absorb the worn-out cuticle, when a brighter, healthier, younger-looking skin appears.

"For the wrinkles and enlarged pores I began using a solution of saxolite, one ounce, dissolved in a half pint witch hazel. Bathing the face in this every day for a while soon relieved the condition most wonderfully."

DOCTOR SAID ONLY HOPE WAS IN AN OPERATION

Was Skeptical When He Began the Use of Dr. Chase's Ointment—Relief Came Quickly

Here is a plain, honest statement in regard to Dr. Chase's Ointment. Between the lines of this letter you can read the gratitude which its writer feels. One does not suffer from annoying, distressing piles for ten years without appreciating a cure when it is obtained.

Almost every mail brings the report of someone who has been cured of piles by the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment. Such statements are never used without the permission of the writer, and until we are satisfied that the cure is genuine and the writer a person of responsibility.

You may believe in operations for piles, and think there is no other cure. Write to Mr. Ingles, enclosing stamp, and he will gladly verify his statement. He will tell you that the pain, the expense, the risk of an operation are quite unnecessary. That relief and cure come with the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment."

Mr. Ernest W. Ingles, Penticton, B.C., writes: "I suffered from piles for ten years, and though I tried all kinds of ointments and injections I really had no permanent relief until I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. When I began this treatment I had absolutely no faith in it, for I had been examined by a well-known physician in Vancouver, and he said that an operation was the only thng thait would benefit me. It was surprising the relief I obtained from the very first box, and now, after using four boxes, I am practically cured. My case was so exceptionally bad that I received no relief day or night, and for this reason the results are wonderful."

You can obtain Dr. Chase's Ointment from any dealer at 60 cents a box. If you do not want to risk this much send a two-cent stamp to pay postage, and mention this paper, and we shall send you a sample box free. EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

EASY-TO-MAKE ROMPERS.

By Anabel Worthington.

No one cares to spend a great deal of time on such a strictly utility garment as rompers, so when a design appears that represents the very minimum of time and labor to reproduce it it is certain to be snatched at. Such a design is the one shown here. It is absolutely in one piece, front, back and sleeve. The only other sections in the pattern are the pocket and belt. The rompers button in the back and have a tuck over each shoulder to broaden the effect a little where most children need to have breadth added.

If two materials are used it is pretty to have contrasting bands at neck and sleeve edge, as illustrated, with a belt to match. The three-year size will require 1¾ yards of material 27 inches wide, with ¼ yard of contrasting material in the same width. The pattern, No. 7,145, can be obtained in sizes 1, 2, and 3 years. Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

Coconut Oil Makes A Splendid Shampoo

If you want to keep your hair in good condition, the less soap you use the better.

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali. This dries the scalp, makes the hair brittle, and is very harmful. Just plain mulsified cocoanut oil (which is pure and entirely greaseless), is much better than soap or anything else you can use for shampooing, as this can't possibly injure the hair.

Simply moisten your hair with water and rub it in. One or two teaspoonfuls will make an abundance of rich, creamy lather, and cleanses the hair and scalp thoroughly. The lather rinses out easily, and removes every particle of dust, dirt, dandruff and excessive oil. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and it leaves it fine and silky, bright, fluffy and easy to manage.

You can get mulsified cocoanut oil at most any drug store. It is very cheap, and a few ounces is enough to last everyone in the family for months.

MORE TRENCHES CAPTURED BY FRENCH

THE TURKS LOSSES CLOSE TO 100,000 MARK

FRENCH CONTINUE TO GAIN IN NEIGHBOURHOOD OF ARRAS

More Trenches Are Captured and Prisoners Taken---Fierce Fighting Continues on the Plateau of Norte Dame de Loretta---Berlin Admits Positions Were Lost to the French---Turks Suffer Heavily at the Dardanelles.

SPECIAL CABLE:

PARIS, France, June 2.—(French official.)—The Germans have [illegible] munique. The Cathedral and other parts of the city, have been repeatedly bombarded. North of Arras the fighting in the ruins of deserted villages has been resumed with great fury. The French drove the enemy out of a group of houses in Neuville and retained them, despite several strong counter-attacks. South east of Neuville French bayonet charges captured several German trenches. In the last 24 hours 450 German prisoners have been taken in the fighting around Neuville.

TURKS ARE ALL CUT UP

ATHENS, June 2.—The Turks have suffered terrible losses in night attacks on the Gallipoli Peninsula, in the past 48 hours. Milan despatches to-day said the heavy Turkish casualties in the recent fighting make it appear probable that their losses since the Dardanelles fighting will total close to 100,000.

Officered by Germans, the Turks are hurling themselves against the allied positions in close formation. At a signal from the outposts the advancing enemy columns are swept with a glare of light from the warships and then riddled by machine guns.

THE ZEPPELIN VICTIMS.

LONDON, June 2.—"Murdered by some agent of a hostile force," was the jury's verdict to-day at the inquest into the deaths of Henry Good and his wife, Caroline Good, two of the victims of the first Zeppelin raid on London yesterday morning. The victims died of suffocation and burns when an incendiary bomb, hurled from a Zeppelin, fired their house. The London newspapers today warned the public to be prepared for further raids of a similar character.

Throughout the proceedings no mention was allowed to be made of the location of the house occupied by the Goods.

"Two bombs crashed through the roof," said the principal witness, a neighbour. "The house immediately burst into flames. When the firemen got the blaze under control we found the two victims kneeling beside their bed, Mr Good's arm about his wife. Both were suffocated, and their limbs were badly burned."

Fragments of the two bombs found by the firemen, were offered as exhibits. Experts testified that they evidently contained some kind of an explosive in a metal shell, and wrapped with tarred rope, that burst into flames when the bomb crashed into a solid substance.

ANOTHER "SUB" VICTIM

LONDON, England, June 2.—The British steamer Saidieh was torpedoed without warning and sunk in the North Sea yesterday. She was en route to Hull from Alexandria, Egypt. Seven of the crew and a stewardess were drowned when one of the lifeboats capsized. Other passengers and crew were saved.

WORK OF A "SUB."

LONDON, June 2.—The Danish steamear Soeborg was torpedoed by a German submarine, according to admiralty despatches this afternoon. She was previously reported as having struck a mine.

LONDON, June 2.—The German official statement to-day says the Germans have captured more positions around Przemysl, and also that the French troops had been driven out of a sugar mill near Arras, where terrific fighting has been going on for days. The capture of some German trenches by the French near Neuville, is admitted by Berlin.

PETROGRAD, June 2.—General Von Prittwitz, commander of the German army that occupied Libau, has been captured by a Russian patrol, according to Baltic newspapers received here to-day. The War Office has no confirmation.

AUTOMOBILE ASSOCIATION TO CLEAR ROADS

At a meeting of the Executive of the Peterborough Automobile Association, held on Monday night, it was decided to at once begin some improvements on the roads of the vicinity, and already the loose stones have been raked off the road from the city to Nassau on both sides of the river. This work will be continued on all roads leading to points on Stoney Lake, and by the end of next week these to Lakefield and Young's Point will be completed. The roads south of the city will also be raked if finances permit, and that depends on the membership secured.

The committee was authorized to investigate the expense of purchasing and using a split log drag for the purpose of removing ruts in the leading roads.

In a short time the Executive will wait on the City Council in regard to having the stones taken off the city streets. Considerable comment was made on the state of George Street, between Antrim and Smith Streets. Those who were digging there last week carefully piled all the stones on the top of the trench as a finishing touch.

High Praise For Canucks

NEW YORK, June 1.—An unnamed man, described by The Evening Post as "a well-known business man of the central west," who has just returned from a business trip through the belligerent countries of Europe, says in an interview in that paper this afternoon:—

"It will be interesting to Americans, I imagine, to know that the Germans say that the Canadian soldier is the best fighter on the continent of Europe to-day. The admiration of the Germans for the fighting qualities of the Canadians is almost pathetic.

ANNUAL CHURCH PARADE OF 57TH ON COMING SUNDAY

Rangers Had Three Hundred Men on Parade at Weekly Drill Last Night---Recruits for Overseas Coming in

PRIZES ARE PRESENTED

The annual church parade of the 57th Regiment will be held to St. John's church on Sunday next, the regiment parading at the armouries at 9.30 a.m. The service this year will be of special interest and of an impressive nature, in view of the circumstances that have arisen since the last annual church service. Some of the officers and men who attended St. John's church on that occasion now occupy heroes' graves in Belgium or France, others are prisoners in Germany, more are lying in hospital wounded, and many others are in training in Canada or in England, soon to go to the front.

The weekly drill of the Regiment last night saw a turnout of 300 men, and the companies are fast rounding to strength, each drill night seeing some new recruits. The marchout attracted the usual large crowd and many people gathered at Central Park to watch the battalion drill on its return.

Before the Rangers were dismissed, the medals and pennant emblematic of the indoor baseball championship of the regiment were presented to the H company team by Lt.-Col. Walker. In making the presentation, Lt.-Col. Walker emphasized the value of athletics in the training of a soldier and expressed the hope that the armouries would be more and more used by the members of the regiment for drill purposes and also for those games and amusements that would improve their physique.

The winning team were loudly applauded as the prizes were presented.

Recruiting For 58th.

The recruiting for the new 50th Battalion, C.E.F., is going ahead steadily, although not as fast as for some of the earlier units. Each day sees a number of applicants, although the medical examination defeats a surprisingly large percentage of applicants. Last evening three recruits passed the doctor satisfactorily. The men are being supplied with khaki uniforms here, and several of the 58th seen on the street yesterday caused considerable "guessing" among the boys home from Belleville and Barrisfield as to the unit to which they belong. This is on account on the red shoulder straps issued at Valcartier, but since discarded for active service. The recruits that have been accepted are of the usual high class that has distinguished all Peterborough quotas. It is not definitely known whether the 58th will be mobilized at Rockcliffe, Ottawa or at Barrisfield camp.

Roumania on Seat of Uneasy Neutrality

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, Eng., June 2.—Roumania is now occupying the "seat of uneasy neutrality," lately held by Italy. Diplomats of the Near East evidently are working hard to bring about an understanding between Bulgaria and Roumania. Rumours are rife that Roumania is mobilizing an army of one million men which is said to be in splendid condition for active service.

THE ENEMY DEMORALIZED

Report Found on Body of Dead German Officer Says Foe's Morale Was Very Bad in Fighting Around Notre Dame de Lorette

CONFUSION EVERYWHERE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, France, June 2.—Fighting under a hail of lead, the Germans in the recent battling around Notre Dame de Lorette, became so demoralized and confused that they could not distinguish north from south, the official "eye witness" attached to the French army reported to-day.

"Among the five thousand German dead found after the battle, was found the body of Captain Seivert," said the "eye witness." "In his pocket was found a written account of the fighting from May 10 to 21, in that region.

"The Germans, he wrote, lacked ammunition. Their orders were so badly given that there was great confusion in every sector, the soldiers being unable to sense their directions. The morale was very bad.

"Hundreds of wounded lay on the ground in the trenches waiting for the ambulance men, who, for some reason, failed to arrive. The men fought for hours without food. Their officers telephoned for reinforcements but they did not come. Then after each several shelling they sent runners back to ask about reinforcements, but none came.

"The account of Captain Seivert, a five-page recital, closed with the line, 'I wonder how long the thing will last.' The German captain's own story shows that the French attack made the enemy's position a hail of bullets, grenades and shells, behind which the French came charging with their bayonets."

Service Will Not Be Changed

The conference that was held between Mayor Beal and Mr. John Carew, M. P.P., of Lindsay, also Mayor Buller and Mr. B. D. Hall, President of the local Board of Trade and officials of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with a view of arranging the freight service so as to provide an earlier service for Lindsay merchants, resulted in very little encouragement for the Scugoville deputation. The Peterborough deputation put up a strong case for the local merchants, with the result that the C.P.R. officials decided to allow the present service to remain as it is. The Toronto morning freight via Lindsay will arrive in Peterborough shortly after six o'clock each morning.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

To-morrow, June 3rd, is King George's birthday. He turns his half century to-day—the Golden Jubilee of his birth. He was born June 3rd, 1865. To-morrow will be a [illegible] holiday and, of course, all the flags will be flying.

HIS INJURIES WERE FATAL

Mr. David Guiry, Aged Ennismore Resident, Injured in Motor Accident, Passed Away This Morning

WAS WIDELY KNOWN

As an aftermath to the auto accident on the Chemong Road on Monday evening last, Mr. David Guiry, who was fatally injured, passed away in St. Joseph's Hospital at 9 o'clock this morning. The accident occurred about 6 o'clock in the evening, almost opposite the residence of Rev. J. S. McLaren. The driver of the car, Mr. John Young, and the other occupant, Mr. James Corkery, suffered minor bruises.

The late Mr Guiry was in his eightieth years, and a well-known resident of the Township of Ennismore, where he has resided for the past 49 years. He was in good health up to the time of the accident, but his advanced age probably mitigated against his recovery. His leg sustained a double fracture; his face, head, and shoulder suffered, besides internal injuries. He retained consciousness after being taken to St. Joseph's Hospital in Comstocks' ambulance, and was quite conscious until a short time before his death. He had been visiting in the city about a week with his daughter, Mrs. M. S. Donoghue, and decided to return to his home on Monday by the stage. Mr. Young, a neighbour, was in the city in his Ford automobile, and he left the city with him.

The deceased gentleman was born in Ireland and came to Canada when seven years of age. Until he was thirty years of age he resided in Emily Township, removing from there to his farm in Ennismore, Lot 7, Concession 6. He was well and favourably known throughout both townships and in the city. His wife predeceased him eight months ago. In religion he was a Roman Catholic.

The survivors are one son and six daughters. The son is Mr. James Guiry, on the homestead; and the daughters, Mrs. J. F. Sullivan, London, Ont.; Mrs. M. S. Donoghue, 178 Stewart Street, City; Mrs. W. B. Crough, Ennismore; Mrs. Alex. Geary, Ennismore; Sister Ethelreda, St. Joseph's Convent, Almont, Ont.; and Sister Anne Marie, St. Joseph's Convent, Cobourg, Ont.

The Coroner, Dr. Greer, viewed the body this morning, at Messrs. Lane and Eano's Undertaking Parlours, and it is probable a jury will be empannelled this afternoon to view it, preliminary to an inquest, which it is understood the Crown has considered necessary before a burial certificate may be issued.

LETTERS TELL OF THE VOYAGE OF THE SECOND CONTINGENT

PETERBORO' MEN TO GO OVERSEAS IN SHORT TIME

Some of the Local Members of the [illegible] Battalion Rifles in the Draft Selected to Go to the Front Immediately

TO-DAY'S MILITARY NEWS

Word has been received that a number of the Peterborough men in the 8th C. M. R. are included in the draft from that unit which has been selected to go overseas at once. The list of Peterborough men chosen is not yet available. It is probable that a few of the local boys in the 20th Battery will also go, as a similar draft is being chosen from the 7th Artillery brigade.

The Kingston Standard says:

Barrisfield, War Camp, June 1.—Yesterday and to-day have been very warm in camp. The soldier on parade has been compelled to leave his coat in his tent, it was too warm to drill hard with a heavy khaki coat on. The tents are wide open, so as to permit every breath of the breeze that occasionally blows to pass through the canvas house and make it bearable. There have been no idle hours in camp since the men came here a week ago to-day. There is some duty to be performed from reveille until about 4 o'clock, when the soldier is permitted to put his rifle in the rack and finish up the long day's work, unless on some special fatigue or guard duty.

War Stir in Camp.

The news that 50 men, non-coms. and officers would be required from the 8th C.M.R. to go overseas at short notice, and that a similar number would be taken from the 7th Artillery Brigade, set the whole military camp in a stir. Every man in the Mounted Rifles and in the Artillery wanted to be taken before his commanding officer to see if he could not be included in the number.

The soldiers in camp are neither feather bed nor picnic soldiers. They are war soldiers. Every man is anxious to go to the front. This is what they enlisted for, and this is what they want. The routine of every day drill and duty grows monotonous to the soldier. He wants the changes that come from service before an enemy, when every day is varied with some new experience. He smells the battle from afar, and longs to be on the firing line

Lieut. Frederick Gives Incidents of the Cameronia's Passage While Peterborough Boy With 21st Describes the Voyage of the Metagama

PICKED UP BY DESTROYERS

Letters received by the Examiner written by one of the Peterborough boys with the 21st Battalion, now in England, gives an interesting account of the voyage. He writes on May 19th:

I am pleased to say we arrived safe in Plymouth this morning at 4 o'clock. We did not lose much time after we left Kingston for we were in Montreal at 5.30 a.m. and left at 11 a.m. on Thursday, May 6th. We had a good send-off, for everything that had steam gave us a whistle—railway engines and old boats that had not blown their whistles maybe for months, did the best and what with our siren going I tell you it seemed like so many madmen. We reached Quebec at 8 o'clock that night and stopped just a few minutes in mid-stream. We had a movie man taking pictures as we left Montreal, so if you see them in Peterborough and they are plain enough, you will see me at the bow of the ship.

Nothing happened the next two days, Friday and Saturday; only we had cloudy weather, but on Sunday morning we lost sight of land. Then about 10 o'clock we ran into a fog for

Letter received by Mrs. Frederick from her husband, Lieut. Frederick, M.D., of Peterborough, now with the British Army Medical Corps:

16th May, Sunday, 10 p.m.
On Board Cameronia.

My Dear Wife,—A week ago we were getting ready to depart. Up to now we have had a very delightful voyage. Moderately rough, but I think I have my sea legs now. As I said in my card, this is a peach of a boat, although only 10,000 tons. She was taken off the New York trip for us, and was so stuffed up with all kinds of high-class eatables, which we are doing our best to get rid of. We have the band play for dinner and the orchestra play for lunch, and then all the evening. We are certainly enjoying life very much. Where we are at present, we have no idea, but the best we can figure out we are very close to the Azores Islands. We ploughed for two days until we must have been south of the New York line, and then we have been sailing southeast since. Whether it will land us in South Africa or Gibraltar, we cannot say.

Tuesday, May 18th.

A RUSH TO PORT.

A beautiful day, upon deck all day, ready for rush to port to-morrow. All boats lowered, machine [illegible], all men to stay out of sight. However, we expected no difficulties. We have a smart looking captain, Capt. Wadsworth, and our boat can put up to 21½ knots per hour. I have just met Robert Fair, Ileals cousin, from McGill.

Wednesday, the 19th.

We have had a very interesting day. This morning we cruised around in five-mile circles for a couple of hours until a heavy fog came up. We expected a guard of some kind, but it did not appear. When the fog came on we hiked along at a good clip. Suddenly out of the fog, right behind us, a torpedo boat destroyer came sweeping along behind us at a fast clip. I assure you we were delighted to see her, so neat and bull-dog business-like looking. She ships turned backwards and forwards for a while by semaphone signals, then electric lights and later by sirens. It all seemed to be but the first door opening to this wonderful world of new and strange experiente. We seemed to breathe an air of safety. It seemed so wonderful that little destroyer should come right up and find us in the middle of the fog, 150 to 200 miles off port or land. If it had been a clear day, where she could have seen us for miles, it would have seemed more simple, but when one could not see 100 yards ahead, it seemed amazing. About an hour later, along came another. It impresses us all with the very wide hand of the British Navy. I guess there is nothing much more tell you. We hope to be in port in the morning, which we expect will be before we wake up.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1915

NEARLY THE HALF CENTURY.

The Fenian Raid is nearly half a century old—forty-nine years ago today, June 2nd, 1915. Many now living, in this city and elsewhere in Canada, will remember that there was as splendid response to the call of duty then as there is now, in the face of a greater danger than the descent of a few misguided raiders. But conditions have changed. The Fenian raiders of 1866 were de-natured Irishmen from the United States, fighting against the Empire; now Irishmen, from the highest in command to the humblest Tipperary Tommy Atkins, are fighting for Britain and Ireland, and after their manner, had cese to them, taking the cream of the glory for gallantry in the battle line.

VICTORIA CROSS O'LEARY ALIVE.

A gallant Irish soldier who was killed is still alive. That is, he, himself, writes to his family that the report, that he was killed, which he himself read in the papers, "is greatly exaggerated." Over the Empire all who recollect the gallant action at Givenchy, when Sergeant O'Leary won the V.C. for gallantry in acton — where single-handed, or with his own hands, he overcame or captured half a dozen Germans, and captured a considerable stretch of trenches, will rejoice that he is still alive; "still," as he says in his letter, "in the firing doing my bit for my King and country." Peterborough wouldn't be doing violence to public sentiment and public appreciation of exceptional bravery by ringing the Peoples' Chimes in honour of the news. Sergeant O'Leary is a credit to the army, a credit to the Northwest Mounted Police Force, where he was schooled in dare-devilry, and a credit to the gallant Irish nation, whose splendid traditions of resource and bravery in arms, he has so splendidly maintained, if not bettered.

KEEP UP THE QUALITY.'

Farmers and dairymen are to be congratulated upon the high price of cheese these days. Eighteen cents and, in some cases, almost 19 cents, is certainly a good round price. Peterborough cheese has a high name for quality, and with high prices we can better afford to take measures to assure continuance of quality, though it is possible that the high price may lead to lower quality. If in the anxiety to get cheese on the market, and get the benefit of the high prices that now prevail, too hurried and possibly careless manufacture and marketing without proper curing are practiced, there is a possibility that the reputation for quality of Peterborough cheese might be injured; an injury, if allowed to happen, that would in the long run more than counterbalance a temporary gain in price. Accidental conditions may affect prices, but a good reputation will always bring the top price no matter what the fall or rise may be. Sacrificing, or risking the sacrifice of, reputation for quality, from any cause, would be a good deal like killing the goose that lays the golden eggs.

WHERE THERE'S A WILL THERE'S A WAY.

The Toronto News contends that the problem of unemployment is no direct concern of the Dominion Government. Not technically perhaps; but there is such a thing as moral responsibility—a responsibility for the general welfare of Canadian citizenship. But does not the fact that the Government is responsible in respect of the large immigration, its agents procured, by use of the argument that work in Canada was plentiful. The Dominion Government might, it seems, do something to provide employment in the construction of public works and buildings, that have been decided upon as necessary. Work upon our projected dry-dock would give employment; so also would work upon our new post office and customs buildings, already decided upon and site purchased. It may be pleaded that there is no money available. The money might be made available. Canada's credit is good. We borrow money to enable us to do our bit of war work; why might we not as logically borrow more money to provide relief for the unemployment that is due to the war? In such matters, as in others, where there's a will, isn't there a way? One of the greatest evils is no wrok for the man who wants work to support his family. And the Government would be warranted in taking extraordinary measures to provide it.

PULLING TOGETHER.

The new note sounded by the present war situation, especially as it affects Canada, is the call to pull together, the call to cooperate, and to the subordination of inferior interests to the one great national object. We see this call to unity of action headed by the Universities of Canada. A conference of the Universities of Canada was held in Toronto, and the keynote of the speeches was cooperation. As a first step interprovincial reciprocity, in medical teaching and no doubt practice, will be practically considered, and a movement for general cooperation in all matters between the universities of all the provinces made effective.

If we are to become less parochial in educational matters, why not in all matters? We are following Britain's example in doing our best to help in this war in the interests of the Empire and humanity. If we are to do our best, in imitation of Britain, why should we not adopt the means Great Britain is employing to enable her to do her best? In Great Britain the voice of party is silenced for the moment, and the strong national feeling in the Mother Country is shown by the fact that a new cabinet has been formed, in which the most contradictory, and most violently antagonistic party elements are fused into one harmonious whole. The idea of party advantage has been entirely eliminated, and the popular favour towards the new departure shows how deeply the nation, as well as its rulers, feel their responsibility. They feel that the country is only able to successfully carry on one war at a time. Hence the party war is dropped, and all political parties are forgotten, and the only party recognized is the party of the nation. The Asquith Government, instead of forming a coalition government, might have appealed to the people for a verdict upon its policy. But a general election, even though a general election is due this autumn, was considered absolutely incompatible with the unity of action which the nation must show to do its best in waging a war of humanity and freedom.

In view of the precedent of the Mother Country, by which we guide our course in all other things; in view of the necessity of avoiding anything that would interfere with popular and national unity of action, is not an early—a wartime election—impossible of conception in Canada? Especially as the life of the present parliament is good till October, 1916. It seems plainly incumbent upon Sir Robert Borden to declare that as far as he can do, there shall be no partizanship to interfere with the national duty at the present time. Is it not incumbent upon him to declare that while the war lasts Canada shall have a chance to promote it in Canadian and imperial interests, unhampered by party squabbling?—that there shall be no such criminal distraction as would come from a general election, when the whole mind, and heart, and hand, of the nation should be devoted to a far more important duty than counting party noses for party advantage? Sir Wilfrid Laurier, for the Liberal party, lately made a grand and patriotic offer to sink all party differences during the war, and take no steps to combat the criminal folly of a wartime general election, if Sir Robert Borden should give the assurance that the whole energies of the Government and, consequently the united energies of the people should be concentrated upon the only question now before the country; that there should be no early election. Such an assurance would settle the public mind and leave it entirely free to concentrate itself upon the work of war participation. If the British Government can forego considerations of political advantage to the point of forming a coalition cabinet, cannot the Canadian Government, without going so far, give the country the assurance that party politics, and the struggle for place, shall not be allowed to interfere with the effective discharge of the tremendous national duty that now confronts us—that demands our undivided attention and the fullest concentration of popular effort?

BRITISH COMMAND OF THE SEAS.

The more statistics are studied the more it becomes evident that the British command of the seas is a fact not to be overthrown by Germany, however madly the submarine may raid. Since the war began the British have lost to the enemy merchant vessels aggregating 400,000 tons. This total sounds large by itself, but when we remember that the net tonnage of vessels registered at ports of the British Empire must be 5,000,000, we can measure the inability of Germany to shake off the pressure exerted by British maritime preponderance. The war has not prevented Great Britain from adding new strength to its merchant marine. In the past year the merchant tonnage put into the water from its shipyards has been three times the total of that captured or destroyed by the Germans.—Boston Transcript.

THE OTHER OFFENDER GOES FREE.

A contemporary tells how "white-haired, kindly-faced, genial William Holloway was sentenced by Magistrate Kingsford to twelve months and indefinitely in the Ontario Reformatory for one of the meanest crimes conceivable at the present time, to wit, fraudulently representing himself to be a collector for a 'Canadian war fund for the wounded soldiers,' and thereby raising money amounting to over $1000 from trusting citizens all over the city."

"Not for the wounded soldiers but for the benefit of the whiskey dealers," was the Crown Attorney's comment. The accused, himself, concurred. "I have had no work for twelve months," he said, and "drink made me do it." Holloway goes to prison for one of the meanest crimes any man could commit, but drink, which made him do it, goes free. The appetite that grew so great as to become uncontrollable while Holloway gratified it at the licensed bar was not a ravening beast when he first lined up to "take one" with the boys. He contributed for long years not only to the liquor dealer's profits but to the country's revenues, before he was graduated as the perfect product of "drink," prepared to rob wounded soldiers and the orphans and widows of men who had died in freedom's cause. Holloway rightly goes to jail. Why should the partner in iniquity who made him do it go free? —The Globe.

The Capacity of German Militarists For Alternate Bullying and Whining

The thoroughbred German mongrel is the cheapest kind of yellow dog. He snarls and growls and snaps until he gets a good thrashing. After that at the mere sign of a whip he lies down and whines pitifully. A gentleman who suffers under the name of I. von Bruck writes to the New York Journal of Commerce a most melancholy wail about his "highly cultured nation" being deprived of the advantage of their alleged military superiority through the United States through arms and ammunition made in America being shipped in large quantity to the Allies. He says Germany now occupied 3 7.10 per cent. of the total area of France with a population of 3,255,000 or 8 7.10 per cent. of the whole. Also that the Germans control the following percentage of the French iron steel and coal; coal, 88.8; coke, 78.3; iron ore, 90; pig iron, 85.7; puddle iron and puddle steel, 62.4; steel billets, 76; rails and sleepers, 76; girders, 88.3; sheets, 63.3; wire, 100; steel castings, 76.9. This throws upon England the responsibility of providing France with war materials and England transfers the business to the United States. The Bethlehem Steel Works have already received $100,000,000 of war contracts and are producing 80,000 shells a day of a new and terrible type. Fancy the horrors of these terrifying shells! It would be more merciful to kill the gentle Huns than to frighten them to death. The American shipments, says Herr Bruck, are depriving the Germans of their victories in France and rendering nugatory their gigantic efforts against Russia. (Thanks, gentle Bruck, for the admission.) The United States is acting within its legal rights, but he regards it as unfriendly on the part of a friendly nation, to allow England's naval superiority to deprive Germany of the advantage of her military superiority.

Herr von Bruck says: "If the German nation is wiped out with the help of American arms and ammunition, no man of the white race in the United States would be able to think of such a catastrophe without horror and remorse. There are, indeed, ministers of the Gospel who exhort their countrymen not to pray for peace until Germany is beaten. Surely now everyone knows that this will not be until Germany is destroyed." So much the better; the more complete the destruction of the German power the better for all the rest of the world. This will not involve the extermination of the whole German people and von Bruck knows this perfectly well. The highly cultured and brutal Huns are not fighting now for the preservation of Germany or the German people. They are fighting, murdering and whining for the conservation of a rotten dynasty and a tyrannical, corrupt and dishonoured aristocracy, which have been a greater curse to Germany than to the rest of the world.

Germany has been singularly unfortunate in its official and unofficial representatives and apologists in the United States. They have represented only too faithfully the character and disposition of their nation and its government. They have appealed to American respect for law while their nation was violating every principle of law, divine and human. They appealed for the friendly action of the American people while deliberately murdering United States citizens upon the high seas. They have whined for the sympathy and help of Americans in protecting the homes of Germany while their troops have been violating most savagely the homes of Belgium and France. They whine to the United States to save their country from invasion, while loudly boasting their ability and their intention to carry fire and sword into England and France as they have done into Belgium and to wreck the glorious cities and temples of Italy as they wrecked Louvain and Rheims. The Bernstorffs, Dernburgs and von Bruck wel land truly represent a nation of raving madmen. They talk as seriously about their honour, their culture, their pre-eminence in science and art, and above all religion; as though they believed in those things themselves.—Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

Preserves

HOW is your supply of preserves holding out? We venture to say that in many fruit cellars the shelves which were so heavily laden in the fall with canned fruits of all kinds, now present an alarmingly bare appearance, and every time a can of fruit is used, we can imagine we hear the housewife say to herself: "I must prepare something at once to substitute this fruit or we will soon be without any."

Rhubarb, coming into season as it does early in the spring, lends a helping hand to the perplexed housewife and it is the basis of many appetizing dishes. Its tart, fresh flavor seems to strike just the right spot at this time of year, and it is very valuable for use in pies, puddings, sauce, etc. For variety one can use rhubarb spiced with other more highly flavored fruits for pies or puddings. We can also prepare the rhubarb for use in winter in such ways as canning, marmalade, sherbet, jam and so forth.

Rhubarb jam may be one of the more common preparations, and it is made in the proportions of equal parts of rhubarb and sugar, and the rind of half a lemon to every pound of rhubarb. The rhubarb is peeled and sliced, the sugar and lemon added and boiled until tender, then sealed. Orange and rhubarb marmalade is also very palatable, using eight oranges to five pounds of rhubarb and four pounds sugar.

Another healthful and delicious spring fruit is the pineapple. Now is the time to make liberal use of this fruit as the price is not prohibitive. One of the most delightful ways of preparing for immediate use is by mincing it a few hours previous to using and sprinkling with sugar.

Another delicious dish which is not very commonly known is pineapple salad. A slice of pineapple is placed on a crisp lettuce leaf, and on this is placed grated cheese and chopped walnuts. A good salad dressing adds the finishing touch.

Pineapple also makes a good combination used with rhubarb for sauce or canning. Around the last of May or first of June is the proper time to select for canning, and the old test of pulling out the spines at the top to see if the pineapple is ripe, is a good one. If the spines come out easily, it is in good condition.

WHAT PRICE OF CHEESE MEANS TO THE FACTORIES

To-day's Sale Netted Over $7,500.00 More Than a Year Ago—Mr. Gillespie Bought Up the Board at 18 1-8c.

SOME NOT SATISFIED

The Cheese Board recorded an 18 1-8 cent price this morning for its offering of 1827 boxes. G. A. Gillespie again caught the bidding where he liked it and cleaned up. Boarding was as follows:

Keene	50
Warminster	81
[illegible]	120
Selwyn	105
Villiers	70
Warsaw	75
Westwood	190
Oakdale	105
Daisy D.	65
Pine Grove	60
Myrtle	220
Ormonde	120
Young's Point	35
Lang	120
Indian River	40
East Emily	50
Trewern	90
Norwood	150
Fleetwood	75
Killarney	61
	1827

Bidding and Buying.

Mr. Flavelle opened at 17 1-2; Gillespie 5-8; Cook, 5-8; Flavelle, 18; Cook 18 1-8; Gillespie 18 1-8. At this figure Mr. Gillespie secured the entire Board.

Mr. Coughlin of Hastings, salesman for Ormonde factory, observed somewhat querulously that there was considerable disparity between the Peterborough and Campbellford prices, with the difference in Campbellford's favour. Yesterday Sterling Board sold 738 boxes at 18 7-16c., and Campbellford 705 boxes at the same price.

Mr. Flavelle replied that the latter was an accidental price.

"Campbellford ha squite a few accidents, then," replied Mr. Coughlin.

What Difference Means.

The 18 13-16c. price of a year ago was just 5 5-16c. less than to-day's, and the difference represents considerably over $7,208.00. In other words there were 1827 boxes sold to-day, or approximately 146,160 pounds. Even an advance of 5 cents a pound amounts, therefore, to $7,308.00 as an extra divided among the factories for to-day's sale alone. And this does not include the 5-16c. which should be considered along with the 5 cents. Under such price conditions makers should be more careful than ever to uphold the quality of Peterborough cheese.

The Officers Were Elected This Morning

Corresponding Secretary—Miss A. Erskine, Peterborough.

Recording Secretary — Mrs. Roberts, Port Hope.

Helpers' Secretary—Mrs. J. Parks, Warkworth.

Literature Secretary—Miss Robertson, Campbellford.

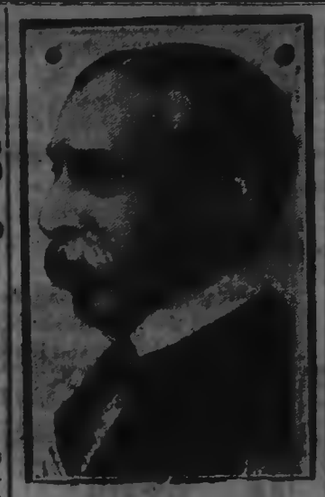
TWO GOOD GAMES FOR SATURDAY

The double-header in the City League on Saturday will bring the Thistles and Empires together in the first game, and the Classics and East City will clash in the second. The first time the Empires and Thistles met, the former won by 3 to 1, while the Classics beat the East City team by the same score. Both losers on the former occasion are out for revenge on Saturday, and an snappy games are expected.

Campbellford Beat Trenton

CAMPBELLFORD, June 2. — The Campbellford lacrosse team played an exhibition game at Trenton on Monday, the visiting club winning by the score of nine to three. The Campbellford Club will play some home to the intermediate championship series. The winning team was composed of Farrell, Thomas V. Farrell, Lloyd V. Farrell, Cumming, Welsh, Rea, Smith, Montgomery. Referee—R. H. Cole.



SIR HENRY JACKSON

Who has been appointed as First Sea Lord of the British Navy to succeed Admiral Lord Fisher, who resigned.

Articles of Food That Will Explode

Many mysterious explosives which at one time baffled the ingenuity of our keenest detectives have been recently explained by the cold, methodical researches of our chemists, who it will be remembered, also warned the Government not to let Germany have cotton to manufacture guncotton.

The men of science have not been able to wipe out the miseries that have been caused to the thousands of persons who have been convicted or condemned of arson, and other similar crimes, without a cause; but they have certainly succeeded in teaching the police to be very careful before they blame any householder or manufacturer or servant for an explosion. And the key to their researches has been always the same—dust.

How many cooks for example, realize that the ordinary everyday flour they use in their kitchens is one of the most dangerous of explosives? Recent calculations show that the contents of a 25-pound sack of flour, mixed with 8,000 cubic feet of air, will, if ignited, throw a mass of iron weighing one ton 45 miles through the air. Indeed, many disastrous explosions have occurred in big flour mills from this cause, wrecking huge buildings and causing heavy loss of life.

Candy Factory Blown up.

Unhappily flour is not the only domestic commodity that is as dangerous in its destructive effects as gunpowder; and hourly threatens our homes with red ruin. Every now and then a candy factory gets blown up, in spite of the vigilance of the Government inspectors, the watchfulness of the insurance companies, and the zeal of its foremen. Such an explosion occurred not long ago in Boston. It originated in a room where marshmallows were being made. These sweets are coated with finely pulverised sugar, and the hot and dry air on a Summer's day became laden with sugar dust, with the result that the mixture ignited, a lot of workers were injured, and many of the buildings were set on fire.

It is nothing new to hear also of explosions of starch in starch mills and of rice in rice mills, and in each instance the blame is to be attributed to the innocent-looking commodities, and not to the malice of carelessness of the employees. Oatmeal, too, has been known to go off with dire results, and a great breakfast commodity mill not long ago was sent on blue heavenwards owing to some maize dust getting mixed with air.

Spice dust in spice mills has wrought similar damage, and all linoleum is now manufactured under special precautions against fire because sad experience has shown how easily cork dust and the cement used in linoleum manufacture will ignite, or even take fire of their own accord.

Soap is another domestic suspect. It has even set fire to a ship in the mouth of the Thames. Only a few years ago there was a great explosion in a soap factory engaged in the production of a finely powdered soap. "Some enemy hath done this thing!" muttered the proprietor, but as a matter of fact he and the detectives who hunted for criminals were for months on the wrong scent. "Soap is fat, and therefore combustible," the chemists reminded him. "Your soap powder was dry, and so it got freely distributed through the air, when it exploded with more violence and greater heat than flour or starch."

Zinc has been known to cause explosions. The story is often told how a workman was once handling a quantity of finely powdered metallic zinc when he got careless, and, to save himself from laziness, threw a shovelful into a flaming furnace. There was a terrific explosion. The blade of his shovel was driven into the roof of the building, and he got half killed.

Interesting Letters From The Battlefront By Havelock Young Men

HAVELOCK, June 2.—A letter has been received from Pte. Harry Shaw by Mr. D. W. Roche. It is as follows:

France, May 10, 1915.

Mr. D. W. Roche, Havelock, Ont.

Dear Friend Harry,—Just a few lines to let you know that I am well and able to do my little bit along with the rest of the boys and hope to continue to do so until this game of war has reached a satisfactory conclusion.

We are at present having a few days' rest, having been relieved a few days ago, and are now billeted with some farmers back of the firing line, and we certainly appreciate the change from the continual din of the guns. However, we can hear the distant roar of the cannon, but are back well out of range of most of them, so feel quite safe for the time being.

No doubt you have read in the papers all about the big scrap at Ypres and of the bit we (Canadians) did there. It was sure some hot corner, and although our losses were pretty heavy, yet we are by no means down-hearted, and in a few days, when we get fixed up, we shall be ready for the firing line once again and as strong as before, in addition to the valuable experience which we have gained in passing through the last few weeks.

I met young George Buchannan, from Havelock, one day recently. He knew Arthur Twuff, a C.P.R. engineer, who used to live in Havelock, and who is now with us. George Buchannan was right in the thickest of the fighting and took part in one or more bayonet charges and, I am glad to say, came through without a scratch.

We are getting fine weather over here at last. The climate is about like that of Ontario at this season of the year, and in most parts also, although the buildings are mostly so old and antique looking. Some of them have been up over 400 years.

Every one here to-day is talking about the sinking of the Lusitania by the German submarines. It is surely a terrible thing to do, but the Germans seem to think that nothing is too outrageous so long as they can strike a blow at the British Empire.

Hope this finds you and Mrs. Roche both well and enjoying life, and that you'll find time to write me occasionally.

Sincerely your friend,

HARRY SHAW.

Letter to His Sister.

The following interesting letter was received last week from Pte. Archer of Marmora by his sister, Mrs. Chas. Roberts of town:

April 29th, 1915.

Dear Sister,—At last I have a few minutes to spare to write a few lines. I have no doubt you will see in your papers an account of the Canadian contingent. As it now stands, it is half gone. We are in the worst battle of the war now. It has lasted eight days until now. We have lost about sixty horses and twenty-five men, so far, but as far as I know only two or three are dead, the rest being badly wounded.

It is a thrilling sight from start to finish. My nerves are all gone, seeing so many wounded and dead lying all around us. I hope and pray I will come through it all the same. I would like to tell you a lot of things but I must not. This is our second big battle—the one of Neuve Chapelle and this one. This is the greatest battle of the war, and I believe the beginning of the end. We never know from one minute to another if we are safe.

May 16th, 1915.

I will now finish my letter of the 29th. I am glad to be able to write you again this morning. Where we are at present there are shells from heavy artillery flying all around us.

There is a heavy bombardment of artillery on this morning, and the roar of the guns would put you in mind of a steady roll of thunder. When I get to a rest camp I will write a good long letter. May God bless you all and bring me home safe again.

Your loving brother,

ARTHUR.

George Street Tennis Club

The Tennis Club of the George Street Methodist church held their annual tea at the Nicholls Oval yesterday evening. The fact that the Tennis Club is one of the largely supported organizations of the church was amply demonstrated by the fact that over sixty members participated in the event, which was an enjoyable one in every way. The Nicholls Oval and St. Paul's Tennis Clubs very kindly allowed the George Street enthusiasts the use of their courts for the evening, but in spite of their thoughtfulness the green was crowded to the limited.

The tea was scheduled to commence at half past five o'clock and shortly after that hour there were a large number of young people on hand, who soon began a number of games. In the meantime the committee in charge and their able assistants prepared a splendid tea, which was served under the trees. Every one was thoroughly satisfied with the repast, which was followed again by tennis games on all the available courts until dusk.

The annual tea was a very successful and pleasant event, and the fact that it was so is due in a very large measure to the efforts of the officers and executive committee of the Association who were in charge of the affair. The officers of the Association are:

President—Mr. E. F. Logan.

Vice-Pres.—Miss M. Elliot.

Sec.-Treas.—Miss Pearl McKee.

Asst. Sec.-Treas.—Miss Minnie Higgins.

MUST CHERISH MEMORY OF OUR HEROES IN OUR OWN HOME TOWN

Major Jos. Mills Says That Many of "The Boys of the Old Brigade" Are Lying in Unmarked Graves Near St. Julien.

WRITES TO THE CHAPLAIN

Rev. Major Davidson, chaplain of the 57th Regiment, has received the following communication from Major J. Mills, of Peterborough, quartermaster of the 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Expeditionary Force. The letter is dated May 18th:

"This is Ascension Day, and we are having early morning service. It is raining just as it did on Easter Day, but oh what a change in our ranks, and the many faces that I miss who had communion that day. I notice by a paper just received that our band played "Where are the boys of the old brigade." Well many of them are lying in unmarked graves near St. Judien near Ypres. It will be in our own home town that we must cherish their memory, and when the great war is over the name of the Canadians will go down in history for all time. It is strange how history repeats itself. A hundred years ago the same thing was taking place over the same country, with Great Britain taking the side of the weaker, just as she is doing now with the main enemy reversed. The Germans think they are the Romans of the twentieth century, and they have well prepared for this conflict.

Our Battalion lost sixteen officers killed and wounded, and five hundred and fifty-two non-commissioned officers and men. Some of them have turned up days after the fight, which for our battalion lasted four days and three nights. It is impossible for you to realize how lonesome I am at times with the loss of my old friend, Major Bennett, Company Sergeant Howarth, and the dear young fellows who were always so soldierly and respectful, and so pleased to have a word with me when they could. The night of the 22nd I reminded Sergeant Howarth that we were just eight months away from Peterborough that day. His reply was characteristic of him. He said—"I expect we will get what we came for, sir." Major Bennett and I had said we would not put on our star until we got back to London on leave. Lieut. Vivian Fessenden is also gone. The last time I saw him was in Sailee, where we enjoyed a bath together. The Wallis boys came through all right. One of them came up to see me. There is a large number of Peterborough men serving in other units. The artillery escaped with few casualties. Bruce is still in the hospital. Our division has been in this place for ten days to refit and get drafts of new men. We move tonight to another area. We are never very long at one place.

"Kind regards to all."

J. MILLS.

a couple of hours and of course had to slow down. We passed lots of ice floes and when the fog lifted were passed about seven icebergs, some being like mountains. Sea getting a little rough.

A French Patrol.

On Monday morning we were hailed by a French patrol which dashed up to us, and after exchanging signals with us went its way, but we at once altered our own course. On Tuesday, the 11th, there was nothing doing, just a rain in the afternoon. On Wednesday nothing but rough weather. That is when the lads got six meals a day (three down and three up.) On Thursday all port-holes were darkened and no smoking allowed on deck after retreat. The lifeboats were in readiness to be put to sea. On Friday the weather turned nice and warm, with the sun shining and it was quite a treat to be on deck. The machine guns were mounted on board in case of an attack from submarines. I don't suppose they would have been much good, but they might have helped.

We had a medical inspection, and I think everybody was all right. We also sighted another patrol, which I guess was sent to warn us. In the afternoon we had photos taken of each platoon. We had been looking for land for a couple of days before this, but I guess we had to go another way to keep out of danger.

Surrounded by Destroyers.

However, at 9 o'clock Friday night I was on deck and I noticed a flashing light or lighthouse. We knew where we were and it was very good news to us. That night we knew we would land at Plymouth. When I saw the light, I went below to tell one of the boys. I was glad all this dash can subsided, but when I went on again there were about five destroyers around us, leading the way for us. I tell you it was wonderful where they came from in such a few minutes. Of course our lights on the port and starboard and mast were out and so were theirs and all you could see of them was a black outline. I guess they were oil-driven, for there was no smoke from them. It just shows how they can creep up without being noticed.

Everything was merry and bright on the S. S. Metaga that night, with everybody getting read to get off her. I was awakened at 4 a.m. Saturday morning by the noise of the anchor being dropped and got up and went on deck. She was towed into port an hour later. We leave the port at 4 p.m., at least one half battalion, and the other at 6 p.m. It is now dinner time and raining to beat the band. There are lots of war vessels lying here, so we can pass the time taking stock. There is a boat lying alongside of us taking on troops for the Dardanelles, and when they marched past our ship we gave them a good cheer."

Arrived in Camp Sunday.

In a later letter the same writer says:

We left Plymouth at 7 o'clock Saturday night and arrived at our camp at 6 o'clock Sunday morning, after going through London. We left Plymouth on the G.W.R. and changed engines for the S. E. and C. Ry. and I tell you it surprised some of the Canadians how fast our small engines travel. I heard after I had written the other letter that before our escort picked us up they chased two submarines away, and I can tell you we had a narrow escape, but still we got through safely. I hear Kingston got the news that we had been lost at sea, and I guess there were many anxious faces in Canada. I don't suppose they got the news that we were safe until we had arrived in England, for you see our ship being a transport, would not be allowed to send any wireless for fear of the Germans beats picking it up. They were looking for us all right, and I guess would have had an enemy on us. I [illegible] hills and we [illegible] channel, with [illegible] patrolling the [illegible]

How Driver Hanton of 24th Was Wounded

Driver Dorris Says Local Artillerymen Send Home Fragments of Shell That Wounded His Comrade

Driver Ambrose Dorris, 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, gives the particulars of the wounding of Driver John Hanton, another Peterborough boy, in a recent letter to his sister-in-law and brother. He has also some further particulars about the guns which were lost to the Germans and recaptured, saying they were English guns and not Canadian, as reported. The letter follows:

France, May 13, 1915.

Mrs. Albert Dorris, 291½ Lewis St., Peterborough.

Dear Sister and Brother,—Received your letter and papers to-day. I was sure pleased to hear you were all in good health. I also received Jerome's letter. I have sent a parcel to Jerome containing two German cartridges and a few pieces of German shells. The largest piece of shell that I sent him is the piece that wounded Driver Hanton. He is a Peterborough boy, and one of my best friends. When he was wounded a shell burst a few yards from him and he was on his horse. It blew him about two feet in the air above his horses. I took the piece out of his saddle that wounded him.

We were exactly eighteen days in action at Ypres, from 22nd up to last Sunday night, May 9th. Hanton was wounded just two hours before we came out of action. It sure was hard luck. We have about twelve casualties. We had one sergeant killed and one gunner died of wounds. We had two horses killed and a few others wounded. Our wagons were all damaged a little, and two guns put out of business from heavy shell fire of the enemy.

Some of the papers say that the Canadians lost four guns and then recaptured them again. The Canadians never lost a gun at all, but they recaptured four English guns. Besides we have not got even one 4.7 gun in this contingent.—The only artillery guns we have here in action were, I think, 12-pounders, 18-pounders and 60-pounders.

We are all reorganized again and will be in action before many hours go by. I would like to tell you just where we are going into action, but the officers read all our mail, and they certainly won't allow that. However, it is as hot a place as the last. You will sure hear of us.

I have had some very close calls and had them often. But they have not got me yet. I am fine and dandy and my nerve is just as good as ever, and that is a whole lot on a battle field.

Well, Marie, I think this will easily last another winter. That last battle we were in is the worst battle that was ever known in history. Our General Alderson stated that to us himself this morning. He is certainly well pleased with the whole contingent. He read all the letters of congratulations that he has had sent to him since the big battle. Believe me, there is some bunch.

We got far more socks and underwear than we can use, and many thanks to you for your kind offer. I got the tobacco and it was a dandy treat.

It has been raining here all day.

Well dear sister and brother, this is all this time, from your brother,

Driver Ambrose Dorris.

Brother of Local Man Is Stationed in India

Where It Is 105 Degrees in the Shade at Eight O'clock in the Morning With a Promise of Hotter Weather—Part of Battalion Had to Stand to Arms for Twenty-four Hours When Native Troops Became Hostile

Mr. C. H. Cheverill, 226 Edinburgh Street, has received the following interesting letter from his brother, Sergt. W. G. Cheverill, of the Wiltshire Regiment, Territorial Reserves, now stationed in Poona, India. The letter in part contains the following: "I am on night duty in the prison, or "Kunnie Heine," as the natives call it, and they call me a "Kunnie Walla." I take over night duty at 5.30, and am relieved at 12 o'clock midnight. I start again at 6 o'clock in the morning and remain until 5.30 in the afternoon; then on again at 12 midnight until 6 o'clock in the morning, then on from 8 till 9, 12 till 2, then am relieved at 5.30 o'clock. What we really do is sixty hours with two spells of five hours for sleep, then we get two nights and one day off duty and then start on again. It has just started to rain. We had a storm lasting five minutes on the thirteenth of this month, and that is the most we have had since October 15th of last year, so you see we have a dry winter here. We have had several showers since the thirteenth, but only of short duration. We will get the monsoons in June. We will then have rain for six or seven weeks. It is getting a bit warm now; 105 degrees in the shade at 8 o'clock in the morning. We expect to get hotter weather in May and June. This is quite hot enough for me, especially as we have to do nearly all the movements at the double in the prison. We play tennis every night when we are not on duty. It is good exercise, and that is what is needed in India or you are likely to get a sluggish liver.

TWO GERMANS IN GAOL.

"We have two Germans in this jail; one was a ship's officer who put into Calcutta and was taken prisoner, and the other has been in this part of the world for nineteen years. They were first put into a concentration camp, but were caught trying to communicate with some Germans at home, so they were tried and sent here for a month. I asked their opinion of the war, and they opined it would finish quickly, probably in July. I only hope it may. I shall not be a bit sorry to get home once more, although I like the climate here very well, but the white population are fair rotters. They will not look at us, let alone speak. If we happen to go to a picture house and should sit beside a white woman they will get up and move away. Should there happen to be a row with the natives then Tommy is wanted at once. We had a bit of a squabble in Poona a few weeks ago, and about one hundred of our battalion had to stand to arms for about twenty-four hours, and about thirty members of a native regiment stationed here were sent to jail. It appears that some of the native students have been trying to get the native regiments to rise, but it was all nipped in the bud. There is not much doubt but that the Germans were at the bottom of it all.

A WEDDING CEREMONY.

"I have just been around to see that all our lambs are asleep. I have to visit them every hour. We have some trouble in trying to make the natives understand us. If you want one to come to you, you have to say "Idder ou" (here come). Again, if you want to ask the price you say "Ire kay kidnay dahm hie" (this of how many pieces of money are). They say everything and do everything backwards. The wear very little clothes. The children only wear a row of beads and a frightened look. Some only wear a piece of string with no beads. The girls marry quite young and many become mothers before they are twelve years of age. The wedding ceremony is a big thing out here. It lasts about ten days, sometimes less. The bridegroom rides on a horse at the head of a procession, then there are women carrying large lamps on their heads, a "brass band," a lot of dancing girls, and then comes the bride in a carriage. She may be six or eight years old, and the bridegroom twenty or twenty-five.

PARSEE BURYING GROUND.

"We have two Parsee burying places just behind the prison. They take the body to these places, towers of silence they are called, and lay it on to an iron grating. Then they leave it for the vultures to tear it to pieces. I saw one taken there on Saturday. Before the procession got to the place the birds had arrived and were hovering overhead. Before the mourners had got out of the [illegible] there fighting like blazes. The bones drop through the grating into a pit below. Of course the place is out of bounds for the troops, but we can see it quite plainly from the prison. This is a terrible place for insects. Everything seems to be alive. We have to stand the legs of the table in water to keep the ants from getting on to them. It is a terrible job to get a native to go any place after dark unless they have a lamp and a stick. They wear no boots, and are afraid of the snakes. I hardly know whether to call the natives dirty or clean, for as soon as they stop work off comes their clothes and they start searching for live. It makes no difference where they are. Of course they are not all like that. They are a hard working lot. For instance, we had to have a new lock put on the gate of the prison, and it took seven men two days from 7 o'clock in the morning until 7 o'clock at night to do the job. One Englishman would have done the job in about three hours easy.

"I am in the pink of condition so far. All of us have to have two ounces of quinine twice per week to ward off fever, etc., so you see they look after us."

WOULDN'T COME BACK FROM FRONT IF HE COULD

Driver Jos. Cadigan of Ennismore is Heard From

Mr. David Cavanagh of Ennismore has received the following letter from an Ennismore boy, Driver Jos. Cadigan, with the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, at the front:

May 12th, 1915.

Dear Friend Dan,—Just a line to let you know I received your kind letter, and I am well, hoping to find the people of Ennismore all the same. The weather here is fine, and dry at present, and the crops look beautiful. I never saw better crops in Canada. The potatoes are all over ground.

Well, Dan, we are back resting for a few days, after supplying the guns with ammunition for fourteen days. And I tell you it was a hot battle. There were two shells fell in our horse lines. I could hear the buzz of them coming and I got behind a tree and, believe me, there were pieces of shrapnel driven out of sight into the tree, and a couple of mornings after there were two shells dropped there and killed nine horses. They claim it has been the hottest battle that has been fought yet. We were the luckiest battery in the Brigade. We had two men killed and six injured. I suppose you will think that I am sorry for going to the front, but I am not. I would not go home now if I got a chance. The last day we were in action we took up two loads of ammunition. I was on the last waggon going up, but I got unloaded and got away first. There were two or three "Jack Johnsons" came and blew two of the drivers off their horses and wounded one of the drivers and a horse. There was a man blown up into the air about forty feet and he was only slightly injured. But, Dan, one gets used to them, and we pay no attention to them now. Really I don't know what we do with all the sleep we get. Each driver has a team to look after when not in action, and sleep the rest of the time.

Bye-bye for this time, hoping this finds you in the best of health, as it leaves me, hem.

Your loving friend,

JOE.

ITALIAN RESERVISTS CALLED TO COLOURS

TORONTO, June 2.—Canadian Italians will go to the war. Official news was received in the city yesterday calling upon all Italian naval and military officers to return home at once, and asking all reservists over 20 years of age to hold themselves ready to join the colours.

Vice-Consul Nardello received the news in the afternoon from Consul-General Chilesotti at Montreal, and immediately posted a general mobilization notice in his office window.

The Consul-General in his message stated that the Canadian Patriotic Fund would give the families of Italian reservists the same privileges as the families of soldiers with the Canadian contingents.

Similar news was received at other Italian centres in Canada. At the last census there were 5,000 Italian army reservists in Canada. The medical examination of the Toronto reservists will be performed by Dr. Harlep Smith.

Mr. Nardello is of opinion the reservists will receive transportation facilities from the Canadian Government. There are plenty of Italian steamers to convey the reservists home. Four boats belonging to the Italian lines are listed to sail from United States ports to Palermo, Naples and Genoa during the present month.

Mr. Nardello is unaware if Italian reservists in the United States, numbering, it is calculated, 400,000 men, have been asked to be ready. Should they be called upon and should the United States object to them sailing direct to Italy, they might possibly mobilize at some point in Canada, and sail from a Canadian port.

PRAISE FOR WORDS OF CAPT. ACKERMAN

OTTAWA, Ont., June 2.—Under the caption, "Courage International," the Ottawa Journal editorially commends a Peterborough man.

Part of the editorial says: "I suppose we checked the Germans in their mad rush for Calais, but we only did what any British regiment would have done."—Captain C. H. Ackerman, Peterborough, in a letter to his father. "Well said, Captain Ackerman. The stand of the Canadians at Langemarck was worthy of the breed and nothing more. In our rightful pride at what they did, let us not forget that every British regiment which has been tried in this war has done as well. During the past few weeks, as casualty lists come in, there has been noticeable inclinations among some of us to ask, where is Kitchener's army? To grumble that our losses were proportionately heavy. Don't let us worry about Kitchener's army, and be assured that all British soldiers do their share."

MISSION WORK IN INDIA HAS MADE PROGRESS

Encouraging and Interesting Lecture By Dr. Nugent at Knox Church Last Night —Some of the Accomplishments

The progress of Presbyterian missions in the heart of India was lucidly portrayed by Dr. Nugent, recently returned from that field, in an illustrated lecture at last night's meeting of the Peterborough Presbyterial Women's Missionary Society in Knox Church. Over 200,000 Indian soldiers in the British ranks to-day in France and Flanders, at the Dardanelles and elsewhere have aroused throughout the Empire greater interest than ever in India and her peoples. With a population of over 315,000,000, she is forty times the size of Canada. Four out of every five subjects of the British Empire live in India. Eighty per cent. of the people reside in villages, and for the most part were clusters of mud houses, roofed with bamboo, where sanitation is unknown and undesired. These and other conditions pictured on unusually fine slides, created something of an idea of the immensity of the mission field in India. Dr. Nugent referred briefly to his own activities in hospital work and the effectiveness of this means of stimulating the sympathies of the people. The prototype of this manner of appeal was found in Christ's ministrations. He had healed the sick, cured lepers, restored sight to the blind, and even raised the dead. To the limit of their means, the hospitals mentioned by Dr. Nugent have done and are doing a great splendid work, supported by the contributions from our congregations. Incidentally, the pictures gave evidence of the effectiveness of the labours of those sterling women who have been devoting their lives to the propagation of Christianity.

A passing feature was the reference to the village wells, many of which reach proportions covering 100 to 200 and 400 square feet. The wells form a common meeting place and on their wide walls the people customarily sit. A slightly different feature is the practice of bathing and washing clothes in the water which may be reached by stone steps. And after these ablutions the people fill their earthen jars and carry home a supply for ordinary household requirements. The missionaries are not allowed to enter the wells because the people believed the presence of the foreigners would contaminate the water. When they do receive a supply the missionaries strain and boil it before they can use it with any degree of safety and confidence.

Dr. Nugent said there were 26,000,000 child widows under the age of five years. This is a subject which is quite generally known now, but Dr. Nugent brought out a strong contrast by showing a picture of one bridal party of five couples married according to Christian ideals.

The lecture was altogether interesting and encouraging. Pictures of the fine hospital buildings, churches, theological colleges and high schools, the work of the missionaries and the large conferences were all striking evidences of the successful work that is being accomplished.

Rev. Mr. Mackenzie presided over the meeting during which Mrs. S. Dickson Hall sang very sweetly "My Task."

Rev. Mr. Craw of Springville extended greetings from the Peterborough Presbytery, and spoke of the encouragement Dr. Nugent's lecture afforded the missionary givers at home.

A vote of thanks was moved by Rev. Robert Pogue, seconded by Mr. W. Taylor, to the lecturer, to Mrs. Hall, and to all those who had assisted.

Local Council of Women's Column

The Matter Published in this column will be supplied by the Local Council of Women and in the interest of their work.

Women are called butterflies, but man was the original butterfly, and he has not entirely recovered from the practice of flitting from flower to flower, according to Professor Rudolph M. Binder of the New York University, who addressed the Woman's Republican Club at Delmonico yesterday morning. Professor Binder said that absolute monogamy would settle many social questions.

"There were a number of factors contributing to the introduction of monogamy or the marriage of one husband to one wife," he said, and he went down to the lower order of life in a biological treatment of the subject and told the women that the female was the first of the species, and that the male was only an afterthought. The women laughed appreciatively at that, and again, knowing that the joke was on them, when Professor Binder, continuing, said:

"But you know the afterthought is often better than the original one."

"In the early human races," he continued, "there were no monogamous marriages and it was only through various forms of mating that we came to it. Women, from the psychological point of view, is a hero worshipper. Probably in the cave days her ideal was the strongest man with hte strongest club. Next probably she idealised the man who was kind, and finally, in the days of the crusaders, when she found the man who was strong and brave and also kind, there originated romantic love. Perhaps, the suffragettes who do not marry have an ideal that they do not find.

"Then the woman dearly loved her own child with a love different from animals who care for their offspring only as long as they can give them sustenance. The woman wishes to develop her child psychologically, and here she connects with the woman hero worshipper, and she is not satisfied unless the father of her child is her husband. It was inevitable that she should struggle against the group forms of marriage.

"Man was variable, and has not altogether overcome that, though he must as he gets to the ways of civilization.

"Men and women must respect each other. If a young man expects to marry a pure woman he must give her what he expects—in other words, the single standard, and that is the thing the women must strive for. It is the greatest task of the woman of to-day, to educate the men to be as pure as themselves and it will solve many questions. Marriage will be more stable.

"This task to educate all men, I believe is in the power of women as they stand together, and I believe the men will come around. Other men will realize that they will be happier on this higher standard. All males are human beings, and if they realize that they are happier they will come around in the woman's standard."

The quarterly Executive meeting of the National Council of Women will be held in Peterborough on June 15, and 16, 1915.

"They talk about a woman's sphere
As though it had a unit;
There's not a place in earth or heaven,
There's not a task to mankind given,
There's not a blessing or a woe,
There's not a whispered yes or no,
There's not a life or death, or birth,
That has a feather's wbight of worth,
Without a woman in it."

The Impelling Force.

The woman's cause to-day is just as certain of victory, however slow it may be in coming, for there is an irresistible spiritual force behind it, a force which renders individuals willing to suffer any extremity of ill in the service of their ideal; they believe in it sufficiently to subordinate their own personal interest to it continually, and history teaches plainly enough what results from that.—Rev. R. J. Campbell, M.A.

PRIVATE MOCKETT IS RECOVERING

The following letter, dated May 12, which was received by the Rev. Canon Davidson, refers to Private F. Mockett of the Peterborough detachment, 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Expeditionary Force. Private Mockett was reported wounded following the battle of Langemarck:

"Pte. F. Mockett desires me to write to you to say that he is getting on very well. He is in the hospital in 'The Picture Gallery, The Castle Dublin,' a magnificent room with plenty of air and very cheerful. He has plenty of people to talk to and does not seem to want for anything. He is hoping that his wound will soon be better and that he may be able to get up.

"They are all wonderfully fine men and bearing their troubles like the heroes that they are. We ought to be proud of our men."

Yours sincerely,
Samuel Hemphill,
Assistant Chaplain, Castle Hospital, Dublin.

COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE WILL CLOSE ON JUNE 11th

Last Regular Meeting of Board of Education Held Last Evening Prior to Summer Vacation

The last regular session of the Board of Education before the summer vacation, was held last evening. There was very little business to occupy the attention of the members, and it was over in a very short time. The most important item of business, (in the eyes of the Collegiate Institute pupils perhaps), was the reception of the following report from Mr. H. R. H. Kenner, regarding the closing of the local Collegiate Institute for the summer vacation:

"The Departmental Examinations begin on Wednesday, June 9th. On Wednesday, Thursday and Friday only the Faculty Entrance pupils write, and I will be able to keep the rest of the classes going during those three days. But on Monday, June 14th, the Normal Entrance, Junior Matriculation and Faculty Entrance pupils will all be writing. It will, therefore, be necessary to close the Institute on Friday, June 11."

Manual Training.

The report of Mr. Albert H. Leake, Inspector on Manual Training Classes, in connection with his inspection in this city on May 5th last, contains the following, under general remarks:

"The organizing of the High School Classes in connection with Manual Training is not satisfactory. In September work was begun with four classes. In the 1st November this was reduced to three, and in January the personnel of the classes was again changed, thus disorganizing the work.

No second form boys are allowed to take the work thus depriving them of this opportunity to earn marks as a bonus in the lower school examination. (The school is not approved under regulations 97 (2) (b)")

In order to comply with the requirements of the Collegiate Institute Inspector, it is impossible for Mr. Kenner, to arrange his time-table at present to come within the requirements as laid down by Mr. Leake.

Mr. Leake reports favourably on the Manual Training Teaching Staff and the work of the students.

Room for Red Cross.

The request was granted, and the room will at all times be under the supervision of the janitor.

Contract Awarded.

The Property Committee reported as follows:

"As authorized, your Committee advertised for tenders for fuel required for the ensuing year and have awarded the contract to Mr. J. E. A. Fitzgerald, as follows:

For ¾ lump Youghioghenny at $5.00 per ton.

Regina Smokeless at $5.10 per ton.

The above prices are for car lots and railroad weights to be accepted by the Board.

Your Committe ask that they be given authority to make the necessary repairs at the various schools during the summer vacation."

The report was adopted.

THE SITUATION NEAR PRZEMYSL—From recent statements it is certain the Russians are in strength on the west side of the line 20 miles northwest of Jaroslau, near which they have gained much ground. The German forces seem to be so intent on surrounding Przemysl that they are heedless of great danger developing from Russian offensives.

Wants Original Contract Respected

Mr. R. R. Hall's Complaint Will Be Made the Subject of a Test Case—Meeting of Utilities Commission

At last night's meeting of the Utilities Commission a letter was read from Mr. R. R. Hall, expressing exception to the Commission attempting to violate the terms of a contract that existed between the writer and the Peterborough Light and Power Company. Mr. Hall pointed out that his contract with the company called for a supply of light at two dollars a month for a period of five years, and since the system had been acquired by the Commission, the price had been raised to five dollars and ninety-one cents a month. It was his opinion that the Peterborough Light and Power Company, or its successors should carry out the terms of the contract and not treat it as a mere "scrap of paper."

Mr. H. G. Fink, manager of the Utilities Commission, intimated that Mr. Hall was in possession of an electric heater current for which was not provided for in the contract. The Commissioners decided to refer the matter to Mr. E. H. D. Hall, solicitor for the Commission. As other complaints of a similar nature have been made, Mr. Hall's complaint will likely be the subject for a test case.

Granted Leave of Absence.

Leave of absence was granted to Capt. A. W. McPherson, M.D., and local Medical Officer of Health, until such time as he returns from the front. In the meantime the duty of making monthly tests of the city's water supply will devolve upon Sanitary Inspector Spence, whom the Commissioners characterized as a man thoroughly competent to do the work. His first report was on last night's fyle. The water was reported to be in a satisfactory state of purity.

Sanitary Inspector Spence reported that a family was camping on the edge of the river near the waterworks. He had visited them and warned them against bathing in the river at that point, or polluting it in any way. Waterworks Superintendent Dobbin assured the Commissioners that a close watch would be kept on the situation.

A. G. Fawcett, formerly of the Waterworks Department, wrote the Commissioners requesting a recommendation in event of him seeking a similar position elsewhere. This will be provided.

A SOUVENIR

In 1888 the company determined to introduce the 24-hour system on the western divisions; and so give emphasis to the new departure, and, at the same time, help the memory of all concerned, it issued paper dials with the words 24 hours completing the day, which were to be worn on the watches of the employees, to familiarize them with the new method. This method [illegible] the old [illegible] in 1888, as something which was going to revolutionize the [illegible] life of the people, results the [illegible] company to arrive the question, though, of course, the change was advantageous in itself.

Police Constable Was Appointed

The Board of Police Commissioners met yesterday afternoon and among other things endorsed Chief of Police Thompson's recommendation respecting the appointment of William Smyth to succeed Police Constable Cookman until the latter returns from England, where he is now employed as a mechanic in a naval shipyard. Smyth has had three years' experience in the Irish Constabulary. He was last employed with the Grand Trunk, running out of Lindsay. He will start at an initial salary of $[illegible] a year. Two other applications, namely, Wiggs and Jones, received favourable consideration, but the Chief showed a preference for the applicant with experience and his judgment was allowed to prevail.

The Board was of the opinion that Cookman was serving the Empire as much as though he enlisted, and his position on the local police force will be kept open for him.

We Are Right

We do not want to buy you, if we could, besides business obtained that way will not stay; but if the quality of our goods, our method of selling and the service our Company renders do not appeal to you, success will not come to us.

If the manner we conduct our business and the principles we adopt commend themselves and results are satisfactory or relatively better, then your good will belongs to us, because we have won it fairly and deservingly.

It is on this basis the SUN LIFE OF CANADA (not by any means the oldest of Canadian Companies) has larger Assets, Premium Income, Interest Income and Surplus than any other Canadian company has a larger amount of Insurance in force, wrote more business last year and for years previously, and paid more to policy holders, than any other Canadian Life Insurance Company.

This success proves that the public appreciates our methods, principles and results, and it is better to know WE ARE RIGHT on these lines than even a greater financial success.

A STORY OF JOFFRE.

General Joffre recently had occasion to call for volunteers from among a section of the French Flying Corps to perform a most dangerous reconnaissance. All held up their hands, but only four were needed. The chosen ones hurriedly left the ranks in order to get their machines going, when the General called out "Stop, stop! is that the way to leave? It is not usual for children to dismiss going to school to embrace their father."

This evidently immediately turned and were successively embraced by the Commander-in-Chief.

The Cheese Board Partitions Money

Half Their Total Goes to Various Patriotic Associations and Objects

Five hundred and fifty dollars of the Peterborough Cheese Board's patriotic fund was partitioned this morning among various organizations of this county, all of whom are working with one common object. The first division of the fund is as follows:

Field Kitchen Fund, 3rd Contingent	$100.00
Daughters of the Empire, Hastings	50.00
Daughters of the Empire, Norwood	50.00
Soldiers' Comfort Club, Lakefield	50.00
Women's Institute, Warsaw	50.00
Women's Patriotic League, East City	50.00
Otonabee Patriotic Fund, Keene	75.00
Fairmount Red Cross	25.00
For city organizations	100.00
	$550.00

It will be noticed that the Cheese Board donates $150 to patriotic organizations in this city. Fifty dollars goes to the East City Ladies' and one hundred dollars will be divided among some of the other patriotic associations of women. In this connection witnesses should recall the fact that this money was received from the sale of a day's make of cheese at all the factories that sell on the Peterborough Board. The committee have placed one contingency, namely, that each organization furnish a statement of how the money was expended and what articles were purchased with it. The $550 thus divided is about half of the sum at the disposal of the Cheese Board. The remainder of the fund [illegible] to the very best advantage.

RESIGNATION WAS ACCEPTED

Meeting of Mother's Club of the King George School

A short but interesting entertainment followed, which was participated in by Miss Scott, Mrs. M. Wand, Miss Thomas, and Miss Richardson.

They are sacrificing everything for us; what are we doing for them?

New York Stocks

A. H. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, June 2.—In the early afternoon the volume of dealings in standard issues was small, and the price changes were negligible.

There was a little increase of strength in M.O.P. following the publication of the statement declaring the note extension plan operative. It was believed that within additional time for deposit of notes practically all those which have not yet assented would do so. The fact that the conference between the President and Ambassador Von Bernstroff lasted only ten minutes tended to discourage the belief in the establishment of a basis of understanding, but Wall Street seemed to be prepared for everything unfavourable which might arise.

Chicago, June 2—Prince Current's weekly crop report says the general rains of the past two weeks has practically eliminated dry soil conditions in the surplus grain producing States. There is some complaint of the soil being too wet. Abandoned acreage from insect damage is about 10 per cent. Average spring wheat condition is 91.5; oats about 94, and corn, 92.

Chicago, June 2.—Wheat broke to a new low level on favourable government weather reports and further liquidation. Export inquiry for old wheat is not heavy and the absence of a demand for new makes the situation, where prices are easily affected by selling.

Russians Continue to Repulse Attacks

Fight For Peremysl Is Still Raging With Unabated Desperation

Russians Are Not Weakening in Resistance to German Onslaughts---New Drive Over Bzura

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PETROGRAD, June 3.—Peremysl is now being bombarded by huge sixteen-inch Austro-German seige howitzers and other heavy guns.

The War Office admitted in an official statement this forenoon that the enemy captured several Russian guns, which fought until they ran out of ammunition.

To-day's official statement is the first admission from the War Office that the Russians defending Peremysl are short of ammunition. Though the War Office expressed confidence that the artillery attack launched by Mackensen will be beaten off, it was deemed best to inform the public of a handicap under which the Russians are fighting.

Forts 10 and 11 have been made particular objects for the heaviest enemy attacks. German infantrymen succeeded in penetrating these forts and captured the guns referred to in the official statement.

Elsewhere all attempts by the enemy infantry to storm the city's outer defences have been repulsed.

LONDON, June 3.—The battle for Peremysl, which is proving one of the most stubborn and sanguinary of the war, continues with unabated fury. Both sides have poured reinforcements into the field, and with attacks and counter-attacks the losses in men and material are piling up to an unprecedented extent.

The German and Austrian reports claim that some of the forts on the northern front have already fallen, and that on the southeastern front their troops are progressing towards the railway that joins the fortress with Lemberg. But the latest Petrograd communication says that the Germans who got into one fort were driven out, and makes no mention of the capture of Stry or of other successes claimed by the Teutonic allies.

Simultaneously with the battle to the southeast the Germans are making another effort to break through the Bzura lines toward Warsaw, but whether this is a serious attempt to capture the Polish capital, or only a diversion to prevent the Russians from sending more reinforcements into Galicia, is not disclosed.

The Germans claim to have captured upwards of 300,000 Russians and an immense amount of material during the month of May. Despite this the Russians do not appear to have slackened their resistance.

The Austrian official statement yesterday declares that "two additional fortifications" on the northern front of Peremysl have been captured from the Russians, and that the conquered ground, including the three forts declared Tuesday to have been taken, has been maintained. Vienna says the Russians are making strong attacks along the San, but claims that they have been repulsed, while Russian forces, which attacked in Southeastern Galicia, it is asserted, have been forced to retreat.

CLAIM ENORMOUS BOOTY.

The Vienna report, in summarizing the war booty taken by the Austro-Germans during the month of May from the Russians, says it includes 199 ammunition waggons, 8,500 rounds of artillery ammunition, 5,500,000 cartridges and 32,000 rifles.

Newspapers published in the Baltic Provinces are authority for the statement that a Russian patrol has captured General von Pritvitz, the commandant of the German forces at Libau, together with several other German officers. The patrol had an encounter with the general's escort. Some of them were killed, but the remainder were also taken prisoners. Gen. von Pritvitz was slightly wounded on the head.

Earth, Fire and Water Used to Wed Couple

HAGERSTOWN, MD., June 3. After a ten-year search, Frederick A. Chubb, president of the United States and Central America Timber, Rubber and Realty Company, a concern capitalized at several million dollars, has just found in this city his two motherless children, one of whom had not been born when he fought with the United States troops in the Boxer uprising in China in 1900.

Chubb says that in 1903 he was living in Washington with his wife and one child. As a member of the Ninth United States Infantry he went to China, and was seriously wounded at Peking. He lay for months in a critical condition in the hospital, and by mistake his wife was notified that he had been killed. Believing she was a widow, she remarried.

After wandering for several years over the United States in quest of his children he obtained a position as master mechanic on the Panama Canal. Later he bought up hard wood timber tracts and rubber plantations, until now he owns 100,000 acres and is very wealthy.

A few years ago he came to the United States, and while ill at Milwaukee had a vision in which a woman resembling his wife appeared before him and told him if he went to Keyser, W. Va., his aunt there would tell him where he could find his children. When he recovered he went to Keyser, and was there told his children were in Hagerstown. He came here, found them and ascertained that his wife had died here last November.

Firemen Rescue Boy Friend in Pit

NEW YORK, June 3.—Little Tommy Breen was walking along East 138th street, near Cypress avenue, the Bronx, recently, having great fun by bouncing a rubber ball. It finally eluded his grasp and rolled under the railing which protects an excavation into the new subway at Cypress avenue. Tommy, who is twelve years old and is a great friend of all the firemen of Engine Company No. 83, where quarters are next door to his home, at No. 690 East 138th street, climbed over the railing and peered down in an effort to locate the ball. His foot slipped and he fell forty feet to the bottom of the pit.

Half an hour later Captain Thomas Garrieti, of the engine company, while standing in front of the engine house heard moans which seemed to come from the ground. He called Fireman Casey, and together they traced the sounds to the excavation. Peering down into the hole, which was pitch dark, they decided that some one was injured.

All work on the subway was stopped on account of the holiday, but Casey and Policeman Hay, of the Alexander avenue station, got a rope, tied it to a telegraph pole and descended into the excavation. At a given signal, other firemen pulled on the rope and hoisted Hay to the ground. In his arms he held Tommy, the firemen's little friend, who recognized them with a cherry smile, although suffering great pain.

Dr. Kavaler, of the Lincoln Hospital, found that the boy was suffering from internal injuries and a fractured thigh, besides numerous cuts and bruises. He was carried to St. Francis Hospital, where it is said that his condition is serious.

Tommy's father is a letter carrier. One of his uncles is a fireman.

Huge Losses Inflicted By Allies On the Enemy Around Ablain

SPECIAL CABLE:

PARIS, June 3.—Some idea of the extreme importance of the fighting about Carency and Albian-St. Nasaire is given by the War Office last night in an announcement that during the last three weeks at these places the French made 3,100 prisoners, of whom 64 are officers, and buried 2,600 dead German soldiers.

The entire fighting in this neighbourhood, says the announcement, was carried on by one French division, which means, roughly, 20,000 troops. No estimate of the German forces opposing it is made. During the three weeks mentioned the French losses amounted to 3,200 men, of whom about two-thirds were wounded.

Further gains in the Labyrinthe, south-east of Neuville-Saint Vaast, are recorded by the War Office today, and it is stated that more than 450 Germans have been made prisoners in this vicinity since Monday.

The City of Rheims has been bombarded by the Germans again, the cathedral being one of the chief targets. The British have made progress near Sonnebeke.

Work of the Engineers.

The part played by engineering corps in the fighting in the region of Arras is described in a narrative from an official observer attached to the French Army given out here tonight:

"In the vicinity of Carency the battle has been conducted by use of mines since January," the observer writes. "The calm courage shown by our men in the face of great dangers is especially worthy of mention. In this region the galleries and subterranean connecting trenches are more than a mile and a half in length, and the quantity of explosives used from March 6 until May 1st is more than 6 tons.

"On May 9th an attack was begun on Carency. Early in the morning the attack was prepared by artillery and simultaneously by the explosion of 17 mine fields, which destroyed completely a majority of the enemy's barbed wire fortifications and breastworks, and demolished the enemy's subterranean passages. Germans appeared in large numbers and miners were killed outright, only 70 being captured.

"This gave great courage to our infantry in charging, owing to the knowledge that the ground beneath was not mined, and that they need not fear that any minute they might be blow up.

"Many other places also were captured, owing to the splendid work and long preparation of the engineers. Their work was particularly valuable at Loretto and Decauville. The work of the sappers, in the construction of trenches, bomb-proofs, platforms for guns and super-imposed galleries, also, has been excellent. As soon as ground has been gained, engineers are brought up to organize it against counter-attack.

The following official statement was issued last night regarding the operations of the Belgian army:

"A fierce artillery duel marked the day of May 31 along the Belgian front. Belgian guns of all calibres massed their fire, blowing up the enemy's trenches and accessory defences at a number of points. All the roads beyond the German front are commanded by the Belgians' fire, making it very difficult for the enemy to bring up fresh supplies. The first line of Belgian troops by a continuous fire, prevented German troops from advancing."

Inquest Into The Death of Mr. David Guiry

An inquest into the death of David Guiry, a venerable resident of the Township of Eniemore, who died at St. Joseph's Hospital as a result of injuries received in an auto accident, was opened last evening by Coroner Greer, who considered an inquest necessary before the burial certificate was granted. A jury was impannelled viewed the body, and adjourned till Saturday.

Italian Invaders Are Now Within Three Miles of Roverto

Austrians Fail to Stem the Onward March---Troops Advancing West of Lake Garda Towards Riva

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ROME, June 3.—Italian troops advancing up the Giudicaria valley, west of Lake Garda, have occupied the town of Storo on the road which leads through the Val di Ledro to Riva, an important position at the head of the lake. These troops have effected a junction with the Alpine chasseurs which made their way up the Camonica and Caffaro valleys. It appears to be the plan of the Italian general staff to attack Riva and Arco and then march on Rovereto both from the west and east, the troops which are moving up the line of railway from Verona being prepared to co-operate with those from the west.

Meanwhile, on the frontier of Carinthia, where the Italians have established themselves in several strong positions threatening the valley of the Drave, running eastward from a point near Bruneck, there are heavy artillery duels the Austrians having sent powerful batteries to shell the Italian position on Monte Croce.

FIVE TIMES DRIVEN BACK.

Details of the fighting in Monte Croce Pass over the North Venetian Alps show it to have been one of the most dramatic episodes in the newly opened war. Five times tried troops of Austria attacked advancing afresh over their dead. Five times they were hurled back broken and disordered by the telling fire of the Italian infantry. They had had enough, their energy and ardour was spent, and they advanced no more. Then the Italians who hitherto had been fighting a stubborn defensive fight dashed forward, falling upon the bewildered and disorganized Austrians. They put them to flight. The rain was falling heavily, and there was a heavy mist, which silhouetted the men and mountains in ghost-like grey, but the Alpini, one of the best fighting units of the whole Italian army, were not to be denied or held in leach by rain or fog. They swept through the severely shaken Austrian ranks. In vain the Austrian officers sacrificed themselves in attempting to rally their broken units. The Austrian infantry made a poor effort to withstand the impact of the Italian shock. They were simply overwhelmed and annihilated.

APPROACHING ROVERETO.

While the Italian invaders of the Trentino have so far met with little resistance from the Austrians, it is felt here that the first serious engagement in that region will be fought when the actual attack on the Rovereto defences is begun. Italian artillery yesterday began the bombardment of Mori, a town about three miles southwest of Rovereto, but the violent rains have prevented the hauling of big guns up the sides of the hills now occupied by the Italians.

The entire Adige Valley, south of Rovereto, is crossed by natural barricades of rock, strengthened by forts constructed by the Austrians since the outbreak of the European war. If the Italians are able to batter down these defences and occupy Rovereto it is believed that the march to Trent will be comparatively easy. At Trent, however, there is a series of forts which make the entire region surrounding the capital of the Trentino an entrenched camp. The forts stretch out in a semicircle, east, south and west of the city, and the Italians will have to undertake regular siege operations to encircle the city.

21st Battalion Had A Daily Paper On the Voyage To England

Lance Corp. Williams Sends a Copy to the Examiner---Peterboro' Boy Says Hythe Camp is the Finest He Has Ever Seen---Letter to His Mother

Mrs. Thos. Williams, 430 Dunscord Street, has received a letter from her son, Lance Corporal Williams of Peterborough with the 21st Battalion now in Spadling Camp, Hythe, Kent, England.

Lance Corp. Williams says: "We arrived here this morning at 6.30 a.m. after a dandy voyage across on the R.M.S. Metagama, a brand new C.P.R. liner. We left Montreal at 11 a.m. Thursday, May 6, and arrived in Plymouth 4 a.m. Saturday, May 15, under escort of four destroyers, and there is a strong rumour afloat that we were chased into the channel by the enemy submarines, but this is not confirmed. As far as the camp is concerned it is the finest camp I have ever seen in all my life. They call the buildings we are quartered in huts, but they are palaces compared to the Cereal building in Kingston, and the meals are fine. Harry (Pte. Harry Cobb) and I are going to camp for Folkestone tonight, only four miles from the camp. The hospital here all Shornciffe is full of Canadian wounded. Gunner [illegible] was telling us that some of the English soldiers have been one day and are back forty-eight hours afterwards, wounded, and that we are only 43 miles from the firing line.

Lance Corp. Williams enclosed in the letter for a member of the Examiner staff a copy of the daily paper printed on board the Metagama during the voyage of the 21st. This enterprising sheet was called "The Daily Blade," devoted as its heading says, "Exclusively to ethics and saddy first principles." In the foreword the soldier editor gives this declaration of policy, "If you have no reputation it has been our earnest endeavour to give you one. If you have up have tried to take it away." The Blade adds: "The spirit is one of mockery, so if you want to take it seriously, can your sentiments and work them off on the Huns. Naturally any nickname is a prominent topic as witnessed by the following:

"Capt. McCully threw up everything but his commission" and this verse:

"We badly farewel to our native land,
And it filled our hearts with sorrow,
But McCully and Spriggs said farewell to their lunch.
And look to their books on the morrow."

Revolt By The Civil Population

Troops are reported to have fired into crowds, killing and wounding many citizens. Five thousand persons are reported arrested.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

GENEVA, June 3.—Kaiser Wilhelm has made preparations to go to the Austro-Italian battlefront within a few days, according to Berlin advices today.

ALLEGED BRITISH SPY ARRESTED

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 3—According to a despatch to the Central News from Leipsic, Saxony, George Crossman, an Englishman, has been sentenced to three years' imprisonment by a Saxon court on the charge of attempting to furnish the British Government with the German plans to invade England.

There is a Dearth of Machinists

OTTAWA, June 2.—Messrs. Barnes and Wyndham, the British delegation which has come out to secure Canadian machinists for war munition factories, are facing a very difficult task. There is a dearth of unemployed machinists in the country. According to the advices to the Labour Department, all are busy and more are wanted. The Ross Rifle Co., for instance, want a thousand.

There is talk of importing machinists from the United States. Ordinarily the alien labour law would operate against this, but the present conditions are exceptional, with the factories busy alone on war munitions. The British representatives do not wish to engage any Canadians now employed, and in view of the domestic situation there is small chance of securing any large number of men. They may endeavour to secure some in the United States.

The American Peat Society, which plans to increase interest in the use of the great peat deposits of the United States, will hold its ninth annual meeting in Detroit in September.

Expect Fighting Along Railway

The C. P. R. was linked or about to be linked with an historic part of Austria when the war broke out. Reference has been made in this column to the line converging on Trieste, which the C.P.R. used with its observation cars, while its boats called at the sea port; but the Sudbahn—southern railway — was notable in this, that it led, between Innsbruck and Trent—to the scene which Dante his inspiration for his immortal description of the "Inferno." That scene, unaltered probably to any appreciable extent, at least since the day when the melancholy eye of Dante gazed upon it—can be seen to-day from the Imperial Hotel at Trent. It is a weird and awe-inspiring scene, of which the ingredients are great precipitous, rocky hills, deep and impenetrable chasms, through which turbulent waters make their way; a solitude as of death, and mountains of awe-inspiring height, the whole suggesting at once unspeakable desolation and elemental upheaval. It was on this line leading to Trent and to the scene, that the C.P.R. had arranged with the Austrian Government to run its observation cars in the interests of a great tourist business, which would have responded to the novel facilities afforded by the company—when the war broke out, and the C.P.R. cars were taken possession of. Trent and all the surrounding districts are occupied by an Italian population, firm patriots to a man, but ground down by Austrian tyranny. It is expected that some of the severest fighting will take place along the line of this railway which the C.P.R. had planned to exploit for peaceful occupation and traffic.

INQUEST INTO THE DEATH OF DAVID GUIRY

A jury was empannelled at 4 p.m. at Messrs. Lane and Rano's undertaking parlours to inquire into the death of Mr. David uiry, which occurred at St. Joseph's Hospital yesterday morning, following injuries received in an automobile accident on Monday evening.

The following gentlemen were the jurors sworn: Messrs. T. B. McGrath (foreman), Coleman Blewett, Thos. McQuillan, Ed. Huff, James Fitzsimmons, John T. McCoy, Herbert McKee, J. M. Brooks, Joseph Picard, J. F. Thornton, Wm. Curtin and T. M. Caldwell.

After the body was viewed by the jurors an adjournment was ordered by Coroner Dr. Greer until Saturday evening next at 8 o'clock in the police court.

It is comforting to reflect that the quality of Salada Tea can never vary. Twenty-three years ago it was determined that, come what may, the quality of this famous tea must never fluctuate with market conditions. Now that the markets have risen beyond all records, the Company, in order to support this rule is bound to advance the price of Salada to the consumer, but it is still the finest tea procurable.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

"I'm mighty sorry the whisky got on ya," sez Tom Smith, and if the' was a shake in his voice, I couldn't catch it. "I've been on water for some time now, and I wanted to stay on it, but my friend, here, said if I wouldn't drink with him, he'd make the kid drink. When I saw he sure meant it, I had to use haste. I'm sorry, and now the only thing I can think to do, is to ask you all to drink with me."

"That's the way out of it," sez Big Jeff, settin' out the glasses, and they all crowded up; but Panther still looked troublous.

Tom Smith took a stiff drink without battin' an eye, and then he raised up his glass and whanged it down on the floor with a crash.

"What do you mean by that" sez Panther.

"I mean that no one else is ever goin' to drink out of the glass that has started me to drinkin' again," sez Tom Smith.

"That's the second time you've insulted me," sez Panther, "and that's my limit. Do you understand that?"

"I'm not doin' any studyin' about you," sez Tom Smith. "I'm feelin' that drink tear around inside of me, shakin' the ashes out of the way and blowin' every insulterin' coal into flame—and that's job enough for one man."

The bulls were pickin' at some fat grass and Shorty looked back to see what had become of Red; so I clenched my left fist where it was hid by my pony, nodded my head toward the store, and then nodded to him to come back. Phil McLaughlin was close to him, and they started back pronto, the rest of the boys also beginnin' to notice that somethin' was up.

I couldn't see Tom Smith's face, but from the tilt if his head, I estimated he was lookin scornful into Panther's glitterin' eyes. As for Panther, he was somewhat jarred to be took so cool like, and for a moment he was stumped for a comeback. Then he noted the way that Tom Smith had his handkerchief tied loose around his mouth to keep the air out, and he sez: "What are ya wearin' a mask for?"

"Them 'at need to know, already know," sez Tom Smith, "and them 'at don't need to know."

"Well I don't like it," sez Panther, reachin 'out his hand.

"Don't you lay a finger to that," sez Tom Smith, slow but warnful.

It was as quiet as the grave inside the store except for what those two said. Flames had sidled off to one side where he crouched over as keen as a ferret. Red had set down his glass and stood lookin' purty well beat out at what his fool joke had brought about, and Panther's gang slouched along the bar, lookin' loose and loafy, but ready for whatever was to happen.

Panther's hand stopped at the threat in Tom Smith's voice, and after a slow moment, he dropped it on to his gun which he half drew. Tom Smith was wearin' a gun on his left hip, but he didn't make a move for it. Instead, he folded his arms and looked like powerful easy pickin'.

"I'm a-goin' to give you three to take that rag off and throw it on the floor," sez Panther, "and if it don't reach the floor by the time I count three, I'm goin' to begin to shoot it off."

"I'm still feelin' that drink," sez Tom Smith, cool an' irritatin'; "but it's sure beginnin' to get some lonesome."

"One," counted Panther, pullin' his gun a little, "Two"—givin' it another lift——"Three!"

He pulled his gun with a jerk and almost at the same instant, and startin' to spin and cuss; for Tom Smith had shot him through the arm and now stood with two guns wavin' along the line at the bar. "Shut up, Emmons," sez he to Panther. "Your yappin' bothers me, and I want to say to your friends that if they ain't petrified, I'd like to have 'em join me in another little drink."

Red had pulled his gun at the shootin, and Shorty now arrived and without waitin to post up on past history, he threw himself into the store with his gun ready for action, and bellowed: "What's the trouble here?"

"There isn't any trouble," sez Tom Smith. "Panther Emmons has just swallered a bluff, and it choked him some; but he never causes any real trouble. I have just invited the bunch to take a little drink. Won't you join us?"

Big Jeff Johnson had full as much fame as was necessary to his business, so now he tried to coo and bleat and smile all at the same time. "That's right, gentlemen," sez he, "have a drink and call it square and let bygones be bygones. This was just a little misunderstandin', and while it is to be regretted, the best way is to just smooth it over and all be good friends."

The rest of our boys were close back by this time, so I whispered to Phil McLaughlin, who was as cool as ice, to hold 'em at the corner of the store as we already had enough inside. They all began to drink, now, and I was surprised to see Tom Smith's hip gun back in its holster, and the second gun he had been handlin' nowhere in sight. I couldn't make out for the life of me where he had got his gun from. He was wearin' a vest which fitted him plenty loose, but both armholes were ripped a little and his flannel shirt showed in the rips.

While I was thinkin' about this second gun, Panther had quieted down and was rubbin his arm' where it had been punctuated. He now made a quick dive and got his gun from the floor with his left hand; but before he could straighten up, I called to him. "Leave that gun alone," sez I, pullin' my own and throwin' it on him.

He straightened up and I rode up to the door. "Hand me that gun, Flames," sez I, and the kid got it for me.

I emptied it and handed it back, tellin' him to give it to Panther. "Now, boys," sez I, "you've had your little pastime; and as I've got some bulls out here to take about twenty miles before dark, I'll have to ask you to put off the rest o' this party 'till some other day. Where are your bosses?"

"Back in the shed, there," sez one of 'em.

"Well, we won't keep you from 'em any longer," sez I.

"Supposin' we won't go?" sez the feller.

"I'm here on business," sez I, speakin' easy but puttin' an edge on my voice, "and I haven't time for any argument. One party or the other of us has to leave first; and I'm free to admit that I wouldn't feel altogether comfortable to pull my outfit out first—unless we had our guns along.

What I'd like to see you do is to get your ponies and cross back over the river; but this is a free country. I've got my gun in my hand—what do you all intend to do?"

I talked slow so as to give 'm time to make up their minds; and when I had finished Panther sez: "You've got it onto us this time; but I reckon the'll be other times."

"That is fair warnin'," sez I. "I haven't one thing in the world again' you, except your disposition, and I don't reckon you're any more to blame for that than a snake is for his 'n. I'm a law-abidin' citizen when I'm located where the's law enough to go 'round; but I'd rather take care of myself than to wait a month or a year for the coroner and the sheriff to get even with the feller who thought at times I was a poor boy to be moved. My business is goin' to keep me in these parts, and I'll make it a point to look out for you; but you don't need to look out for me, 'cause I'm perfectly good-natured."

"About the only way you'd ever kill a man would be to talk him to death," sez Panther, as he followed his gang through the back door. I rode to the corner and saw 'em take their ponies from the shed and ride to the ford. When they reached it, they paused for a little parley, and then rode on in. I could see by the way he used his arm that the bone wasn't broke; but I half wished that his neck was.

When I went inside, Tom Smith was sittin' on a keg lookin' as white as a sheet where his handkerchief didn't cover his face; but his eyes gleamed like a madman's. Red stood beside him lookin' so doleful that I could hardly keep my face straight.

"He's thrown up his job," sez Red, as though statin' the exact minute the world was comin' to an end.

"If you'd ever get sense enough to leave your blame jokin' go," thundered Shorty to his pal, "the' might be some comfort in livin' near ya. I wish the Lord would let you show your age in some other way besides those cussed whiskers."

I tried my best to talk Tom Smith into goin' on with us; but he wouldn't give in. He said one drink was enough to make him plumb locoed, and then he allus got his friends into trouble. He was so nervous he couldn't keep his fingers still; so when I saw how set he was, I stepped behind him, twisted both his wrists up under his shoulder-blades, then got Red to help hold him while Shorty tied his wrists. I got a bottle o' the stuff from Big Jeff, paid the bill, put Tom Smith on his hoss, tied a loose rope from one ankle to the other under the hoss's belly, and had Flames lead him.

ECZEMA AND SORE EYES.

"My daughter suffered from inflamed eyelids and eczema on her head," writes Mr. H. W. Lear, Fort Plaisford, Wis. "The child was in a bad state and suffered greatly. The doctor failed to help her, and on recommendation of a friend I used Dr. Chase's Ointment, which made a complete cure. With a grateful heart I write you this letter."

Long-Lived Hen.

It is possible that South Paris holds the record for an aged hen. At any rate, a hen took a pot with the family of I. F. Evans was peacefully laid away a few days since which the family knew to have been either twenty-three or twenty-four years old last spring. The only authority the Democrat has been able to find says that "domestic poultry rarely exceed twelve or thirteen years," and we know that they are not often allowed to reach that age. The Evans hen has laid until within two or three years—not largely, but perhaps half a dozen eggs in the course of a year; enough to say that she had not entirely outlived her usefulness. For the last two or three years she has been on borrowed time,—kept for the good she had done. She was of mixed Leghorn blood.—Oxford (Me.) Democrat.

Domestic Relations.

George Burr McCutcheon, the author, said at an artists' dinner in New York:

"Artists, especially artists of the Washington square set, are, I am afraid, a sad lot. The wife of a Washington square artist gave a tea the other afternoon, and during the tea the little daughter of the house played in an adjoining room with her dolls.

"I hastened to slip in on the little girl. At that moment she took up a doll, shook it, and gave it a slap. Then she said:

"So you have run home at last! Just look at the clock. Well? Humph. You've just got to have your stable here in the house after this. Now go to bed. This room shall be a nursery!"

MARRIED AND DIDN'T KNOW IT

Nine Indian Ladies Get Into Situation Absent Husbands Appearance of a Native Citizen.

On the old Rosebud Indian reservation, in South Dakota, they still laugh over the peculiar predicament into which a new Indian agent once got himself.

The agent, an unqualified "tenderfoot," who inspecting an Indian school. Noticing that as soon as he entered the room every girl present brought her hair forward over her face, he asked the teacher to tell them to throw it back so that he might see their faces. But this they refused to do, until, after much urging, one girl did finally uncover her face.

After school was over, the agent wondered at the strange actions of the girl who had uncovered her face. She followed him to his house, entered after him, and set about getting his dinner. As he spoke no Sioux, and she no English, he could get no explanation from her.

Finally, to his relief, the teacher rode up. Shaking with laughter he asked the agent how he liked his new wife! Then the latter understood what he had done. In certain tribes of the Sioux Indians all a man needs do in order to get a wife is to induce a girl to uncover her face. The agent had proposed in the usual way—and been accepted.

In vain did the agent plead that he already had a wife in the East; there was only one way to get out of it. It cost him the equivalent of four ponies to persuade the Indian girl's father to take her back again.

HE FLED BEFORE THE BROOM

Plucky Los Angeles Woman Puts Burglar to Flight With Domestic Weapon.

Armed with a kitchen broom Mrs. A. H. Howard batted a sneak thief through the window of her home the other day after he had cooked and eaten a midnight repast in her kitchen and was in the act of carrying away the dining room silver, which he had carefully wrapped in a tablecloth.

Mrs. Howard and her husband live at 720 College street. Her slumbers early in the morning were disturbed by a rattling sound downstairs in the dining room. Descending, she beheld a young man wrapping her silver in a tablecloth. Grabbing a broom, Mrs. Howard rushed into the dining room, crying:

"Get out of here!"

The burglar recovered from his labors just in time to dodge a mighty swipe of the broom aimed at his head.

"Get out of here; do you hear! What do you mean by trying to steal my silver?" angrily exclaimed Mrs. Howard as she made the broom fairly sing through the air. The burglar stood transfixed, gazing at her in silent awe.

"Don't you hear me?" cried the woman as she swung a third time at the intruder, who ducked just as the broom whissed by his ear.

Then Mrs. Howard charged. This seemed to awaken him to a full realization of his peril, for he turned and ran toward an open window, through which he had made his entrance. As he started to leap into space the broom landed, fairly battering him through the casement.

Later Mrs. Howard discovered that the burglar before wrapping up her silverware had prepared and eaten a hearty meal in the kitchen.—Los Angeles Times.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

HAD BEEN PRETTY

And Had Also Been 35 Summers When the Unexpected Proposal Came.

BY GEORGE MUNSON.

Miss Agatha Browne was thirty-five and looked older. She had been pretty when she was a girl—that could easily be seen from the regular contour of her face, her soft, clear skin, and the gray eyes which even her detractors allowed would be beautiful if she did not hide them behind those hideous round spectacle lenses. Miss Agatha Browne was professor of economics at Ledham seminary, which, as most people know, receives only selected girl pupils from among the first families of the south.

Prof. Sampson Boylett instructed the same select young ladies in Roman history. He was forty-five and looked his age. He was a short-sighted bachelor who lived for his hobby, the customs of the Romans. When he was not thinking about them, he was usually not thinking about anything.

When the professor passed Miss Browne he was entirely oblivious of that fact. If they met face to face in an exceedingly narrow alley he would discover an obstruction, slowly raise his short-sighted eyes until they fixed themselves upon Miss Browne's spectacles, and then retreat hastily with an apology and a timid expression.

The select families of the south were not so different, in their individual membership, from families that flourish and die like mute, inglorious wallflowers. Some of the young ladies of Ledham seminary might have been seen with their heads very close together one evening after the professor had concluded his lecture. He had been expounding "The Marriage Customs of the Samnites."

"Hasn't it have been dreadful in those days!" said Miss Philippa Clark, reading from her note-book. "Just think! 'Among the Samnite ladies it was not an uncommon thing to take the initiative in the proposal of a matrimonial alliance. When gentle glances and hints failed to accomplish their purpose the Samnite woman did not scruple to address herself openly to the backward suitor.'"

"Dreadful!" exclaimed Miss Mary Campbell, one of the most select of the young ladies. "Why, I think it was grand!"

"Well, now just listen to this," interposed Miss Millicent Day, who was taking the economics course. "The custom which restrains the female half of the community from taking the first step leading toward the marriage contract is of economic origin and due to the fact that, in our modern civilization, the male is the bread-winner. When the earning capacities of both parties are equal this archaic survival should be, and often is, abrogated."

"Miss Browne said that?" inquired Miss Mary breathlessly.

"She surely did," answered Miss Millicent.

"Oh!" exclaimed the chorus breathlessly.

Professor Boylett appeared unusually preoccupied on the second day afterward. His lecture on Roman history, in fact, was distinctly an absent-minded one.

"Er—one moment, ladies," he began as the class waited its dismissal. "Can anyone tell me whether there is a—er—any attache of this institution whose initials are A. B.?"

"Miss Agatha Browne, professor of economics," chanted the class. And the professor, after staring speechlessly at them for an instant, suddenly bolted through the door.

At that instant Miss Browne was saying:

"A most insulting thing has happened to me, girls. I hesitate to mention it, and should not, did I not fear it is some practical joke engineered by some unworthy member of this seminary. I have received an anonymous letter containing—in short, a proposal of marriage."

"Oh, no, Miss Browne!" exclaimed the class in horror.

"Ladies, your attitude does you credit," said the professor of economics. "Er—by the way, is there any person connected with this seminary whose initials are S. B.?"

"Prof. Sampson Boylett," shouted the class in economics in unison.

Then an extraordinary thing happened. Behind Miss Browne's large spectacles a reddish hue, arising in the neighborhood of either ear, spread and expanded until it completely covered her face.

"Dear me, this is very painful!" murmured Miss Browne. "The class is dismissed."

The class, released from its duties, rushed to the windows and looked out upon the campus. It saw Miss Browne emerge from the portals of the famous institution of learning with a hurried and yet furtive step, if such a term could be applied to any quality or attribute of Miss Browne. With her umbrella folded in her hand, the professor of economics picked her way down the gravelly walk toward the entrance. Then the class and Miss Browne simultaneously perceived a second figure, a bent, irresolute, middle-aged figure approaching the same portals from the classroom in Roman history.

And then occurred a peculiar phenomenon such as had never been known to happen during the memory of the class. For Miss Browne, instead of continuing upon her resolute way toward the gate, made a short cut across the soggy grass—Miss Browne, whose state of health was always known to be exactly commensurate with the hygienic condition of her overshoes.

And, as an immovable body sequesters an irresistible force, so Miss Agatha Browne encountered Professor Boylett beside the portals of the Ledham Seminary for Young Ladies. The professor saw her, straightened himself, and spoke.

"Er—among the Samnites there existed a custom"—he began.

"I have always told my class," Miss Browne remarked at the same moment, "that the custom which restrains the female half of the community—"

"Which I would be the last to condemn—"

"From taking the first step—"

"When hints and gentle glances failed—"

"Leading toward the marriage contract—"

"To effect a matrimonial proposition—er—"

"Oh, professor!" exclaimed Miss Agatha, and could say no more.

Inside the seminary there was a great bustle at this moment.

"Don't need them," shouted her friend. "Oh, Mary, didn't you see? Look! Look! Professor Boylett has kissed Miss Agatha. Isn't it dreadful?"

"Dreadful?" answered Miss Mary. "Why, I think it's grand. And just think: Next term the classes in economics and Roman history will be merged!"

The gown was worn by Mrs. Jackson of New York. The material was a lovely shade of soldier blue taffeta, the skirt made short and full over a hooped petticoat with narrow ruffles, and the silk well above the knees. The bodice was short waisted with frilled sleeves and white muslin fichu. The shoes and stockings were also white. With this was worn a poke straw hat with pink roses.

Miss Mabel Lindsay, [illegible] returned from Paris, where she had been nursing wounded soldiers, and among other interesting stories told one about a man who was brought in from the front, where the Germans had mined a French trench and buried every man in it. He scraped it off him, and the man was found by the Army Medical Corps men and brought to the hospital with his dog. The dog visited his master every day. The others in the trench were killed.

Miss Lindsay paid a tribute to many of the women, not trained as nurses, who are working at the hospitals. There are very few who are in the way, and those who make themselves a nuisance are quickly weeded out. The others render valuable assistance in the general work about the hospital, apart from the nursing. Watched Battle From The Roof of a Monastery Which Sheltered Wounded

LONDON, Ont., May 29.—Fresh from the trenches around Ypres and with a bookful of invaluable information for the Canadian Government regarding the war, Sir Adam Beck arrived home to-day. His wife, who has been working in British hospitals while her husband was in France, accompanied him.

"The magnificent spirit of the troops is what impressed one most," said Sir Adam. "They have passed through unbelievable hardships, but every man is ready, even anxious to go through even greater things for the Empire. When the war is over we will begin to find out what we owe the Belgians. Just what they have gone through words cannot express, but they are fighting now as never before."

Watched Battle from Roof.

Sir Adam spent many hours on the roof of a monastery at Ypres. For a great part of the time British, French and German shells were bursting over the trenches a short distance away. In the monastery were three hundred wounded men.

"To give the Germans credit," he said, "they never fired a shell at the place in all the time I was there. Had they done so they could easily have wrecked the place and killed the wounded. Shells from the Jack Johnsons were being thrown literally in hundreds over the trenches. The French and British artillery replied just as vigorously. I always thought war was horrible and I have not revised my view any from what I have seen. One thing is certain—Canada must supply more hospitals. At this distance we can't begin to realize what it means to have to handle thousands of wounded men, many of whom will be crippled for life."

Sir Adam was horror-stricken at the effects of the German gases. He talked with scores of wounded men and many Canadians overcome by them.

"The effects of the gas are most painful," he said, "and many of the soldiers will never recover from the partial asphyxiation. Many, of course, were killed. I cannot praise too highly the spirit of the men—those wounded and all. Every man is eager to get back to the firing line again."

Four Weeks in Trenches.

Sir Adam talked with many Canadians, who had been in the trenches for four weeks continuously.

He saw hundreds of German prisoners being brought into a camp near Arras.

"Every Canadian I talked to," he said, "is absolutely determined to avenge the outrages that have been perpetrated, and will give his life cheerfully to do so.

"I never saw such spirit, and the same is true of the British, French, and Belgians. In England the same idea prevails. I do not look for any speedy termination of the war, but when it is finished there will be no more Prussian militarism. Everywhere in England and France one hears of the valor of the Canadians. This Dominion should be proud of what the soldiers she has sent have done, and in the days to come the Motherland will not forget. Canada's future is assured."

Plenty of Good Food.

The women of France, Belgium, and England, he says, have taken the places of the men in the fields and are putting in crops which are growing fine. Too old men and boys are doing similar work. The men in the trenches are well supplied with food, and the Canadians and British get even more and better food than the French Government is sending its men.

Sir Adam had been booked to sail on the Lusitania, but made a change in his plans at the last minute, and took the Adriatic. The captain, he said, drove his boat through the submarine zone at night with as much steam crowded on that the vibrations of the engines shook the whole boat.

He will at once prepare a full report regarding the purchase of remounts for the Government and expects to ship many thousands of horses this summer. Lady Beck will at once proceed with hospital work for Canadians and the sending of more supplies.

British Fleet is Busy.

The British fleet, he says, is doing wonderful work. Thousands of men are being sent across the Channel every day and not one has been lost. Trade is going along with comparatively few interruptions.

Sees Saw Kitchener

Sir Adam Beck spent a whole day with General Alderson discussing the needs of the Government and, later, in London, had a conference with Lord Kitchener. His suggestions will be embodied in a report to be presented to the Militia Department, shortly.

"We will want all the men and supplies obtainable," said Sir Adam. "Although supplies of all sorts are very abundant now, they are being used up at an enormous rate." He saw the Princess Pats just after they had come out after 21 days in the trenches. They were very tired and had suffered heavily, but were anxious for more fighting.

Lady Beck is preparing a report which will be sent shortly to the Canadian Red Cross.

Was Troubled With Choking Spells and Shortness of Breath.

When the heart becomes affected, there comes a feeling of a choking sensation, a shortness of breath, palpitation, throbbing, irregular beating, smothering sensation, and dizziness and a weak, sinking, all-gone feeling of oppression and anxiety.

Many men and women drag along with weary step, and become worn out and haggard, when otherwise they could be strong and healthy if they would only pay some attention to the first signs of heart or nerve trouble. On the first sign of the heart becoming weakened or the nerves unstring Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills should be given a fair trial and you will find that they will soon correct both these organs.

Mr. James Lepel, Tryon, P.E.I., writes: "Just a few lines to let you know what Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have done for me. I had choking spells, and was troubled with weakness of the heart and shortness of breath. I tried three doctors but they all failed. A neighbor recommended me to try your pills, so I got a box and they helped me so much I have taken six boxes. I highly recommend them to all who are troubled with their heart and nerves. I was not able to do any work for over two years; now I can do quite a bit."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50 cents per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

ABOUT SPRAYING

Prof. L. Caesar, Provincial Entomologist, Guelph, Ont.

IT IS difficult for one who has not lived in Nova Scotia to advise Nova Scotia growers how often and when to spray. We shall, I believe, all agree on at least two of the applications, namely, one just before the blossoms burst, beginning with the earliest varieties, and then going right on with the later, and the other just after the blossoms have nearly all fallen, say 80 to 90 per cent. of them off. Without these two in a wet cold May or June no one need hope to control apple scab. One of these is almost as important as the other.

There will be a difference of opinion as to the other sprayings necessary. I think you should carefully test the value of one earlier application. Try it on at least one-third of the orchard and continue it for at least four or five years, as one year's results are often quite inconclusive. When this application should be put on is a debatable question. If you have oyster shell scale to combat it should be before the buds burst or just as they are ready to burst. If these things are not troublesome I should feel like suggesting that the spraying be done not before but as the buds are bursting, or just after they burst, so that the unfolding leaves may be covered with the spray mixture and protected against scab until the application just before the blossoms open can be given.

As for any later sprays one must be guided by the weather. I think it probable that it will pay to spray again about 10 days after the coddling moth spray. It seems to me that better results will be got by not waiting for two weeks as ordinarily recommended, because each week after the blossoms fall the danger of apple scab begins to grow rapidly less and the all important thing is to get the apples safely through June because there is seldom danger in July.

All are aware that two years ago the injury by apple scab was done chiefly in the latter part of August and September. This injury could have been largely prevented by an application of spray mixture the last week in August, supplemented perhaps by another about two weeks later.

BLOOD THIN AND WEAK
TOO NERVOUS TO SLEEP

Here is Another Case in Which Dr. Chase's Nerve Food Proved Its Great Reconstructive Influence

Thin blood and exhausted nerves usually go together. A considerable portion of the blood is constantly consumed in keeping up the vitality of the nervous system. Once the blood is deficient, either in quantity or quality, the nerves suffer and bodily pains result. Headaches, neuralgic or sciatic pains are the indications in some cases, while in others weakness, nervousness, irritability and sleeplessness are the most marked symptoms.

Mrs. R. F. Catlin, Elm Springs, Sask., writes: "For years I was troubles with nervousness, and could not sleep nights. Also had lack of colour as a result of the blood being thin and weak. My husband saw Dr. Chase's Nerve Food advertised, and got some for me, and wanted me to try it. I did so, and it has proven a wonderful help for me. By enriching the blood, it has restored colour to my face and has built up the nervous system so that I rest and sleep well. It is a pleasure to recommend so excellent a medicine."

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food goes direct to the formation of pure, rich blood, and for this reason is the most certain means of increasing the quality as well as the quantity of blood in the human system. The feeble, wasted nerves are restored, and through the nervous system new vigor and energy is imparted to every organ and member of the body.

You will be surprised at the way this food cure puts new strength and vitality into the weakened body. And the best of it is that the benefits are both thorough and lasting. In this the Nerve Food differs from mere stimulating medicines which give rise to false hope and when discontinued leave you as weak as before. Put this great restorative treatment to the test and prove its merits in your own cases. 50 cents a box, 6 for $2.50. All dealers or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

PLAIN, PRACTICAL AND PRETTY.

By Anabel Worthington.

The plain frock for summer wear may be numbered among the necessities, for no matter how many dainty, frilly costumes the wardrobe may contain, they cannot take the place of the plain, practical frock. That this frock should be ugly, even unfashionable, is far from being the case. It may be the simplest house gown or work dress, but it may still have a great deal of style. The striped dress illustrated here is very smart looking, perhaps just because of its simplicity. The waist is made like a shirt waist, with plain front and back, one-piece sleeves and hem closing.

The skirt has a deep yoke, even all around, and seamed at each side, but not at centre back. The lower part is cut in three gores and flares considerably. The lower edge measures two yards and a half. The skirt is attached to the waist and both waist and skirt close at centre front in the simplest way, loops fastening over buttons. A dress of this sort is not really practical unless it goes on easily and quickly.

Having the dress of striped material and the collar and cuffs of some plain white fabric makes a becoming contrast. Striped percale with embroidered linen is not only serviceable and pretty, but inexpensive as well. Plain light blue linen or chambray could be used, with white linen collar and cuffs, or all white material, such as poplin or lawn. For medium size 6¼ yards of 36 inch material would be needed. The pattern, No. 7,152, can be obtained in six sizes, from 34 to 44 inches bust measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 10 cents, or 2 for 25c.

ACTRESS TELLS SECRET

A Well Known Actress Tells How She Darkened Her Gray Hair and Promoted Its Growth With a Simple Home Made Mixture.

Miss Blanche Rose, a well-known actress, who darkened her gray hair with a simple preparation which she mixed at home, in a recent interview at Chicago, Ill., made the following statement: "Any lady or gentleman can darken their gray hair and make it soft and glossy with this simple recipe, which they can mix at home. To a half pint of water add 1 oz. of bay rum, a small box of Orlex Compound and 1-4 oz. of glycerine. These ingredients can be bought at any drug store at very little cost. Apply to the hair twice a week until it becomes the required shade. This will make a gray haired person look 20 years younger. It is also fine to promote the growth of hair, relieves itching and scalp humors and is excellent for dandruff and falling hair."

KNOW WHAT YOUR IDEAL IS

First Step to Real Success, Though Few Seem to Realize Its Importance.

Several years ago when I filled a position which brought me many visitors each day, and many more letters in the same time, I was overburdened with requests for advice from persons who wished "to succeed;" "to accomplish;" "to attain." But, as strange as the statement may seem to you, I can truthfully say that not one per cent.—not one in a hundred of these earnest seekers was able to state exactly what he or she really wanted.

They were dissatisfied and discontented, and felt the vague urge of unrest pushing them forward to further endeavor and attainment—but it stopped right there. Ninety-nine out of every hundred did not know what they wanted. They asked not only for advice regarding the means of accomplishment and attainment, but also for information as to what they should really desire.

"Silly," you exclaim. Not a bit of it. I venture to say to you—yes, you who are now reading these lines, are not much better off regarding clear-cut ideas and ideals. You want, and want and want, of course—but just what do you want? Have you a clearly defined idea, and a clear-cut ideal of the object of your desire? Honor bright now, have you?—William Walker Atkinson, in the Nautilus.

RIGHT CARE SELDOM GIVEN

When a child is in seeming good health, uncertain foods and unfiltered water are consumed without notice, and it is only when the child is actually ill that some sort of attention is paid to it. However, if the special attention was of the right sort, the child might even at the eleventh hour escape serious illness, but with the usual ignorance in regard to the laws of health and the nature of disease, parents in general are almost certain to do the wrong thing and then the child is sure to have something. Windows are closed, if by any possible chance they had been open; extra clothes are piled on the little one, and it is coddled and given anything it wants, because it is sick.

Of course the child grows worse, until finally a doctor is called, who also proceeds to make matters still worse with the usual drugs or "antitoxins." If the youngster manages somehow to pull through the doctor is given the credit, and if it dies, well—"He did the best he could!" Of course he did. He means well, but instead of getting the poison out of the little body, he unthinkingly puts more into it.—Edith M. Bates Williams, in Physical Culture.

Wasted Time.

"Well, what did you do when the problem came up?"

"Wasted time. Went out and asked the advice of 17 friends."

"What did you get?"

"Seventeen different solutions."

"And then?"

"Then I took the advice of an eighteenth friend and won out."

"And who was your eighteenth friend?"

"Myself."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Little Headway.

"Jorkin boasts that he pays as he goes."

"That explains a remark I heard one of Jorkin's friends make the other day."

"And what was it?"

"He said Jorkin never seemed to get anywhere."

AIR DREADNOUGHTS

An interesting article in the London Times explains that the Ilya Mouromets—the name given to the new giant Russian aeroplane—is the Sikorsky biplane, of which the world first heard when it made successful flights over Petrograd in the autumn of 1913 and the spring of 1914. The article goes on to say:

Many different statements have appeared as to the dimensions of these enormous craft. We do not pretend to know exactly how big are the machines which the Russians are using, but assuming—which is improbable—that they are no bigger than the original Ilya Mouromets, their dimensions are approximately as follows: Length, 65 feet; span, 121 feet; bearing surface, 1,958 square feet; gap between wings, 9 feet; weight, 3½ tons. There are four engines, with a total horsepower given variously as 400, 500 and 660. It is claimed that two engines can be put out of action without thereby causing an accident. A year ago, with 400 horsepower, the Ilya Mouromets carried a useful weight of little over one ton -½ cwt., besides nearly 2 cwt. of fuel and oil. She flew for over 1½ hours with sixteen passengers, and for over two hours with the ordinary crew of eight.

The accommodation on board the Ilya Mouromets was of a palatial description. The forepart of the metal fuselage was covered in for a distance of 26 feet, and in this space were first the pilot's cabin, with dual control arrangements, then a saloon capable of holding fifteen passengers, then a sleeping compartment and small lavatory. There were large windows in front and along the sides, and small windows in the floor for observation and photographic purposes. The rooms were heated by the exhaust from the engines and lit with electricity.

Without details as to the speed and height at which the Sikorsky can be flown, no useful comparison can be made between her and a Zeppelin. But her weight-lifting power is obviously quite out of the ordinary run, and she may be the pioneer of that race of big aeroplanes which some authorities regard as far better worth developing than the airship.

PRZEMYSL IS RECAPTURED BY ENEMY

Fortress Taken After A Three Weeks' Siege

Berlin and Vienna Announce Capture of the Big Fortress

German Statement Says Forts Were Knocked to Pieces by Big Siege Guns After Which Austro-German Forces Rushed in and Drove Out the Defenders---United States Reply to Germany is Ready.

GERMAN CLAIMS ARE SET ASIDE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

VIENNA, via Berlin, wireless, June 3.—Przemysl fell before the triumphant armies of General Mackenzen, at 3.50 a.m. to-day, after a three weeks' siege. Many prisoners, cannon and machine guns, and large supplies of food and war ammunition, were captured by the Austro-German armies.

The main body of the Russian army is reported to be retreating in disorder eastward along the railway leading to Lemberg.

A terrific bombardment by the Austrian and German howitzers and 42 centimetre guns broke the northern forts to pieces. Large bodies of Austro-German troops rushed into the gaps, driving the enemy back through the town. The German cavalry is pursuing the Slavs, who are retiring upon the entrenchments in the vicinity of Mosciske.

Przemysl was taken at 3.30 a.m., according to a later announcement from the Austrian headquarters.

BERLIN, via The Hague, June 3.—In the latest note handed to Ambassador Gerard, the German foreign office admits that in all probability the American steamer Cushing was attacked by German aviators. Germany has guaranteed full reparation.

AMSTERDAM, June 3.—American Ambassador Gerard already has taken steps to safeguard Americans in Berlin, in case of war. This was learned to-day from an authoritative source. The American Ambassador asked the German Foreign Office for assurance that the Embassy Staff and their families, American Red Cross workers, and Polish Relief Commissioners, and American newspaper correspondents be permitted to leave Berlin on a special embassy train in the event of any breach between the two countries. Secretary Von Jago gave full assurance of every protection.

WASHINGTON, June 3.—President Wilson will have before him within a few hours legal opinion disposing of Germany's latest contentions in the Lusitania case. The opinion will state positively that the question raised by Germany concerning the alleged presence of arms and Canadian troops on the ship is irrevalent. It will strip the German reply of its most vital contentions and will narrow the issues involved to the original American position. The affidavits filed with the State Department, purporting to show that guns were mounted on the Lusitania, and that there were hidden explosives, chiefly gun cotton, on board, will be considered The carrying of small arms and ammunition, it will be stated, was in accordance with the law, and the exact statute will be cited to prove this. The charge that the manifest was falsified to conceal the alleged fact that hidden explosives were carried, the opinion will say, amounts—even if true—only to a case of fraud against the government of the United States.

LUGANO, June 3.—The tiny republic of San Marino has declared war against Austria, according to news agency despatches.

LONDON, June 3.—Premier Asquith was absent when the first session of the coalition parliament met this afternoon. It was explained that he was away on urgent public business. The Unionist members of the new coalition cabinet were also absent to-day when parliament met for the first time since the recent ministerial crisis. They were ready to take their seats immediately after the Commons passes the bill abrogating the requirement that new members of the cabinet must stand for re-election before resuming their seats. This action was to be taken this afternoon. For the first time in many years the Liberals appeared in front of the Unionist benches to emphasize the unity of all parties behind the new cabinet.

In the Commons this afternoon one of the National members denounced Premier Asquith as "a maker of platitudes and all his life a Tory at heart." He was silenced by the Speaker.

VIENNA, June 3.—A comparatively small force of Russians made the final stand against the Austro-Germans. All day yesterday train loads of enemy troops were hurried eastward from Przemysl to rows of entrenchments evidently prepared several weeks ago. Only troops enough to man the guns and to resist flanking attacks were inside the fortress, according to the unpfficial reports when the grand assault was ordered last night. Despatches received here this afternoon said that practically all the northern forts at Przemysl were in the hands of the Austro-Hungarians late last night. These despatches filed at midnight said that a general advance against the city had been ordered and reported the Russian firing growing more feeble.

TORONTO, June 3.—A Canadian Associated Press cable from London, says: News was received here to-day that the Canadians recently captured eight hundred yards of trenches at the point of the bayonet in a position where other forces had met with no success since October.

LONDON, June 3.—The British troops have captured an important Turkish position in Mesopotamia, the India war office announced this afternoon.

Trophy Donated to City Baseball League

The announcement that Messrs. F. N. McWilliams and Arthur Clysdale, two well-known local merchants, have donated a splendid silver trophy emblematic of the championship of the City Baseball League, will be received with gratitude and pleasure by the players. Messrs. McWilliams and Clysdale have always been enthusiastic supporters of amateur sport, and their latest action will be thoroughly appreciated. The trophy is a splendid one. The conditions are that it must be won three times in succession to become the permanent property of any one club.

On Saturday there will be the usual double-header with the Umpires and Thistles meeting in the first game, and the Classics and East Citys in the second. Two good games should be the result.

DARING FEAT PERFORMED BY A BRITISH SUB.

Dived Under the Turkish Mine Field and Penetrating the Sea of Marmora Sank an Enemy Transport

OFFICIALLY ANNOUNCED

SPECIAL CABLE:

LONDON, June 3.—It is officially announced that a British submarine has sunk an enemy transport in the Sea of Marmora.

Panderma Bay, Sea of Marmora, lies sixty miles southwest of Constantinople, off the Asia Minor city of Panderma and is formed by the arm of peninsula of Cyzicus.

To attack the transport it was necessary for the British submarine to pass under the Turkish mine fields in the Dardanelles, a feat recently equalled by the British submarine E11 in torpedoing Turkish ships in the harbour of Constantinople.

Cut Three Acres of Rye

Evidence of Rapid Growth in Smith Township—Was Headed Out

Joseph Archer, Fourth Line, Smith Township, is reported to have cut three acres of rye that stood approximately four feet in height. He has another five acres standing. The rye was headed out and is a striking example of the unusual growth for this season of the year. The rye ill be allowed to remain in the field until it is sufficiently cured, when it will be hauled in to the barn in the form of hay.

Could Not Satisfy All Parties

Morning Papers Will Be Delivered Through Medium of Earlier Train

The Lindsay Post has the following to say of the Lindsay deputation's interview with Mr. Arundel, superintendent of the C.P.R., which took place in Peterborough on Tuesday:

"Mr. Arundel was interviewed at his private car by the Lindsay deputation, and the Mayor and Aldermen of Peterborough. Mr. Arundel said that he was anxious to meet the wishes of both parties and had tried the train out, but he found that it could not be held for the Toronto papers without being late at Peterborough. The delivery of the papers at the train earlier was the only way it could be accomplished.

PROCLAMATION WILL EFFECT LOCAL ITALIANS

Men Residing in Peterborough of the First and Second Classes Are Called—Vice-Consul Receives Word

MANY WILL GO

Mr. D. M. Minicola, who represents the local Italians, is of the opinion that many Italians residing in Peterborough and elsewhere, will enter the services of their country at no distant date. Vice-Consul Nardello of Toronto has received official news to this effect in the form of a proclamation from the Italian Government calling upon all Italian naval and military officers to return home at once, and asking all reservists to hold themselves ready to join the colours.

Consul-General Chilesotti of Montreal conveyed the news of this latest Italian move to all the offices of the consulate. It was further stated by the Consul-General that the Canadian Patriotic Fund would give the families of Italian reservists the same privileges as the families of soldiers with the Canadian contingents. Other Italian centres in Canada received similar news.

Medical Examination.

Mr. Nardello stated in regard to the medical examination that all volunteers will have to undergo, that it will not at all be severe. It is the intention of the Italian Government to allow the men to go to the Old Country so that even if they will be found to be unfit for military or naval service they will be able to assist in taking up the positions that will be left vacant by those that have gone to the front.

Transportation Facilities.

The vice-consul is of the opinion that the men will receive transportation facilities from the Canadian Government. Four boats of an Italian line are scheduled to sail from American ports during the present month. Asked if he had heard about the Italian reservists in the States being called to the front, he said: "I am not certain if they have been called or not. They number at least 400,000. If the American Government should object to them leaving direct for their own country, they might possibly be mobilized at some point in Canada and then transported to Italy."

Those Called.

Those called to the colours are those of the first and second classes of the Italian army, including the ten sub-classes of from 1887 to 1897. Steps will at once be taken to organize them.

Mr. Minicola is authority for the statement that there are a number of Italians residing in Peterborough of the sub-classes mentioned above.

J. W. WORTH BACK FROM 8000 MILE TRIP TO SWEDEN

Journeyed Through the Scandinavian Countries—Observed the Far Flung Effects of the War

BRITAIN'S SUPREMACY

After an 8,000 mile journey to Scandinavia, Mr. Jos. W. Worth of the Bonner Worth Co., returned to Peterborough yesterday accompanied by his wife and family who had spent the past year in Sweden. He travelled by the Scandinavian-American line between Christiania and New York, passing through the fringe of the war zone around the north of Scotland and the Orkney Islands, across the North Sea to the Fjord of Christiania.

Mr. Worth's first war experience occurred off the Orkneys where the vessel was held up by a British cruiser and spent four days at Kirkwall. Sweden, like most neutrals, has not escaped the effects of a world at war. The government has opened numerous shops where imported foodstuffs are sold to the people at cost price. Other conditions are equally apparent.

In their disposition toward the combatants, Norway and Denmark are absolutely with the allies, Mr. Worth stated. Sweden, for various reasons, had been inclined to favour Germany until the Lusitania was torpedoed. That affair caused the Kaiser a great deal of Swedish sympathy. Scandinavia is now practically of one mind in its attitude toward the allies.

Going back to the thirty years' war, Mr. Worth recalled the time when many Germans crossed to Sweden and took up residence there. They had held high positions in their army and they rose to prominence among the Swedes. By marriage with German women their original strain and sympathies were maintained. In their politics they were reactionary and their influence in creating a favourable attitude toward Germany met with considerable success. At the same time Sweden was friendly with Great Britain, but when she appeared as an ally of Russia, Swedish opinion definitely swung toward Germany. For the Swedes have feared Russia and her desire for an open seaport. The menace of the Bear was keenly felt, especially since Norway and Sweden each had desirable ports.

However, the allies' attack on the Dardanelles relieved this uneasiness to a large extent, for it appeared that Russia might secure and be satisfied with an open way from her Black Sea ports.

Britain's Navy.

Mr. Worth stated that undoubtedly Germany had secured supplies through Sweden. With a command of the sea, Britain allowed Sweden to import freely provided they did not reship the goods. This restriction was easily circumvented. Germans agents in Sweden bought the goods from the Swedish merchants, and of course transmitted them to Germany. Thus, the latter of the regulations was observed. However, British representatives made various discoveries. Merchants were put on the British blacklist. To-day many of them have been forced out of business, because it was learned that they were passing imports on to Germany. In the same way an embargo was placed on coal. It became known that coal was being supplied to German railways through Sweden. The cotton mills are working night and day, but the woollen looms are almost idle. Supplies of raw material have been cut off and the mills have only the remnant of their former stocks.

In Civic Idea.

In Gothenburg, Mr. Worth saw a street decorative effect which he referred to Mayor Buller by picture postcard. About ten feet from the bases of the iron light and street railway standards, iron hoops are clamped around the pillars and suspended flower baskets. The effect is most pleasing. The flowers and plants add a charm to the streets not otherwise obtained.

DESPERATE FIGHTING IN NEUVILLE DISTRICT

With the Last Twenty-four Hours Each Side Has Launched at Least Half a Dozen Attacks—A Field of Dead and Wounded.

FRENCH TAKE PRISONERS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, June 3. — French official communique.)—Whirlwind attacks on both sides is converting the labrynth region southeast of Neuville into a field of dead and wounded. Within 24 hours each side has launched at least six separate attacks. The Germans rushed forward, hurling bombs and hand grenades, only to fall back, their ranks broken, and in disorder. The French attacked with their bayonets and made slight gains. The War Office reported this afternoon that the losses on the enemy's side have been very heavy and declared the French have taken many prisoners. Artillery engagements are proceeding everywhere in the region north of Arras. During last night there was violent infantry fighting east of Notre Dame de Lorette, but the engagement resulted in no change in positions on either side.

NO HOLIDAY FOR MILITIA DEPT.

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, Ont., June 3.—The King's birthday is being observed as a departmental holiday at the capital, except at the Department of Militia, whose doors have been closed one hour since the outbreak of the war. Flags are flying, but no royal salutes were fired.

This is in conformity with the special request made by King George a short time ago.

L'esercito italiano oltrepassava la frontiera da 13 miglia, essendo a 30 miglia da Trento.

ITALY ADVANCES.

Italy was slow in coming into the war; but she seems to be making up for lost time. She evidently means business. Instead of waiting to be invaded, she has carried the war into—Austria; and has penetrated deep into the enemy's territory. So far Italy has carried everything before her; but this onward sweep will not last indefinitely. There will be strong positions to overcome, and while Italy may gain ground, she will have to fight for it, and the progress will be slower. The Italians, however, have made a good beginning, and with their well-equipped and powerful army, fired by the spirit of re-conquest of the territory stolen by Austria, "Italia Redimta," will move from the region of dreams to reality. The effect on the war situation of Italy's entry, will be to lessen the duration of the war. The end will be further hastened by the entry of Roumania, with its reported million of men. If Roumania comes in, the entry of Bulgaria into the fight will be as inevitable as that of Italy was. Germany and Austria, fight they never so bravely, cannot long survive the tremendous odds arrayed against them.

INFLUENCE OF THE WAR.

We all believe, or are asked to believe, that the world will be a new world after the war is over. It should be new; for the process of destruction will have gone so far that nearly the whole of it will have to be recreated. The influence of the fight, with liberty in its widest sense, the great issue, will spread to all the participating nations and to many of the nations looking on. India is an old land with centuries of training, fixing the character of its people and making change a difficult matter even for the agencies of the highest influence, the Gospel. But in less than one short year we find changes. In India especially, among the Mohammedan people, we have found women degraded—without a soul, either acknowledged or evident. India is generously and fruitfully in the fight in Europe. We find in civilized countries like Canada, the women knitting, knitting for the soldiers. Rev. Mr. Nugent, the India Missionary, speaking at Knox Church, told of the "soulless" woman of India industriously knitting for the dusky warriors battling in France. The war has brought them in touch with western civilization and western humanity. This may be a slight instance of the influence of the war, but is an indication that the lessons of the war for the ideal of human liberty and fair play, and high altruism, will sink deep into national soils where they have never before taken root.

MUST BE ENDED.

"Deeply shocked at the fearful accident which befell the Empress of Ireland. I hasten to express to you my deepest sympathy with the bereaved families.

(Signed) William R. I."

The Emperor of Germany has travelled a long way from the humanity, real or affected, his despatch so printed above, discloses. Only one short year separates the accidental loss of the Empress of Ireland from the wanton, devilish sinking of the Lusitania, with ten-fold greater loss of life. He has no regrets for this diabolical act, which he, with the callous calculation of unleashed savagery indirectly, if not directly, ordered. His savagery, which is more wanton, gratuitous destruction for destruction's sake, serves no military purpose. He, as the representative of German authority, shows no regret, but rather glories in his wholesale murder, and to this he adds—lying in order to hoodwink his people and make them consenting parties to such diabolical barbarism. He does not permit the truth to be published in the German newspapers. This man, the head of a system, who out-Herods Herod, and constitutes a type of depravity that human history cannot parallel, must, in what he represents, be destroyed. We must bend every effort in Canada to the task. This task is what makes the war on our part, and the part of the allies, a righteous war. The Kaiser's mad ambition was world domination; he has done more than realize that ambition; he has made a hell upon earth. We must help to put the lid on it by putting the lid on the cause of it. The whole community joins in the hunt of a mad dog; a mad beast like the Kaiser must be hunted down. We should consider no sacrifice too great that contributes to the destruction of the mad menace of the world's liberties, the world's well-being and happiness.

HELP BUY TOBACCO FOR THE BOYS ABROAD.

Opinions are divided in regard to the use of tobacco, but there is no doubt that it is a mighty comfort to the soldiers in the trenches. Lord Lytton told us that—

Tobacco is a pleasing and a soothing friend; it makes a man think like a philosopher and act like a sage.

Byron also sings of—

Sublime tobacco that from east to west
Soothes the tar's labour and the Turkman's rest.

These are abstract and romantic ideas regarding the place of tobacco. The practical view suggests hearty support of the Tobacco Fund now being collected at The Examiner Office and other places for the benefit of our soldiers in the trenches. When we consider the monotonous, dreary, dreadful waiting in the trenches, with the shells dropping about, and the bullets whistling overhead; with eternal suspense; with heavy eyelids from loss of sleep; with the thoughts of home and home friends, and home comforts, intruding amongst the devilish din of war; with empty stomachs, perhaps; and with unspeakable loneliness; with time hanging heavy on their hands, or with some of them, ended forever; with the voices of old comrades silenced forever; with all these things, one cannot imagine the unutterable longing for a pipe or cigarette, nor even half fancy the magical soothing effect it would have. Smoker, the appeal is to you; you can in peace and quiet, in safety and peace, pull out your well-filled tobacco pouch, change your pipe, light it and blaze away. Put yourself in the place of the soldier, who cannot blaze away at anything but an enemy; and winging an enemy cannot lull the longing for a smoke. The non-smoker should also sympathize. We all have our little personal habits of fad; it may be folly to others, but dear to us. If we are deprived of it we should feel the loss. Think of the soldier in the trenches in the battle line, in the lonely bivouac, with dead comrades lying around him, and the longing for a smoke obsessing his whole being. Think of the comfort you can give him, and only "quarter" try by giving a shilling to the Tobacco Fund. Let all who appreciate the splendid work our soldiers are doing; the difficulties they are overcoming; the sacrifices they are making; the risk they are running, show their appreciation by a practical act of sympathy. We may not feel the deprivation of tobacco; but we knew our soldiers do, and we have no right to set up ourselves as judges; no right to withhold our practical sympathy. Remember the Tobacco Fund list at The Examiner Office. Your 25 cents—the highest donation received—will not only give joy and comfort in the soothing smokes it supplies, but will add cheer, with the thought that the home-stayers are thinking of the boys in the battle line.

ANOTHER HATE OUTBURST.

The campaign of hate in Germany, long-directed against England, will now have Italy for its object. In recent official and journalistic deliverances on the subject we find the Kaiser's late ally referred to as perfidious, treacherous, traiterous, a faith-breaker, a political brigand, covetous, sinful, doubly sinful, inhuman and a blackmailer. After such a volley as this, the Italians should be in good trim to stand a few gas bombs of another variety.—New York World.

THE HEROES OF LANGEMARCK

Marching to the battlefield, gaily on they go
To fight for King and Country, to conquer freedom's foe;
With firm step and steady, with heart that knows no fear;
Lift high the dear old standard, and loudly let us cheer—

Hurrah! hurrah! for the khaki lads
From the land where the maple grows;
They will charge through shot and shell,
And do their duty well;
For no fear doth their brave hearts know!

But their names with letters gold shall be engraved;
Their country's heart doth bleed, the world admires their deed:
How they charged—and the day was saved!

Hurrah! hurrah! for the khaki lads
From the land where the maples grow;
They will charge through shot and shell,
And do their duty well;
For no fear doth their brave hearts know!

When those fields, now red with gore,
are as green as in days of yore,
And this dark and bloody war is fought and won,
With a cheer that rends the sky we will raise our standard high,
As victorious our lads come sailing home.

Hurrah! hurrah! for the khaki lads
From the land where the maples grow;
They have charged through shot and shell,
They have done their duty well—
For no fear did their brave hearts know!

—A. McL.

A GREAT WORK LIES BEFORE BRITAIN'S NEW GOVERNMENT

Two effects are already apparent from the formulation of the National Government in Great Britain. One is a considerable tightening up in the censorship. The other is the talk, which may be spontaneous or inspired, of some form of organization of the whole of the manhood of the country.

It is quite obvious that in future no single piece of information that can in any way be construed as of service to the enemy will be allowed to be published in Great Britain or sent out to other countries. A good illustration of the new method is contained in the news relating to the Zeppelin raid of Monday. Nothing whatever was allowed to be printed about this except an announcement from the War Office to the effect that there had been a raid, and that when all the particulars had been "collected and collated, a further announcement would be made. The object apparently was to suppress anything which might be useful in guiding the enemy to a real knowledge of what the bomb-dropping did. Zeppelins cannot very well observe the effects of their bombardment. Britain is not going to help them with a free report of the progress made. Such suppression is commendable provided it is not carried to such excess as to undermine public confidence in official reports.

With regard to the discussion which has suddenly broken out over conscription, the opinion seems to prevail that the real object of Mr. Asquith in inviting the Opposition to join him in forming a coalition Government was that all parties might share the responsibility of making military service compulsory on all the men of fighting age in the country. We do not share that opinion. Mr. Asquith's idea undoubtedly was to unite the country as it never was united, and to make the best use, irrespective of party, of the ability and loyalty available.

While we do not believe conscription is an immediate issue—though it may yet be rendered necessary—it is evident that some form of national organization is necessary. It is a shameful thing that while the volunteer armies of Britain are fighting in the trenches any men at home should be going on strike or indulge in drunken carousals instead of work. Strikes and the drink evil have undoubtedly delayed military work. The Government must devise means of getting at the offenders and doubtless because it is doing so there is talk of wholesale conscription. One way that has been suggested of dealing with the evil is to punish every striker or every worker neglecting his work through drink by making a conscript of him, a soldier to be employed by the country either on the field of battle or in military work at home—with military pay, instead of the present increased wage. Whether this plan be adopted or not, we may look for a far closer organization of workers, and a far stricter supervision of them than in the past. — Montreal Herald-Telegraph.

APPEAL AGAINST ASSESSMENT

Were Heard at Yesterday's Session of the Court of Revision

Appeals respecting the sewers constructed as local improvements were taken up at yesterday's sitting of the Court of Revision. The following cases were heard:

N. T. Laplante complained that 63¼ feet was charged to lot 12, plan 35 (Elm Steet), instead of 57 1-2 feet. Judgment—Mr. Laplante to be charged with 60 feet and M. Casanella to be notified that his assessment should be increased to 74 feet 3 inches and that the matter will be dealt with at a meeting of the Court on Saturday afternoon at four o'clock.

Mrs. F. Matschke complained that she was wrongly assessed for a sewer connection on Dublin street, part lot 2, north Dublin street and east of Water street. Judgment—Mrs. Matschke be relieved of the assessment and the amount $8.80 be charged to the city.

T. F. Matthews complained that he was over-assessed on London street, part lot 1, north London, east of Water str ets. Judgment — Mr. Matthew's assessment be reduced from 126 feet 6 inches to 116 feet 6 inches, and Mrs. Haslett's assessment for part lot 2, north London, east Water streets, increased from 33 feet 6 inches to 43 feet 6 inches.

WOMAN, 106, FIGHTS THIEF.

Benjamin Sherman, of Philadelphia, Is Held on Aged Woman's Testimony.

PHILADELPHIA, Pa., June 2.—Charged with attempted burglary in Magistrate Carson's Court, Benjamin Sherman, twenty-three years old, was held for trial on the testimony of Mrs. Annie Dubinsky, 106 years old, of No. 726 South Fourth street.

According to the police, Sherman had been inspired to rob Mrs. Dubinsky by stories told of her having considerable money concealed in her home. He went over the roof of the house and entered through a trapdoor. He ransacked the bureau and closets of the room where Mrs. Dubinsky slept, but found no money. The aged woman was asleep, but Sherman awoke her. She recognized him and tried to seize him, but he eluded his escape.

Mrs. Dubinsky notified the police and Sherman was taken into custody.

THE WORLD OF SPORT

WHY DO THEY LEAVE PLATE AFTER A FOUL?

Move by Batters With Men on the Paths Caused by Ignorance of Rules—No Need of Caution

For a good many years I have wondered why a batsman always steps out of his box and carefully remains out of it while base runners return to their bases after a foul ball has been batted. If the batsman forgets to do so he is almost sure to be ordered by the manager or coacher to get out of his box in such cases. This applies, of course, to fouls that are not caught.

I wondered if it were a superstition, a habit, or a tradition, for there is no class of people—not even actors—more susceptible to superstition or tradition than professional ball players. Inquiry failed to uncover any particular jinx that would result if the batsman did not get out of his position and await the return of a base runner to the bag from which he started. Nor was it due to a mere habit, because the players and managers seemed imbued with the belief that it was a necessity. Finally it developed that ignorance of the playing rules is usually responsible for this practice.

Players Don't Know Rules.

Ninety-nine out of every hundred players will tell you, if you ask them, that if the batsman stands in his box after hitting a foul ball the pitcher can deliver the bass as soon as he gets it again. But if the batsman gets out of his box that stops play until the runner gets back. They will tell you that if the batsman remains in his position and the pitcher delivers the ball before the runner retouches his base after a foul the runner will have to get back anyway before he can advance on a base hit. Now none of these things is true.

It doesn't make a bit of difference whether or not the basman gets out of his box after a foul; it doesn't make a bit of difference whether the pitcher waits for the runner to go back before delivering the ball, and if the batsman should whale a pitched ball over the fence while a base runner was on the way back to his base after a foul hit it would not make a bit of difference either.

Ball Out of Play.

The reason is that the ball is automatically put out of play when a foul hit is made and not caught. It is just the same as if the umpire called "Time" for an injury or change of players. Nothing can happen legally until the ball is put in play again by the umpire. According to the rules, the umpire is supposed to call 'play' after every foul that is not caught. If you don't believe it read rule 35 in any guide or rule book.

That the umpire does not call 'play' after each foul ball is due to habit. That formality has been neglected so long that it has come to be understood that play shall be suspended until the runner gets back. Legally, the umpire is required to call "play" at the start of a game or an inning before the pitcher delivers the ball, but only a few of them do it now days. Perhaps this disregard of a minor formality is responsible for the growth of the misapprehension that the batsman must get out of position after a foul to keep the ball out of play.

Umpires Face Trouble.

Rule 35 would be found to be decidedly a live one if it should happen some day that a pitcher did not wait for a runner to return to his base after a foul and if the batsman cracked the ball for a home run. The umpire would have to rule that the hit did not count because the ball was not in play. He would have to do that if he enforced the rule literally. It probably would cause a riot, and consequently the wise umpire in such a case would penalize the pitcher for not waiting by allowing the hit to stand. But in such case the runner who was on his way back to a base after a foul hit would have to retouch his base. He could run on a fair hit from wherever he happened to be when the pitcher delivered the ball.

It is true that rule 35 says that a runner shall return to his base "if the umpire declares any foul not legally caught." But it is also true that the penalty for not returning to a base in such case must be claimed by the opposing side before the ball is delivered to the batsman by the pitcher. Therefore, if the slabman pitches before the runner gets back to his base he forfeits the right to claim an out on the runner who did not go back.

Seldom Touch Base.

Only a few players are aware of this and if you will watch you will see that they seldom actually retouch a base after a foul that is not caught. They go back nearly to the base, which is the intent of the rule. Harry Lord almost never retouched his base after a foul. He merely went back within a step or two of it. Then if the pitcher wanted to put him out for not retouching his base the ball had to be thrown there so that he could be tagged. In that case Lord could touch the base, but the instant the ball was delivered to the batsman again Lord could not be tagged out for not retouching his base.

That is just the same as when a runner cuts a base in advancing on a hit. The claim must be made at once or it will not be allowed. If the ball is pitched before the penalty is claimed the rules forbid allowing a claim that is made after delivery of the ball to the batsman.

Inter-Catholic Ball League Is Organized

The Inter-Catholic Baseball League was organized at a meeting held in St. Alphonsus' Lyceum last evening. The representatives present were: St. Peter's Cathedral, Mr. S. Houlihan; Church of the Sacred Heart, Mr. Walter O'Connell; Church of the Immaculate Conception, Mr. M. O'Heron; Knights of Columbus, Mr. J. S. Milloy.

The election of officers resulted as follows:

Hon. Presidents— Very Rev. Dean McColl, Rev. C. J. Phelan, Rev. J. J. OBrien.

Hon Vice-President — Mr. M. O'Heron.

President—Mr. James Dillon.

Vice-President—Mr. S. Houlihan.

Secretary-Treasurer—Walter O'Connell.

The games will be played in the evenings, generally on Tuesday. Two games will be scheduled for the same night, one at the Sacred Heart grounds, the other at Riverside Park. The games will open at 6.45 o'clock. The teams representing churches will play men of their respective parishes, while the Knights of Columbus will play men of their local Council. Each team must supply a man for each game. The four men will constitute two grounds committees, one for each park. Each team will also supply one ball for each game, same to be returned at the conclusion of the game. The secretary and president were authorized to appoint umpires and scorers.

No admission fee will be charged, as the fundamental idea of the men behind the League is to provide sport for the younger elements.

The following schedule was adopted:

June 8—St. Peter's at Sacred Heart (S. H.); K.C. at Imm. Conception (River.)

June 11—Sacred Heart vs. Imm. Conception (River.); K.C. vs. St. Peter's, (S. H.)

June 29—St. Peter's vs. Imm. Conception (River.); K.C. vs. Sacred Heart (S.H.)

June 29—Sacred Heart vs. St. Peter's (River.); Imm. Conception vs. K.C. (S.H.)

July 6—Imm. Conception vs. Sacred Heart (S.H.); K.C. vs. St. Pet r's (River.)

July 16—Imm. Conception vs. St. Peter's (S.H.); K.C. vs. Sacred Heart (River.)

Knox Church Won From The George St. Team

George Street and Knox boys were the attraction at the Oval last night, and with the exception of one inning the brand of ball displayed was very creditable.

In the second the George Street boys blew up and on a bunch of errors and muffs they allowed the south enders to pile up six runs, enough to win the game and finish the scoring as far as Knox was concerned. George Street got one across the plate in the first and one in the fourth, but this was the best they could do.

Umpire—Leo Copp.

Score—Knox 6, George Street 2.

Adams' Team Wins Collegiate Institute

In the Collegiate League last night Adams' team defeated Huycke's team for the championship of the League. A win for either side would have won the championship for that team.

Adams started the fireworks in the first innings by scoring four runs on a pass, a triple, a double and two singles; also two more runs in the third innings.

Huycke's team became dangerous in the third and fourth, but after the fourth neither side scored.

Henry was hit freely, but in the seventh, with the bases full and none out kepr his opponents from scoring.

Adams pitched air-tight ball and allowed only five hits. Both sides received good support.

This league has furnished a good brand of ball and many fans saw the contest, Harold Long umpired satisfactorily. Score by innings:

PLANK PROFITS BY MACK REBUKE

Eddie Plank recently uncorked a bouquet for Connie Mack that shows how Connie is regarded by his former pitcher.

"He is a wonderful manager," says Eddie. "He is a quiet, observing man, just as one would judge from a look at his pictures. He pulls in harmony with all his players and it is rare indeed that he gives one a 'calling.'

"Right well I remember the first and and rebuke Connie ever directed toward my head. We were playing in Chicago in 1908, and the gentleman who was umpiring the game (there is no need of mentioning his name here) was calling 'balls' on me when the leather was cutting the plate in half. I raised the dickens with him and he kept calling them bad until the seventh inning, and then I flew off my guard. I took off my glove and threw it in the air, and was immediately chased off the field.

"Nice Work, Eddie."

"As I walked over to put on my sweater Connie said in a slow, deliberate way, with a piercing note of sarcasm in his voice: 'Nice work, Eddie; you showed excellent judgment.'

"That was all, just seven words, but believe me, boys, I'll remember those seven words as long as I live. They hurt me worse than if he had 'lit in' and cussed me until he was blue in the face. I don't retain their memory with any hard feeling toward Mack attached—far from it. I simply remember them as forming the most cutting rebuke I have ever received. It taught me a lesson I never forgot—I never lost my head to such an extent as to get myself chased for it.

Advise Players to Keep Cool.

"'And so, fellows, my little word of advice to you is that you try to keep the temperature in the neighbourhood of your cranium in the vicinity of 70 degrees Fahrenheit or lower, if possible. This applies especially to the pitchers and catchers who are often wont to kick up the dust and create a row over pitched balls. When a man forces the ump to send him to the clubhouse he is hurting his teammates, not himself, and therefore it is his team-mates he must consider rather than himself.

"To kick and pout at a bad decision is only a mark of weakness on the part of the player, and the possible results do not justify it. The umpire cannot change his decision, and to fight him means to jeopardize your chances of fair play. My policy has been 'Never kick on a decision,' and I have found it a very good rule to follow."

Is Wounded and A Prisoner of War in Germany

LINDSAY, June 3.—His hundreds of Lindsay friends will be delighted to hear that Pte. Chas. Crozier, who was reported missing, is not killed, but is held as a wounded prisoner of war in Germany. A letter, which appears below, was received from him by his mother yesterday morning, and as could be imagined, there was great rejoicing in the home. Pte. Crozier, wounded and alone, saved his own life by his knowledge of first aid taught him while in the employ of the Shawinigan Power Co. His sufferings and the way he handled himself in his difficulty can best be realized by reading his letter. The bandages he used on his wounds were those sent him by his sister, who is a nurse and who each time she wrote sent him fresh supplies, saying that some day they might stand him in good stead, which they certainly did. Undoubtedly if it had not been for his perseverance in adjusting the bandages he would have bled to death. The letter is written from Lagarett, C.L. 2, Kriegsefangenenlager, Ohrdruf.

What is probably a censor's stamp is on the outside of the envelope, "Gepsruft Gerfangerenlager, Ohedry.

May 6, 1915.

Lazarett, C.L. 2

Dear Folks,—Am writing to let you know that I am a wounded prisoner in Germany. I am shot through the left knee, which is broken, and also have a wound through the muscles of the right shoulder. I also had a slight shrapnel wound in the head which does not amount to anything.. We were in the thick of it. I guess my company is pretty nearly all gone. I was lying out for about forty hours before I was picked up by the German Red Cross. They have done the very best possible for me. I am receiving the best of treatment and am looking forward to the time when I will be able to get around on a pair of crutches. I had put a splint on my leg and I was feeling easier when I got hit in the shoulder. I had only one small bandage left, and believe me I had some time getting it around my shoulder, as every time I moved I hurt my leg. I finally got it on after a fashion, and stopped the bleeding. It is a good thing I was in such good health, as between the two wounds I lost quite a lot of blood, and it rained quite a lot while I was lying out, but I did not feel any the worst for it. There are quite a number of Canadians in this hospital. As far as I know there is only one other from my battalion (14th), and he is from a different company than I. I guess I won't be able to move around very quickly before July. I was hit just after daybreak on April 24th, and my leg was pulled in and set on the 27th. The weather here is grand at present, the sunshine is nice and bright, and the grass is green. It is lovely outside. I wish you would send me some tooth paste and brusk, also some bars of chocolate. This is all I require. I can only send a post card a week, and one letter every two weeks.

Tell my friends I would like to hear from all of them.

Fighting in Flanders

LONDON, June 3—An 'eye-witness' account of fighting in Flanders from May 27 to June 1 was issued by the War Office yesterday. It speaks for the most part of artillery duels. Its most important news is the statement that none of the recently won ground has been recaptured by the Germans. The account may be summarized as follows:

"During the last few days there was no serious fighting on our front. Thursday, the 27th, the Germans bombarded our whole line between Richebourg, Lavoue and Festubert, but did not attempt to recover the ground lost.

"During the night of May 27-28 a listening patrol, north of Armentieres, had a hand-to-hand fight with a band of 20 Germans who suddenly attacked. The Germans retired, leaving a dead officer and several wounded men. For such enterprises the Germans often arm their men with knives and revolvers.

"On the morning of the 29th Epinette, south of Armentieres, was heavily shelled. On the 30th the enemy again shelled our positions about Festubert and at several points at our centre. Our artillery replied with good effect.

"On Sunday, the 30th, our trenches north and south of the Menin road were heavily shelled."

The account says it is evident that it has become a practice among officers and men of the German army to divest the dead of their uniforms and wear them themselves.

"ALL ARE LIMIT OF COOLNESS AND AUDACITY"

Col. E. W. Morrison D. S. O. Commander of the Brigade in Which Peterboro's Artillerymen Are Serving Is Very Proud of His Men—Fought Seventeen Days Without Taking Their Clothes Off—Six Guns Smashed and 80 Casualties Sustained

Colonel E. W. Morrison, D.S.O., commander of the First Canadian Artillery Brigade, in which the Peterborough Artillerymen are serving, writes another thrilling letter from the trenches near Ypres to his wife. Nothing more fascinating than the letters of the former "war editor" are coming from the front. It is as follows:

HEADQUARTERS, First Canadian Artillery Brigade, May 10.—Last night my brigade was relieved at Ypres, after being 17 days in the trenches, fighting night and day. During that time we had six guns smashed by shells and sustained 80 casualties, including Lieut. Helmer killed, Major Sharman, Lieuts. Bick, Craig and Whitley wounded.

Day before yesterday the First Battery was horribly "blacksmithed" by "Jack Johnsons," young Lamplough, nephew of Col. Winter, being killed and four gun sergeants among the wounded. Young Goodeve is now in command and fought the battery well during the last two days.

Yesterday afternoon the German artillery devoted nearly an hour to my observation post and the dug-out on the banks of the Yser canal, which the staff and I have occupied since the beginning. They certainly were good to us, but they failed to drive "yours truly" off "the bridge." I had to order Dodds down, and luckily "the Kid" (Capt. Cosgrave) was away, so the telephonists and I lay in the trench and we kept the batteries working through it all.

Later on when we got orders to move we had over 100 surplus shells under the guns, so I decided to leave our P.P.C. We had been working with a fine little man, Brig.-Gen. Anley, 12th Infantry Brigade, for three days, supporting him, so about 6 p.m. I turned on all my surviving guns, rapid fire, enfilading the German trenches in his front where they angle up to us from St. Julien. The German reserves were crowded in the support trenches from which they had been attacking the 12th Brigade front all day, and our forward observing officers say every shell told. Then the German guns went to the French division on our left and the French 75's went to the German trenches in their front, and the British batteries over Ypres way crossed their fire with mine. In ten minutes the smoke and dust hid the front for two miles.

For the first time in days absolute silence reigned last night, and it was fair uncanny. Jack McCrae shook his head and presaged that the Germans would lay for me when my batteries moved out of the position after dark. I bet they wouldn't, and anyway I was tired deferring to the feelings of the Germans—which seem too prevalent in some quarters along the front. It's a case of don't irritate the enemy. And it worked out as I expected. For the first time in weeks they didn't resume shelling us until long after dark and I got my brigade out of the position with only two horses hit.

Then we marched through the night and arrived here at daybreak after 17 days of constant battle, during which we never had our clothes off. We just fell down and slept like dead men until noon. Tonight I am going to sleep in a real bed in a nice clean billet. On the road last night we heard of the Lusitania business. It's tough, but possibly it will make some of those "be kind to Germany" holy-bolies housecleen their intellects.

FIRED 16,000 SHELLS.

We are here for a rest for four days, then to it again. My guns fired 16,000 shells at Ypres and the darlings are as tired as we are and will have to be tuned up before we can take on the Boches again. But everybody is happy and we don't think the enemy will forget us on the canal front around Ypres for some little time.

The French are awfully smart in tending to their wounded, but singularly unclean about their dead. They leave them lying about for days. A big Zouave was killed near the shack where he ate behind the trenches at my headquarters and was still there when we left last night — and the weather was hot, too.

My staff are all well. A big shell lit near the "Baby" (Capt. Cosgrave) and boosted him 20 feet in the air, but he only got a sprained wrist coming down. We docked him for the time he was up in the sky.

You would have been thrilled to see my drivers bringing up the ammunition under fire, shells bursting on every side of them, but coming at the gallop without a flinch or a swerve, and rounding up with a flourish behind the guns, just to show the Frenchies a bit of side. And our fine horses (for they are splendid again) snorting and arching their necks and looking cooly about as if they knew they were delivering the goods and thought contemptuously of German shells.

And sometimes they arrive with only two teams instead of three and the drivers capless and their clothes and faces splashed with blood, but always cool and even nonchalant. I never tired admiring them or of watching their luck, even in my busiest moments, as they run the gauntlet back and forth.

"King" (Col. Morrison's horse) had not seen me until last night, since the battle began, and he almost talked. He is revelling in the sugar you sent.

I see our losses were over six thousand in the Canadian division. Well, it was worth it. Our arrival was providential. We took over from another French division and so extended the British left to the critical point. An old British officer said to Cosgrave today, when he was arranging for the overhauling of our guns: "I'm rather sorry for you Canadians."

"Why?" 'asked Cosgrave.

"Because you will have to live up to the standard you have set."

WORK WITHOUT FRILLS.

I have dim recollection of telling you about 496 times that the Canadians would make the best soldiers in the world—barring the Scotch. Now I think it's neck and neck. I was asked yesterday to pick out a possem in my brigade for a Russian decoration corresponding to the distinguished conduct medal. I couldn't do it. Neither could the adjutant nor Major McCrae. "It can't be did." They are all the limit of coolness and audacity and they don't go flourishing about saving wounded under fire and such like nonsense. (I told the H.Q. staff that anyone who undertakes to "save" me under fire will get ten days C.B. They all grinned and saw the point);

Capt. Ackerman Sends Souvenir of the Prussians Guard—Guns Referred to on Despatch Were Not Canadian Artillery But Were Part of the 3rd City of London Corps, Attached to French Brigade

Mr. W. C. Ackerman has received the following interesting letter from his brother, Capt. C. H Ackerman, of the 2nd Battalion, written on May 12th:

"At last I have been successful in getting away by mail, a box containing a Prussian Guard helmet (handpicked), that I picked up quite close to the place where poor Major Bennett was lying when we found him the night after he, along with so many other 87th men, were killed.

A few nights later we were out providing a covering party to another battalion who were digging an advanced trench and strengthening the line in front of some German trenches. when I picked up a Ghurka's knife (kukri) and water-bottle. We had quite a hot time that night, as apart from the digging party the Lahore Division (Indian), with whom we were working, had parties out burying German and Indian dead. It was a very bright moonlight night and every few minutes the Germans would give us a few shots, just to let us know they were there. It was kind of ghostly walking around, when suddenly you would come across two or three Indians, Germans, French or Turcos lying dead. It seemed that nearly every one of the Allies' fighting units was represented in this particular spot.

We brought in a badly wounded Turco, who said he had been lying hidden for three days, wounded, and afraid to move as the Germans had held that ground when they broke through the French lines. They were driven back on the day of the night we were sent out.

I promised Mr. E. G. Patterson I would send the (Peterborough) Club a helmet as soon as I was able to get one, so I wish you would lend the club this one until I can send another. I expect we shall have lots of opportunities for gathering these souvenirs in the near future. We are going to move again shortly, but of course, we don't know to what part.

I started to write this letter the day before yesterday, but have been interrupted so often I have found it impossible to finish. It is very hard to find much to write about that you do not see in the papers. It is interesting to see the newspaper accounts of the Canadian Heavy Battery we saved from the Germans. As a matter of fact the guns were not Canadian at all, but 3rd City of London 4.7's attached to a French artillery brigade. We had a trench just behind the wood in which these guns were placed, for two days, but on Saturday afternoon we had to retire as our salient projected too far into the German territory, especially after the Germans took St. Julien on our right. The guns, while they were in the woods, were between the German trenches and our, but when we fell back, I am sorry to say, were taken by the Germans, but not before they were badly damaged.

We took a number of prisoners, and without exception they were a splendid bunch physically, well-fed, clean-cut, but showing somewhat a little the worse for wear. From our trench behind the wood I was watching the fight for St. Julien with a telescope. The French troops were opposing the advance and I could see very plainly the French and Germans fighting with bayonets. The French put up a very game fight, but they were far out-numbered. I will try and finish up my account of our experience and get it away soon."

Fruit Crop Averages Well Record Peach Yield Expected

Summary of the Fruit Crop Situation as Prepared by the Department of Agriculture---Frost Destroys 25 to 35 Per Cent. of Strawberry Blossom--Apple Crop Will Be Large

Following a mild winter, says the Department of Agriculture in a bulletin just issued regarding Ontario crop conditions, the spring opened with warm weather in April, giving fruit buds an early start. Since then there has been considerable rain, accompanied by low temperature. Frosts have been reported from many localities, some having done little or no damage, while in other instances the losses will be severe. In the Toronto-Hamilton district the growers estimate the losses to the strawberry crop by frost at 35 per cent.

Niagara Peninsula. — Frost injury is sectional, with grapes suffering most; perhaps 35 per cent. of total crop lost in exposed situations. Some favoured sections have escaped in jury. Plums are all lost in places, but total crop is only slightly affected. Early tomato plants have been destroyed. Cherries are severely injured. Twenty-five per cent. of the open strawberry blossom is lost. Tree fruits are not likely to be hurt very much. Total loss in peninsula fruit crop (all fruits) is estimated as not likely to exceed 20 per cent. Peaches show no injury.

Lambton County.—Frosts have affected fruit prospects. Cherries, plums, peaches, strawberries, and early tomatoes may be seriously hurt except in the lake district. Strawberry men still hope for some late berries. There is no appreciable damage to apples.

Essex County.—The lowest temperature has been 31 degrees. No injury is apparent.

Norfolk County.—Strawberries and apples are both hurt by frost. The damage has not been estimated.

Georgian Bay District.—There has been frost all over this district. The damage is considerable.

APPLES.

Basing a forecast upon the set of blossoms in the various fruit districts of Canada, it appears that the crop will be large, except in southern and western Ontario, where it will be only half of that harvested last season. Large orchards in eastern Ontario promise a heavy crop with the exception possibly of Spies and Greenings in certain localities.

In the districts of Quebec and Ontario, where Fameuse and McIntosh apples grow extensively, these two varieties have blossomed well and set heavily.

STRAWBERRIES.

Serious injury has been done to the berry plantations by frost. The last reports were received on May 28, and intimated that the losses had been severe. In Lambton and Simcoe the crop has probably been greatly reduced. No loss was experienced in the Essex Peninsula.

Even before this week early blooming strawberries had been injured in some localities. In the Toronto-Hamilton section, where a large acreage has been planted, the crop has been reduced by at least 35 per cent.

TOMATOES.

The acreage under tomatoes is considerably reduced this year in Ontario and many canning factories will not be operated. There has been severe damage by frost in all parts of the province. The supply of tomatoes on the markets this year will be small compared to that of 1914.

PEARS.

West of Toronto, as far as Niagara Falls, the pear crop varies between average and full. Bartlett's are reported light in the Burlington district with other varieties heavily blossomed. In the Niagara Peninsula Kiefiers and Bartletts have set well, although there was some injury to blossoms by frost. The crop will be about medium.

PLUMS.

The crop of plums in the commercial orchards of Western Ontario and Niagara will be exceptionally heavy, judging from the set of blossoms. Of course there is always a very heavy "drop" and early reports are often too optimistic. Frost in Lambton County on May 26th probably caused some injury.

CHERRIES.

In the Niagara Peninsula there has been an exceedingly heavy bloom with a strong setting of all varieties. In some sections the sweet varieties will bear a larger crop than other sorts, but this condition does not exist throughout the entire disrict.

GRAPES.

It is somewhat early to form any definite estimate of the Niagara grape crop. All reports indicate that the yield will be from medium to heavy. Later reports indicate very serious injury by frost in all sections of the peninsula.

PEACHES.

In the Niagara Peninsula the blossom was heavier than for some years past and the fruit has set well. Growers are already making plans to market a very large crop, and there is every reason to believe that the coming season will be a record breaker. The only variety that is reported at all light is the Elberta, and that only in orchards which were affected with "Leaf Curl" in 1914. It will be remembered that last year the peach crop was a total failure in the Niagara district, which doubtless accounts for the exceptionally heavy set this season. It is more than likely that considerable thinning will have to be done. No injury by frost has yet been reported.

Earth, Fire and Water Used to Wed Couple

BERKELEY, Cal., June 2.—Henry H. Monges, Jr., of the architectural department of the University of California, and Miss Madeline Breckenridge, of Toledo, O., were united in marriage here in a unique mystical ceremony.

They knelt together before an open fireplace in the presence of fifteen wedding guests. Face to face, with lips almost touching, they repeated a service of words and with earth, water and fire symbolically enacted their physical, mental and spiritual union.

The pair held two separate urns of earth, and alternately with their right and left hands dropped the earth into a third urn, signifying the physical union.

To symbolize the union of minds each held a flask of water and together they poured the water into a third flask. The spiritual union was accomplished by the light of two candles, typifying the fires of the home. The flaming wax sticks were held together until the melted wax welded them into one.

After these rites the orthodox marriage service was performed by Judge Waste.

WILL KEEP RECORD OF UNEMPLOYED

City May Establish a Municipal Employment Bureau—The Situation in Hamilton

At last night's meeting of the Manufacturers' Committee a discussion arose regarding a municipal employment bureau. Ald. Dobbin, executive officer of the Patriotic Fund, said they were willing to register the names of men requiring employment, and also keep a record of the names, so far as they were given them, of those wanting labour. This offer was accepted.

In Hamilton.

That the city of Hamilton is up against a similar situation as regards the unemployed is indicated by the following account of a conference that was held to discuss the matter.

At a conference in the office of Secretary Kappele, of the Board of Works, consideration was given to various schemes for looking after the needy of Hamilton this summer and winter. Ald. David Newlands, who is anxious to have as much work as possible opened up for the unemployed, thought that the city should insist on local improvements being undertaken, whether property owners were against such or not. It was pointed out by Secretary Kappele that even if all of the men were given jobs during the summer they would have to be cared for during the cold months. It was then suggested that half of the wages of those getting work during the construction season be kept until the winter and then turned over to those dependent on them. Whether this scheme will be adopted or not is undecided. The Council would have to give its approval. Ald. Newlands favours the construction of sewers and other such work during the winter. The increase in cost would be a mere trifle. The present outlook is that the department will have no work for any one to do after the end of July.

The City Will Defend the Case

Action is Threatened Arising Out of Accident That Occurred on Aylmer Street

A meeting of the Legal Committee of the City Council was held last evening. A letter was read from D. O'Connell requesting the claim of T. J. Moore for an accident on Aylmer Street.

It was moved by Ald. Saunders and seconded by Ald. Edgar that if an action is brought against the city by T. J. Moore the City Solicitor be instructed to defend the city and to take such steps as may be necessary.

It was moved by Ald. Stratton and seconded by Ald. Saunders, that Messrs. Foley and Gleason, paving contractors, having finished their contract of July 24th, 1914, for the construction of pavements and given a maintenance bond in connection with it, the construction bond given by them in connection with that contract be returned.

OUTLOOK FAVOURABLE FOR A RECORD CROP

OTTAWA, June 2.—W. D. Scott, Superintendent of Immigration, returned yesterday from a trip through Western Canada. He confirms previous reports that conditions favour a record crop in the Prairie Provinces. The growth, he says, is ten days in advance of other seasons, and the grain is uniformly even. The rains have been very beneficial and have been heaviest in the districts which were drought-stricken last year, and which have been sown with grain advanced by the Government.

The only immigration move in the West is made up by intending farmers with capital, chiefly from the Western States.

Inquest Into The Death of Mr. David Guiry

An inquest into the death of David Guiry, a venerable resident of the Township of Ennismore, who died at St. Joseph's Hospital as a result of injuries received in an auto accident, was opened last evening by Coroner Greer, who considered an inquest necessary before the burial certificate was granted. A jury was impannelled viewed the body, and adjourned till Saturday.

Conducted Defence For Dr. Crippen

LONDON, June 2—Mr. A. A. Tobin, K.C., has been appointed Judge of the Herefordshire County Courts Circuit. The appointment causes a vacancy in the borough of Preston. At the last general election there were three candidates for the two seats, the voting resulting as follows:

A. A. Tobin (C.)	8,998
H. Young (L.)	8,232
W. N. Carr (Lab.)	7,895

The new judge, who is in his 60th year, and is unmarried, has been Recorder of Guilford since 1904. He unsuccessfully contested the Scotland Division of Liverpool in 1906. He came into prominence at the time of the Crippen trial, when he put up a very ingenious defence on the latter's behalf.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE G. R. COPPING HELD YESTERDAY

Quiet and Impressive Ceremony at His Home in Toronto—Family Deeply Bereaved

TORONTO, June 2.—One of the last leaves in the tragedy of the sinking of the Lusitania was closed this afternoon, when the body of the late Mr. G. R. Copping was borne to its resting place in Mount Pleasant Cemetery. The service, held quietly in his late home at 79 South Drive, was peculiarly tragic. The grief of loss is made bitter by the sense of wrong, and to the large number of relatives and close friends present in the flower-filled room the words of the wonderful service for the dead, read by Archdeacon Cody, of whose church the late Mr. Copping was a member, carried a deeper significance, with their comfort:

"For since by man came death, by man came also resurrection from the dead. . . . Forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord."

DIED NOT IN VAIN.

The message of comfort spoken by Rev. Byron H. Stauffer included this thought: The lives that went out in the loss of the Lusitania were not given in vain. From this death of the innocent and helpless will spring the seed of justice that will forever erase the shadow of Prussianism from the world.

There was no music at the ceremony, which was extremely simple. The wonderful wreaths, pillows, and baskets of flowers, which made the rooms fragrant, were remarkable for lovely colour combination, and brought with them nothing of the suggestion of death. Some of the gifts from the public organizations with which Mr. Copping had been associated included tokens from the R. C. Y. C. Bowlers' Association, the Brinton Carpet Company of Peterborough, the Provincial Paper Company, the Montrose Power House, Thorold, and the Montrose Paper Company of Thorold, the Zetland Masonic Lodge, officers and members of the R.C.Y.C., the Royal Grenadiers Regiment (of which Mr. Norman Copping, a son, is a member), Royal Grenadiers Chapter, I.O.D.E., and the employees of the Reliance Knitting Company.

PALLBEARERS FROM U. S.

The pallbearers were Mr. C. B. Godden, of Montreal, Mr. Chas. McD. Hay, Mr. Richard Price of Jackson, Mich.; Mr. Marshall Brown, Mr. William Copping (brother of the deceased), and Mr. T. A. Weldon, of Thorold.

Among the out-of-town friends who came to Toronto to be present at the funeral were Mr. and Mrs. Richard Price of Jackson, Mich.; Mr. Russell Copping, of Peterborough, and Mr. E. R. Norton, of Arkansaw, Mich.

Touching reference was made in the ceremony to the loss of Mrs. Copping, of whom there has been no trace since the tragedy, and the service was a memorial for the lost mother as well as for the father. The family, bereft at once of both parents, consists of two sons, Mr. Norman Copping, of Toronto, and Mr. Russell Copping, of Peterborough. The father of the late Mr. Copping was also present at the funeral, Mr. Edward Copping, who is 86 years of age, and who lives at 145 Dunn Avenue.

The local plant of the Brinton Carpet Co. was closed yesterday.

CHEESE MEN HAVE A GRIEVANCE

NORWOOD, June 3.—Cheesemen in the surrounding country are airing another grievance this week, in that they have not yet received the money for their cheese, which was shipped a week ago or so. This delay is said to be a contravention of the rules of the Peterborough Cheese Board, which call for the payment of cheese at the car door. It is understood the amount of money due these or so of the factories exceeds $8,000.00.

"BRITISH FLEET IN RAT HOLES"

In a letter written by a German woman to her son, who was one of the sailors rescued from Admiral von Spee's squadron in the battle in which the German cruiser squadron was destroyed at the Falkland Islands, an interesting impression is conveyed of the state of the popular mind about the war at Kiel, the chief German war port. The letter reads in part as follows:

". . . . In the field our machine guns allow nothing to live. They mow everything down, especially when they have Englishmen before them. They say that often people who are hit cannot even fall down, but simply stand up dead, because there is not any more room around them in which to fall. This is especially the case with the Russians, who drive up their troops in masses.

"Our cousin, Mr. Englishman, has brought people from everywhere to beat us. He is not ashamed of sending savages and negroes against us. But this time he will get his own hide thrashed, because until this has happened we will have no peace. He is the instigator of this whole business, but he did not dream that the German is everywhere on guard and is holding out loyallly and firmly. The Englishman thought he could play the ringmaster and make everybody dance to his tune, and he sees he has been fooled.

"He wanted to end the war on Belgian, French, and German soil. This won't be the case, however, for we are also going to England. We gave them a little taste of that when our armoured cruisers bombarded Hartlepool on December 16. Our ships attacked in force, but met with little resistance, because the English Fleet is hidden in rat-holes everywhere. The English do not have to dig the German Fleet out. No, it is the other way about.

"That the English can command the North Sea is absolutely impossible. They don't even trust themselves in the neighbourhood of the German coast. They know better than to come under the guns of Heligolandor Borkum. Our miles and submarines are on watch. But sooner or later the English must come, because we must get to England, and will get there. It is wonderful with what smartness our ships shelled the English coast on December 16. We have done so, and that ends the matter, and for us the incident is therefore closed. . . . Before June we cannot count on peace, because we must overthrow the English under all circumstances in order to have calm and quiet."

Children Growing "War" Potatoes

An interesting story of how 1,250 public school children, throughout the length and breadth of Ontario, are raising potatoes for patriotic purposes, is related by Mr. William Bailey, Assistant Deputy Minister of Agriculture.

It is believed by the Department of Agriculture, under whose auspices the movement started, that somewhere in the neighbourhood of 25,000 bushels of potatoes will be raised, which, it is expected, will be sold for at least 50 cents a bushel, totalling $12,500. The money will then be turned over to the fund for patriotic purposes, the needs of which seem to be the most urgent.

The movement is in connection with the School Fair Movement. There are 230 School Fair Associations at present in Ontario, having a membership of 45,000 school children. When the Department of Agriculture conceived the idea of growing potatoes on "war plots" it naturally turned to the school children connected with the School Fairs. They were asked to send in applications, and responded nobly. Each applicant was given an 80th of an acre on which to grow patriotic potatoes. There have been 1,250 applicants.

Three Bushels per Plot.

An 80th of an acre means a plot of land 36 x 16 feet. The average yield of potatoes to the acre is 260 bushels. Therefore each plot of land is expected to yield about three bushels.

The plots will be inspected regularly by Government officials between now and the end of September, when they will be harvested, and prizes will be given to children making the best showing. The department furnishes the seed, with instructions as to growing. Each applicant receives 15 pounds of seed. In the Fall, after the potatoes have been dug, they will be sold in the large centres. Thus do potatoes and patriotism walk hand in hand these days.

Not Many of No. 1 Company Left

Writes Lance Corp. Brooks

Filled Up With New Drafts—Young's Point Boy Says Canada is Good Enough for Him and He'll Never Want to Leave It.

FIRING LINE POETRY

Mrs. Wm. Brooks, Young's Point, has received the following letter from her son, Lance Corp. Oswald Brooks, of the 57th detachment in the 2nd Batalion, who came through Langemarck safely. Writing on May 9th, he says:

Dear Mother,—Received your letter yesterday and was glad to hear from you. It has been over a month since I had a letter and was beginning to think you had forgotten me. Say, the cake was simply grand. I shared it among the section. There are not many of the old No. 1 Company left, only a few, and the rest are new fellows only out here about a week.

I got hold of a Peterborough paper the other day with my picture and a letter I sent you in it

I hope the war is soon over so I can get home. When I get back I will have some interesting stories to tell you. Our last billet was on the Queen of Belgium's estate. I was in the palace. Oh, it is something grand. On the lawn, about half a mile square was an artificial lake, with about fifty swans, ducks and geese on it. The driveways were magnificent. Some Count owned the next estate and there was a small river running through the wooded part of it and he allowed us to go swimming there. There was an island in the river and it was one mass of underground passages and caves. You could walk up one passage and down another for an hour without coming to the end. The island was about four times the size of Polly's Island, below Young's Point. I suppose, mother, by this time you are at the beach, and I hope you have a good season. By your letter Claire hasn't forgotten me yet. It is wonderful, being so young when I came away. Does he go in bathing yet? I got the "snaps" Geraldine sent me of him, and he looks so cute. I wonder if he will know me when I get back, and I hope it is the summer for I am tired of this country. Some people might like it, but I don't, although there are some fine buildings and estates here; some of the farm houses are better than any house in Peterborough; they are grand. Well, I have been in the United States, England, France and Belgium, but if I ever get back to Canada I'll never leave it. I will be contented to stay at South Beach the rest of my life. I cannot send any souvenirs; on account of the large mails we are not allowed to send parcels, but when I go back I will take some.

I received a letter from Aunt Louise in Alaska, some time ago. She was fine and was in Circle City when she wrote me, but was going back to Fairbanks in a few days.

Tell father that I was promoted after the battle of Langemarck that the 2nd Battalion bore the brunt of. I am now a Lance-Corporal, and will try to rise higher. Poor Major Bennett, I was close to him when he was killed and saw him fall.

With love to father and all, I am,

Your loving son,

Oswald.

Lance-Corp. Brooks encloses the following verses that were composed in the trenches:

The Trenches.

A foot of mud, twelve inches deep,
A little hole through which we peep,
A new Ross rifle which we keep
To pile the Huns up in a heap
If from the trenches they should creep,
And charge us like a flock of sheep,
You'd see us from our dugouts leap;
Did you think that we were asleep?
Don't weep.

And when they pitch their shot and shell,
We signal back that all is well,
Until they hit your Sunday pal,
Then there's a different tale to tell,
Their Hunnish noise we have to quell—
We up and at 'em with a yell,
They've been the limit—rung the bell
And now we're going to give them hell—
Death knell.

And when we rush at Mr. Hun,
He doesn't stop to see the fun:
Politely drops his Mauser gun
And back to Berlin starts to run
To tell the Kaiser that he won,
And killed Canadians by the ton;
He gets iron crosses and 'Well done',
Then Willie swears he has begun
To get his place "right in the sun."
Give him the bun.

Popular Local Young Lady Passes Away

Miss Ruby Adamson Succumbs to an Attack of Appendicits Yesterday Afternoon—Only Child of Mr. and Mrs. W. P. Adamson

One of Peterborough's most popular young ladies passed away about 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon in the person of Miss Ruby Adamson, only child of Mr. and Mrs. William Adamson, 313 Stewart street. Death came with shocking suddenness, Miss Adamson only becoming ill last Thursday. She complained while at business and remained at her home on Friday and Saturday. She would not give in; would not recognize that her illness was at all serious until Sunday evening, when she became so much worse that at a consultation of her physicians it was decided that an operation for appendicitis, from which she was suffering, was the only hope. The operation was performed, but previously to it the disease had progressed so far as to preclude recovery. She failed to rally and passed away in Nicholls Hospital last evening.

Monday, May 24th, was about the last time she was about socially, and that day she spent with a party of friends down the river, entertaining some of her visitors from out of the city. She was not very well that day, but in accordance with her usual uncomplaining disposition she did not allow the pleasure of the outing to be spoiled for her friends by letting them know of her illness.

Born in Peterborough 25 years ago she spent all her life here. She was educated in the Public schools and Collegiate Institute of the city and after leaving the latter took a course in stenography and bookkeeping in the Peterborough Business College. After completing her course there she was employed on the office staff of the Canadian Canoe Company, which position she occupied for a period of about four years. In January, 1913 she severed her connection with the Canadian Canoe Company to accept a position in the office of Messrs. Hall, Hayes and Hall, Barristers. She was employed with the latter firm at the time of her illness, in the capacity of bookkeeper and stenographer, a competent and valuable member of the staff.

As a member of Charlotte Street Methodist church she was a willing worker and a member of the C.L.A. of that church. She was interested in all the work of the young people, but directed her efforts mostly to looking after the poor or needy. She was also a regular visitor to the sick in both the local hospitals, especially in the public wards.

Miss Adamson was a girl of firm character, of an amiable disposition that made her beloved in all her social relations; a girl of a golden heart, overflowing with affection and sympathy, her kindness to the sick and suffering found outlet in numberless acts of loving attention and sympathy; and this feature of her life will be one of her strongest claims to affectionate remembrance by the countless friends she leaves behind.

Her father, Mr. W. P. Adamson, is a member of the firm of Messrs. Adamson and Dobbin. Her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Adamson, survive, and to them is extended the sympathy of the many friends and acquaintances.

The funeral will take place at 2.30 o'clock to-morrow afternoon from the family residence, 313 Stewart street, proceeding to Little Lake cemetery for interment Rev. J. P. Wilson, pastor of Charlotte Street Methodist church, will conduct the funeral service.

Voice of The People

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Will you kindly give this space in your paper; I have copied this verbatim and liberatim from Pastor Russell's 1st Vol., "The Plan of the Ages" (Pages 150-151).

"Let the actual benefits and results of the ransom be clearly seen, and all objections to its universal application must vanish.

The "ransom for all" given by 'the man' Christ Jesus' does not give or guarantee everlasting life or blessing to any man, but it does guarantee to every man another opportunity or trail for life everlasting.

The first trial of man which resulted in the loss of the blessings at first conferred is really turned into a blessing of experience to the loyal-hearted, by reason of the ransom God has provided.

But the fact that men are ransomed from the first penalty does not guarantee that they may not, when individually tried for everlasting life, fail to render the obedience without which none will be permitted to live everlastingly.

Man, by reason of present experience with sin, and its bitter penalty, will be fully fore-warned; and when, as a result of the ransom, he is granted another, and individual trial, under the eye and control of Him who so loved him as to give His life for him, and who would not that any should perish but that all should turn to God and live, we may be sure that only the wilfully disobedient will receive the penalty of the second trial.

That penalty will be the second death from which there will be no ransom, no release, because there would be no object for another ransom or a further trial.

All will have fully seen and tasted both good and evil, all will have witnessed and experienced the goodness and love of God; all will have had a full, fair, individual trial for life, under most favourable conditions.

More could not be asked and more will not be given.

That trial will decide forever who would be righteous and holy under a thousand trials; and it will determine also, who would be unjust and unholy and filty still under a thousand trials."

Peterborough, May 28th, 1915.

Mr. Editor,—I would like to draw the attention of some one in authority to the disgraceful condition of the portion of the Chemong road which has recently been paved with cobble stones.

It appears to me that the municipal officer who is responsible for placing them there expects the motor cars to crush them in place while travelling to that beautiful summer resort on the shore of Chemong lake, now that the holiday season is about to commence. Already some ten cars, to my knowledge, have come to grief in making an effort to travel over this unsightly piece of work.

I am told that the township of Smith has a stone crusher lying idle which might have been used to crush this stone and made a passable road, and I would advise the member of the Council who is responsible for this work to try and attend the summer school at the Ontario Agricultural College on Highway Improvement before he qualifies himself for a road builder.

I also notice a large pile of field stones a little nearer the city, which I am told is also to be placed on the road this coming month without even being put through the stone crusher, and expect the motors to roll them in also.

Yours,

AUTOIST.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Sir,—I am glad to see in this evening's Examiner "The Red Flag of Warning". It is about time some one had courage enough to expose the false doctrines that are even in our fair city of Peterborough. I have proved it's quite true that some "good" people have been led away by "Russellism." I hope what Rev. Dixon says will be a warning to many.

Yours truly,

A Constant Reader.

CAR COLLIDED WITH WHEEL

Between the hour of four and five o'clock yesterday afternoon an automobile collided with a boy cyclist at the corner of Hunter and Water streets. The front wheel of the bicycle was damaged beyond repair. The boy gathered up what was left of the wheel and proceeded to the police station accompanied by an aggregation of small boys. The victim of the accident related his story to the police and then retired. It is understood that the case was settled outside.

Fought With The "Die Hards"

The Wiltshire Times of Saturday, May 1st, has the following to say of the Middlesex Regiment, which took a prominent part in the battle of Ypres, in which so many Canadians lost their lives. The "Die Hards" have a local significance as the 57th Regiment Peterborough Rangers is affiliated, with that particular regiment.

The reference is as follows:

"But the retreat of the French had uncovered the left flank of the British, who also had to retire. It happened that the line in this place was held by the Canadian Division, who have recently gone out. In their retirement they had to leave four 4.7 inch guns behind them, big pieces, firing a shell weighing 28 pounds, and not to be moved in a hurry. The "Canucks" boiled with rage. Then a word sent them headlong at the Germans with the bayonets. Helped by the Middlesex Regiment, the glorious old "Die Hards," they went for the Boches, retook their guns, retook the position they had lost, swept on to the German trenches and, in the words of Sir John French, "saved the situation." It was a glorious baptism of fire, and there is no wonder that all Canada is ringing with pride. We of the Old Country must needs cheer for the free men of the West who have knocked spots out of the Kaiser's conscripts the first time they crossed bayonets with them."

"Good printing is not always expensive printing, but good printing is always worth what it costs.'

WEDDING BELLS

SMYTH—THOMPSON.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Thompson, South Monaghan, on May 12th, last, was the scene of a very pretty wedding, when their eldest daughter, Miss Clara E. Thompson, was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Thomas L. Smyth, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Smyth, also of South Monaghan, at high noon. Rev. Mr. Wickett, Pastor of the Benefort Methodist Church, officiated.

The residence of Mr. and Mrs. Thompson, at "Cedarvale," was prettily decorated for the occasion, the ceremony taking place beneath an arch of evergreens. The bridesmaid was Miss Daisy Thistlewaite, while the groom was assisted by his brother, Mr. Sydney Smyth. The bride was becomingly gowned in creme satin, and lace, and the bridesmaid in silk net over pink silk.

Mr. and Mrs. Smyth were the recipients of many presents, testifying to the esteem in which they were held by their many friends. The groom's gift to the bride was a bead necklace and locket; to the bridesmaid, a gold brooch set with pearls; to the groomsman, a gold tie pin set with pearls and rubies

When the bride entered the room her sister, Miss Teressa E. Thompson, played the "Bridal Chorus". The groom's present to her was a ring with a turquois setting. Only the immediate relatives and friends of the contracting parties were present.

Mr. and Mrs. Smyth left on the 5 p.m. train from Fraserville for Owen Sound and other points West, on their honeymoon. On their return they will reside at Cedarvale, South Monaghan.

CLARK—WEBSTER.

A pretty wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Webster, Otonabee, last evening, when their daughter, Miss Violet A. Webster, became the bride of Mr. Wilbert J. Clark, of Emily, son of Mr. Wm. Clark of Ennismore. The ceremony was performed on the lawn by the Rev. J. N. Clarry of St. James' Methodist Church. Little Miss Vivia Florence Anderson, cousin of the bride, was flower girl, carrying the ring in a basket of flowers. She wore a pretty dress of white voile trimmed with lace and insertion and a girdle of cream satin. The bride's gown was of shell pink satin hyphea, covered with Paris floral net and she wore the groom's gift, a necklace of sapphires and pearls. To the flower girl the groom gave a pendant and chain. The bride's bouquet was of bridal roses and lilies of the valley.

After the ceremony the seventy-five guests sat down to a sumptuous dejeuner. The table decorations consisted of carnations and streamers.

The presents received were an eloquent testimony to the popularity of the young couple.

Mr. and Mrs. Clark left in a motor car for their new home in Emily. The bride wore a sand shade going away gown and a white Milan hat trimmed with wheat and feather sprays.

MERCY, CANADIANS, MERCY" CRIED THE GERMANS

LONDON, June 3.—A thrilling description of the great battle north of Ypres, Belgium, in which the Canadian troops fought for four days with no food to sustain them but tea, was given to-day by Phillip Sampson, of Chicago, who enlisted in the Fourteenth Battalion of Canadian troops. Sampson, who was wounded north of Ypres, is now convalescing at the Duchess of Connaught's Red Cross hospital which was established at Cliveden, the home of Waldorf Astor.

"For four days and nights the battle raged and it was certainly one of the hottest engagements of the war," said Sampson. "Sunday, the last day o fthe fight, was the worst of all. During the four days we had absolutely nothing to eat, our only nourishment being sugar and tea.

"The Germans opened the attack along the entire line with bombs. I was one of a small party that recaptured the lost 4.7 Canadian guns, and we immediately turned them against the Germans.

Position Doubly Hard.

"Our position was made doubly hard by the fact that all the time we were under fire we received no aid from our own artillery. In the meantime the Germans were attacking with both infantry and artillery. The fear of death under such circumstances passes away after a time, but I was worried by the fact that my mate, a man from Glasgow, had been struck.

Sprayed With Shrapnel.

"All our men were hugging the bottoms of our trenches, for it was the only things we could do. The Germans were spraying our line with bursting shrapnel and suddenly a fragment caught me in the back. It was painful and I thought for a time I had been cut in two. After a time, although weak from loss of blood, I decided to go to the aid of my 'pal.' I crawled through the trench but when I reached his body I saw I was too late to help him. He was already dead. I unstrapped his watch from his wrist, determined to take it to his mother. Here it is on my wrist now.

"During all this time the Germans were pouring a heavy fire in upon us. The thunder was earsplitting and the air was filled with smoke and flying steel and clouds of earth.

Avenge Death of Chum.

"The death of my 'bunkie' was a hard blow for a chap gets mighty strongly attached to a friend at a time like this. It filled me with hot anger against the Germans, too. I felt that it was my duty to carry back some memento of that brave fellow to his mother. He would have done it in case of my death.

"The fighting was terrific all the time, no quarter and no cessation throughout all that awful Sunday. Out of my company of 200 men only 15 were left.

"At the greatest risk to my life I made my way out of the trench for I feared that if I remained and the Germans captured the work I would be bayonetted. The Germans had been showing mighty little mercy to wounded enemies.

"With the long cuts in my back from the shrapnel splinter I crawled on my stomach for a mile and a half until I finally reached the first dressing station at St. Julien where a surgeon gave me first aid. From there I was able to walk to Ypres to have my wound properly dressed.

Beat Prussian Guard.

"But though we had the toughest time of our lives and lost heavily, we had the satisfaction of knowing that the great Prussian guard had been beaten by us. Some of our battalions, 1,000 strong, had been whittled down to 123 members by the German fire, but the Prussians lost more heavily than we.

"No doubt the Germans have made considerable advance since I left the fornt, but I will wager they lost ground when our men began the charge. They can't stand the cold steel. This was shown when we charged against them. After the French Colonials (Algerians) had fallen back from the effects of the asphyxiating gases we also retired, but upon receiving orders to counter attack we descended upon the Germans with a terrible onslaught. The Germans went down on their knees and cried: 'Mercy Canadians, Mercy.' Those who could, ran or their lives squealing like stuck pigs."

DIED.

New York Stocks

A. E. Stratton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, June 3.— U. S. steel unfilled orders to be reported in the monthly statement on June 10 are expected to show a substantial increase as a result of a large May receipts.

In speculative quarters it is predicted now that the good government crop expected on June 8 foreshadowed by the wheat break will furnish a needed stock market stimulus.

Few stop loss orders are in the market for bull account according to specialists. A big break would be necessary to get any amount of long stock, it is said.

American shipbuilding concerns expect at least three years of great prosperity.

A stock market that refuses to decline on an unfavourable situation usually makes its next move upward, is the way the professionals are sizing up conditions.

Steel and copper stocks are in greater general demand, with pool activities on the long side suggested by developments.

Light offerings are a feature of the stock market, which is reported from many floor brokers to exhibit hardening tendencies in most departments.

American Can. is reported unusually well bought. Information channels of responsibilities have been advising the purchase of the stock.

The entire market closed strong with marked gains all along the line.

Danish Ship Was Shelled And Sunk

"Salvadore" Bound From Copenhagen to England With Cargo of Timber Torpedoed

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LERWICK, Scotland, June 4.—The Danish three-masted sailing ship Salvadore, bound from Copenhagen to England with a cargo of timber, was shelled and sunk by a German submarine in the North Sea.

The crew was picked up by the trawler "Fermen" and landed here to-day after drifting for twelve hours in an open boat.

"The submarine came alongside on Thursday morning," said Captain Sand of the Salvadore," and her commander shouted that he would give us just five minutes to take to the boats.

"I said 'This is a neutral ship,' but he said that didnt make any difference; we couldnt take a cargo of any kind to England. I asked him what would become of our families if he sank us. He said he would be sorry if anything happened, but that war was war and that we'd better get into the boat." After we rowed away the submarine's crew set fire to the Salvadore and then sank her with a few shells. Then they ran alongside our boat, gave us some tobacco, two bottles of brandy and a couple of rubber coats and towed us a short distance. They dropped us when another ship came in sight."

To Tell Kaiser At First Hand

Personal Emissary of Count Bernstorff, German Ambassador at Washington, Starts for Berlin

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, June 4. — President Wilson yesterday drafted a note, brief and pointed, to be sent to Germany asking a definite question — whether the Imperial Government intends to be guided in the future by the humane principles embodied in international law for the conduct of maritime warfare. It will be submitted to the Cabinet to-day and despatched soon thereafter, before the week-end.

Coincidently there will start for Berlin a personal emissary of Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, to lay before Emperiar William and high officials of the German Government the substance of what the Ambassador learned from President Wilson in his talk Wednesday, the true state of public opinion in the United States toward the German Government and the American point of view on submarine warfare. The Ambassador in his interview with the President, it became known yesterday, said he would send within a day or two a man of judgment and [illegible] to personally outline the situation to the German Government.

The President made arrangements at Count von Bernstorff's request for the safe conduct of the envoy. His name is not known generally, but foreign Governments already have given assurances to the United States that he will not be molested.

PEREMYSL HAS FALLEN AFTER 3 WEEKS' SIEGE

Russians Evacuated the City After Northern Forts Were Stormed---Enemy's Booty Was Not Heavy

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 4.—Peremysl is once again in the possession of Austria. After a siege lasting not quite three weeks, hopelessly battered by the powerful guns of the Austro-Germans, the Russians evacuated the city early yesterday morning.

It was not a formal surrender, as was the case March 22, when the Austrian garrison, after six months' defence, hoisted the white flag. The greater part of the Russian garrison managed to slip away over the railroad to Lemberg, which is in the 20-mile area to the east, where the Teuton forces have not consolidated their lines. They were able to take some heavy guns, many machine guns and considerable munitions of war.

What booty the Austro-Germans have captured with the fortress there is no estimate, but it is fairly certain that the Russians, having lots of time, got away as many men and as much material as possible, and destroyed the guns and ammunition that remained.

WAS NOT UNEXPECTED.

Military experts in London have foreseen the fall of Peremysl ever since it was apperent that the German and Austrian thrust through Galicia was going to strike home. Peremysl is not a safe salient in a defence line, however strong it may be as an isolated fortress.

The tactics of the new besiegers were exactly opposite to those of the Russians when the positions were reversed. The first siege was conducted with regard to human life; this second siege has been conducted along lines generally pursued in the east—an absolute disregard of human life—charges in close formation in the face of fire from machine guns and rifles, all covered by the terrific fire of the heavy Austro-German field guns.

The German army, according to the official reports from Berlin and Vienna, entered Peremysl at 3:30 o'clock yesterday morning from the north, after the last of the forts on that front of the defences had been silenced. The Austrian tenth army then came up from the west and south, reaching the centre of the town shortly after six o'clock. Most of the forts had been completely destroyed by the Austrians before they surrendered after the previous siege, and this is considered in military circles here to account for the fact that the [illegible] had to be abandoned so quickly in the face of the Austro-German attack.

It appears that there was no fighting after the ring of forts were penetrated, which leads to the belief that the town was practically empty of Russian military forces when the Austrians took possession.

With the abandonment of Peremysl by the forces of Grand Duke Nicholas, and its occupation by those of General Mackensen, the Austro-German armies achieved the main object of the grand thrust which they commenced against the Russian lines in Western Galicia just a month ago yesterday. But they have yet to drive the Russians farther back and establish themselves in easily defended positions before they can detach forces for operations against Italy and the allies in the west.

It is not expected here that the victors will be satisfied with their gain of Peremysl, but that they doubtless will endeavour to push on to Lemberg and even farther, and if possible put the Russians in such a position that they will not be able to resume the offensive for many months.

WILL FORM NEW LINE.

The Russians now will form a new line to the eastward of their present positions, and, according to indications, this line will begin somewhere near the junction of the Vistula and the San and extend south and east of Jaroslau. It will leave the San at that point and follow the line of the Wisznia River, running southeast and northwest towards the Dniester. It will then be in a position to attempt the defence of Lemberg and the two lines of railway leading from the Russian bases.

Despatches say that both Berlin and Vienna are celebrating the victory, and some military observers do not blame them, regarding the feat as one of the most striking of the entire war.

Another feature of the fighting on the eastern front is the new attack on Warsaw. Neither the Russian nor the British newspapers are able to say whether the renewed battering of the Russian lines between the Pilica and the Vistula is a serious effort to break through to the Polish capital, or a move timed to prevent the Russians from rushing reinforcements to their hard-pressed troops in Galicia. But whatever the motive, the assault has been violent and in force along a front of about 25 miles, the hardest pressure being brought to bear on the Russians along the Bzura and the Rawka Rivers.

ABANDONING POSITIONS

Italians Exerting Such Pressure on the Austrians That the Latter Are Forsaking Their Positions in the Val Fiemme

WARSHIPS ACTIVE

Special Cable to The Examiner:

ROME, June 4.—The Italian troops which entered the Trentino from its eastern border are exerting such pressure on the Austrians that the latter are abandoning all their positions in the Bal Fiemme, and the Italians are now near Predazzo, 27 miles northeast of Trent. Possession of this town would seriously threaten Bozzanno (Bozen) on the single railroad running south to Trent and serving as a source of supplies to all the Austrian garrisons in Southern Tyrol.

The Austrians practically destroyed the health resort San Martinno di Castrozza, to the south-west of the Cima di Vezzana, the dominating mountain peak which was captured several days ago by the Italians. In the resort were eight large hotels, six belonging to Germans or Austrians, and two to Italians.

While the artillery duels between the Italian guns on the right bank of the Isonzo and the Austrian batteries of Fort Tolmazio, just to the rear of Gradisca, continue, it is reported here that the Austrians have abandoned the town of Gardisca, which is the key to the entire frontier position. The Austrians have concentrated five army corps in this region to resist the Italians marching toward Trieste.

Big Battle At Hand.

Further to the south in Isonzo the Italian army attacking Monfalcone is in touch with the main Austrian army and a great battle in this district cannot long be delayed, according to military experts who know the country. Monfalcone, which is an important town on the railroad to Trieste, is also being bombarded from the sea by the Italians. The following official statement regarding these operations was issued here today:

"Our warships, which captured today, capture [illegible] hours after the bombardment of Monfalcone, which was carried out on May 31 by our destroyers, clouds of smoke and tongues of flame were still visible from Porto Buso.

"Two Italian torpedo boats entered the Gulf of Trieste yesterday morning and sank two merchant vessels, and damaged an auxiliary cruiser.

"No official confirmation has been given to reports that Trieste itself is being bombarded by the Italians from Grado, the town on the Gulf of Trieste taken last week by the Italians.

The Austrian official report says: "The Italians have prosecuted an unsuccessful bombardment of our fortifications at several points on the Tyrolian and Carinthian frontiers."

TO PRODUCE 1,000,000 LBS. EACH MONTH

OTTAWA, June 4.—A plant for the manufacture of large quantities of trinitrotoluol, one of the highest explosives known to modern science, has been erected in Canada and is now in operation. Its location is being kept a secret at present, but Gen. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, inspected the works yesterday and expressed himself as highly gratified with the progress which has been made. Work was started on the factory seven weeks ago, and it had not been expected to be ready for four months, but operations were rushed, with the result that the plant is now running. The new plant is turning out the immense quantity of 500,000 pounds of trinitrotoluol per month and constitutes a a record both as regards erection and production.

It is announced that Canada will shortly be in a position to turn out one million pounds of guncotton per month. She has for some time past been producing large quantities of cordite.

Mr. Wm. Collins Caned By The Farmers' Institute

Recognition of Veteran Secretary's Services at Annual Meeting—Most Enjoyable Afternoon Spent at Home of Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Smithson.

J. A. McGREGOR PRESIDENT

The 28th annual meeting of the West Peterborough Farmers' Institute was held on Thursday, on the spacious lawn at the residence of Mr. Joshua Smithson, Lot 15, Concession 12, Otonabee, immediately south of Zion. Over one hundred farmers and their wives were present, having assembled, in some instances, from communities as remote as Ennismore, Hiawatha and Norwood. Apart from the attendance, however, the event was a delightful affair, and in every sense an unqualified success. Mr. and Mrs. Smithson extended a hospitality warm and generous. Several interesting addresses and a presentation of a gold-headed cane to Mr. Wm. Collins provided features of particular interest, and as an appropriate conclusion an enjoyable social hour was spent, during which the ladies provided a most acceptable supper. In a word, an invitation to this and other recent annual meetings of the Institute may be well regarded as a privilege.

In a township of beautiful country homes, the Smithson estate is one of the fairest. Its fields gently undulate in conformity with the rolling nature of that section of Otonabee. On one hand, rich green acres extend to the edge of a splendid woods, on another, the fields reach out to neighbouring farms. Topping an easy incline are the house and barns, the former facing a fine lawn showing many indications of years of discerning care. Neatly trimmed hedges enclose an expanse of lawn. On either side of the walk are red cedars and spruce ornately clipped. And in every direction the eye rests upon a pleasing countryside. The Smithson home breathes that refinement which appreciates and encourages the gifts of nature in too many instances almost entirely overlooked.

Given such surroundings and a nicely tempered June day, with its birds and bloom, the Institute meeting was indeed specially favoured.

The regular business furnished a few surprises. Mr. C. E. Moore declined the presidency, after three years of service, and the honour was passed on to Mr. J. A. McGregor of the 4th Line of Smith. The officers elected were as follows:

President—J. A. McGregor.
1st Vice-Pres.—Clayton Hanbridge.
2nd Vice-Pres.—Clayton Telford.
Sec.-Treas.—Allan B. Mann.
Auditors—John Riddell and Joseph Barnard.

The Directorate was re-elected.

A Presentation.

On behalf of the Institute, Mr. J. H. Garbutt presented Mr. Wm. Collins with a handsome gold-headed cane in appreciation of his long and successful service as Secretary-Treasurer. "In the years to come," Mr. Garbutt said, "we trust that when you lean on this staff you will be reminded of your associations with the West Peterborough Farmers' Institute."

The incident caught Mr. Collins completely by surprise. "You have knocked me out, to use a slang expression," he replied. "I don't deserve the flattering remarks; I simply did what I considered to be my duty. I concluded that I was reaching an age when I could not go out for the night meetings and I thought it better to leave the work to younger men." The latter, Mr. Collins said, were doing the work well. He had always taken a deep interest in agriculture, and, with his father, had been among the first Institute members. This was the twenty-eighth meeting and, with the exception of the first year or two, he had been Secretary-Treasurer until his retirement. While he had made no money thereby, he would be well rewarded if he would not be forgotten by the Institute. It was a source of great gratification to him to meet his old friends, and he hoped that he would be spared for other meetings with them. Mr. Collins thanked the members for their expression of appreciation.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

He cried and howled; but I hadn't time to humour him, and I just wouldn't leave him alone at that place. From time to time I gave him a sip from the bottle and talked just as comfortin' as I could think up, but he was in a twist, and hard to get at.

"The four fellers who tried to take the pinto, the time Smith ran off, were in that gang," sez Flames to me.

"That's genuwine new, kid," sez I. "Did they recognise you?"

"I didn't give 'em a chance," sez the kid softy like. "I'd like to know why Smith was so 'fraid that time. He didn't get scared up much this time."

"When you learn to think as clear as ya can see," sez I, "you'll be worth the best boss on the place. Now practise thinkin'."

I had some thinkin' of mine own I wanted to do just then, 'cause, truth to tell, I was beginnin' to get interested in several things. Especially was I curious as to why Tom Smith had chose to act like a tenderfoot when he had once been tanned to the bone. He was all in a wit-storm as he rode with his wrists tied behind him; but he rode as light and safe as his hoss's ears, and I had sinkin' spells when I thought how bright I [illegible] primer stuff of fillin' a saddle.

Then again, he had picked a gun right out of the air and had shot his man through the arm, the fleshy part of the arm, and this was choicy shootin' provided his intent was simply to stop Panther without gettin' us into any trouble.

The way he had handled the boys afterward suited me exact, too; but this gain' up into the air on account of the amount of licker he had took showed up the flaw in him, for truth to tell he hadn't taken enough to wash the dust out of his neck so he could really enjoy a good drink.

I had heard about alcohol bein' rank poison to some, and I was playin' Tom Smith to be one of 'm, and that he had been willin' to act green so as to side-step the temptation of drinkin'. Red should have been hung up by the whiskers, that was the truth, but Red was the repententest feller ever I saw, so we didn't rawhide him a bit, and this made him feel nine times worse—as we dern well knew it would.

The thing that I wanted time to ponder over was the way Tom Smith had called Panther by the name of Emmons. It was plain enough that Panther wasn't much prejudiced in favour of the law. Tom Smith had once known him, therefore how much reason beside what drink did to him, did Tom Smith have for takin' on as chambermaid at that livery stable—[illegible] what I wanted to know. I had thought before that his neuralgie was a queer-actin' disease, and I never had believed that he had been in an out and out panic when he ran away from Flames that time; so it pleased me som to know I hadn't missed it none in estimatin' what the shape of his jaw and eyebrows stood for.

I saw Dan Cooper on hossback when we got near to his place, and so I gave Tom Smith another small swig, and had Flames rounce him off to the right so he wouldn't be noticed, and I went on to have a word with Dan.

CHAPTER XIV.
AFTER EFFECTS.

"What do ya think of 'em?" sez Dan, trippin' his head toward the bulls.

"Oh, they're a sight for sore eyes!" sez I. "I only wish they'd 'a' been about four times as many."

"The's a feller down south-east o' Fort Elliot whose got about twenty head purt nigh as good," sez Dan; "and you can pick up a lot of 'em up north-west of the Canadian. That's a bad sort of country just now and the's been a lot o' rustlin' up there. A feller by the name of Bradin has had bad luck with his cows; but he's long on bulls and he'd like to cash in a few. If you go into that country you want to know who you get friendly with 'couse it's sure enough no-man's land north o' there, and you're likely to meet worse of 'em. Bradin is all right, though. That's why he's had bad luck."

"Who's Panther Emmons, Dan?" sez I.

"I don't know who he is; but I do know 'at he needs killin'," sez Dan. "I've tried to keep on good terms with everybody, 'cause I'm away so much; but I had a run-in with him a few years back, and I reckon he'll get me some night. He's from up Kansas way and they say he's done a little bit of everything except honest work. They say he used to belong to Welchy's gang, but that Sterns ran him out."

"Who were the Sternas?" sez I.

"There were five brothers of 'em," sez Dan, "and all their names began with 'B,' Bill, Buck, Bud and Banty. Some say there were a regular swarm of bees; but I reckon they were more like a flock of buzzards — though I want you to understand I don't know anything about 'em, nor haven't a thing personal again' 'em."

"I haven't any friends among 'em, Dan," sez I with a grin, "so you don't need to worry. Which one of 'em has a scar under his eye?"

"That was Bill, so they say," sez Dan, who would just as soon changed the subject I could easy see.

"Which eye?" sez I.

"I don't know, but I think it was the left."

"Where does Welchy operate mostly?" sez I.

"Oh, he got run out by a kid who afterward called himself the Panhandle Kid and kept things stirred up for about a year. Then he shot Buck Stern and that was the last heard of him. I reckon one of the Sterns got the drop on him later. They say that Banty the least and the youngest of 'em, is also the worst; but I haven't heard much of 'em lately. What makes you so keen about this sort, all of a sudden?"

"Well" sez I. "I've allus heard about what a hard crowd Texans were, and now that I've drifted in among 'em, I wanted to find out what I could about my neighbours."

"I own up," sez Dan, "that the south part of the state harbours a purty sorry lot; but you'll find the Panhandle settler the best kind the' is. All our tough ones drift in, the same as you did. We're not much organized yet and the blame scalawags ofthe from all over, and no matter how fast they get killed off, there's allus more a-comin'. When they kill each other we're all fairly content with everything except the rustlers. If you do; but when they kill a rustler straight out, we get 'em by the few of 'em we can — but we get 'em."

"One of my boys had to shoot Panther Emmons through the arm this mornin' up at Big Jeff's," sez I offhand, "and that sort o' whetted my curiosity. Now, I'll have to jog on to see 'at the calves get home all right."

When I caught up with Flames, I heard Tom Smith doin' his best to get his freedom and I rode just within hearin' a way. First Smith would beg, then offer a bribe, and then try to scare the kid at what he would do to him after he did get loose if he didn't let him loose right now; but Flames was all pouched out with importance, and nothin' could touch him.

I chuckled over the way I had pumped Dan, then thrown my bit of news at him, and rode off before he'd had time to get the details; but I didn't chuckle long; because I feared we had been sowin' trouble, and that's a crop that neither drought nor blizzard is apt to kill.

We shut Crusader into his stable and turned the bulls into his pasture. Jim didn't like this, but we were shorthanded and I wanted the newcomers to be put into the herd durin' daylight. The little band of bulls which had cut back on us when we took the rest to Dodge, had turned outlaw and the new ones were just as likely to throw in with them as anything else until they were set to the range a little.

I took Tom Smith into my shack and I gentled him all that night; but he just couldn't get back to his feet. About three in the mornin' the ebb came and he settled right down on top of himself, got mournful as the wind sobbin' through a hole in your hat, and it was wearin' on us both. He'd squint up his eyes as though he'd been lookin at a ghastly sight, and then he'd fill his lungs, brace himself with a shudder, and moan. I tried to get him to talkin', but he'd just shake his head and look away. He drank a whole pot o' coffee durin' the night and as soon as Monody was stirrin' I hurrahed him into makin' me some Mexican drip-coffee stout enough to start the hair on a green hide. "Here, Tom Smith," sez I, as hearty as though we had just been havin' picnic times together, "here's what Isaac calls the nectar of the gods, and what Shorty sez is the barefootedest coffee in the world. The's a brand new day buildin' up outside, and if you get this into your skin before it cools off, I'm willin' to bet a white cookie it will tune you up to receive it proper."

PEOPLE OFTEN SAY

"How Are We To Know When The Kidneys Are Out Of Order?"

EASIEST THING IN THE WORLD!

The location of the kidneys, close to the small of the back, renders the detection of kidney trouble a simple matter. The note of warning comes from the back. The kidneys become overtaxed and fail to do their work at nature's call.

Backache is the signal sent out by the kidneys the minute they become overtaxed. Those who heed the warning when it first comes, usually have but little trouble.

The danger lies in delay. Doan's Kidney Pills stimulate the action of the kidneys, and enable them to perform their duty perfectly.

Mrs. Greig Murphy, Lower Ship Harbor East, N.S., writes: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills in my family with great success, and don't think there is a better pill for the kidneys. I was very miserable with my back, and could hardly get about. I got a box, and tried them, and found that they were really good, so I took in all about six boxes, and soon found my back cured, and my kidneys as well as ever."

Doan's Kidney Pills are 50c per box, 3 boxes for $1.25; for sale at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

As left handedness is an inherited characteristic, apparently behaving as Mendellian recessive, it is interesting to note the belief of some investigators that it is one of the stigmata of degeneracy, says the Journal of Heredity. Bardenheuer is quoted in German publications as saying:

"That a few great men, such as Leonardo da Vinci, were left handed does not neutralize the prevalent belief in all ages that left handedness implies a substandard subject. The percentage of left handed recruits is but 4.5; of school children somewhat higher. These figures are very deceptive, however, for of the left handed children who become right handed the percentage is some 20. This, added to the persistently left handed, raises the original percentage of left handed considerably."

After pointing out that the gibbon and orang outang are as a rule right handed and the gorilla and chimpanzee left handed the speaker decided there was no evidence at all that a left handed person was mentally or physically inferior.

CHAPTER XV.

The New Plot.

The morning brought John Dorr, Ruth Gillon and Thomas Kane together to discuss the problems before them. The papers so necessary for the consummation of the deal that Everett had proposed were again lost. Where they were gone, whether they had indeed fallen into Wilkerson's hands, none could tell. But more immediate yet was the need of extricating John. Two plain clothes men already sat near by, ready to take him to prison on a charge of killing Henry Pell.

"It's really only a formality," said the manager of the hotel. "The man was a robber and Mr. Dorr tried to capture him, as he had every right to do, and the man was killed."

This failed to comfort Ruth. To her mind the presence of the burly officers, the fact that John Dorr was under arrest in a strange city, made her feel that her burdens were too great to bear. She sat holding the old cook's hand till Everett should come. He had already telephoned, and she tried to be brave till he should come.

Everett arrived, and the moment she saw him she heaved a sigh of relief. His manner, as usual, was genuinely cordial to John that even Tom Kane softened his grim visage a little.

"I'm under arrest," John told him. "The officers were good enough to let me stay here till you came. Now I must be off. Let me introduce you all around."

This done, John Dorr went on, "They can tell you all about things, and when you've learned the worst come down and get me out, if you can."

Everett agreed, and Dorr took and with a smile said goodby to his companions. As he left the hotel with an officer on either side of him Ruth broke down and cried. Tom Kane comforted her as best he could till Everett suggested that they had best go to some more private place and discuss matters.

In Ruth's room she and the cook explained affairs briefly. Everett followed their narrative carefully up to the incidents of the night before. When Ruth had finished and the cook was silent Everett thought a moment, then he laughed.

"I don't mean to make fun of all this," he apologized, "but I've known John Dorr for years and this is precisely the kind of trouble he revels in."

"But he's in jail!" Ruth protested tearfully.

"True enough," was the reply. "That is the first thing I must do, get him out. I'll be off now and see the district attorney and bail him out."

"Please hurry!" Ruth pleaded.

"Don't worry," was the cheerful response. A moment later he was gone, promising to bring John back with him.

"What do you think of Mr. Everett?" Ruth demanded of Tom Kane.

The old man lit his pipe and scrutinized the ceiling. "Well," he said judicially, "considering the looks of them on Wilkerson's side and them on Johnny Dorr's I should think that this Everett was on the right side."

With this judgment she had to be content. But she insisted that he tell her all about the conditions at the "Master Key" mine. "I know you have not told me all the truth," she said.

"Well," he answered her, "there's not much to tell the way you and I know in another. The mine's practically shut down. You know that you went away, then John and then Wilkerson. Pretty much all was left was me and Bill Tubbs. Bill, he kind of represented Wilkerson, and I stuck up for John. The result was that things went to the bad, and the boys they come to me and want to know how long they've got to lay off.

"I suppose ye mind how they before a pay day.' I says to 'em. 'So far as I know nobody has laid you off.'

"They agreed with me, but said they couldn't feed their folks without money, and if they got no money for it why work?'

"They haven't been paid, then?"

"No. And Wilkerson cut off all credit at the store. I guess I got in bad with Tubbs when I divided up a lot of flour and spuds that was in the cook shanty among the worst off ones. There was about only talk that figure I could ring of cattle the boys' minds they treated Bill pretty roughly. So I just told myself that I would come to San Francisco and explain things—how Wilkerson deserted the camp and the mine was closed down and your people were starving."

"Oh!" moaned Ruth, aghast at the blunt story. "And I seem to have been unfortunate all around, but I know that John will fix things."

Tom Kane fixed his honest old eyes on the girl and shook his head. "I don't want to discourage you, Ruthie," he said quietly, "but until that man Wilkerson is out of the mine for good you can't do more than patch matters up temporarily."

Meanwhile Wilkerson and Jean Darnell were anxiously awaiting news from Henry Pell. It was getting along in the forenoon, and the woman insisted that if he had succeeded in getting the papers he should have been on the ground long before. Her companion was worried, but told the delay to Pell's babies and the necessity possibly of avoiding the police.

But when Drake arrived with the morning papers and said nothing articulate and only pointed to the headlines on the first page both Wilkerson and Mrs. Darnell knew that something had happened again to spoil their plans. It was Wilkerson who snatched up the paper and read the news:

HOTEL THIEF HURLED TO DEATH.

Guests of the Manx Hotel Have Fierce Struggle With Hotel Robber.

Shortly before midnight last night Miss Ruth Gillon, a guest at the Hotel Manx, entered her room to find a masked man rifling her desk. Her cry for help frightened the thief, and he made for the fire escape, followed by Mr. John Dorr, another guest, who heard Miss Gillon's call. Mr. Dorr pursued the man to the roof, and in the ensuing struggle the desperado was either flung or fell to the street below. He was instantly killed.

Shortly afterward the body was identified by the police as that of Samuel Price, alias Henry Pell, an ex-convict and drug fiend.

Wilkerson read no further. He turned his ghastly face on Mrs. Darnell and said dumbly, "He's dead!"

"Well, he won't tell any tales," was the cold response. "The question is, did he get the papers?"

To this question there was no satisfactory answer until Wilkerson read down further and learned that nothing of value had been found on Pell's body.

"So he didn't get the deeds, and Ruth still has them," Mrs. Darnell said bitterly. "That is the way all your plans succeed."

Wilkerson flushed. "There is one comfort," he said in an ugly tone. "Dorr is to be held for killing him."

"For how long?" sneered Jean. "Until his friends get him out. And mean while you do nothing!"

She continued in this strain for some time. Drake and Wilkerson moodily listening. They knew that if she once threw the affair up they would be helpless and all their time and work and money would have gone for naught. Wilkerson was thinking quickly. Suddenly he interrupted Jean to ask for pen and ink. She got them, and he sat down at the table to write. Drake and Mrs. Darnell kept up a desultory conversation until he had finished.

There was a queer look in Jean's eyes as she took the sheet he handed her and glanced at the writing. "I see you still can do it," she murmured.

"Read it!" he growled.

Mrs. Darnell read it through silently and then aloud:

Dear Ruth—I hate to ask you to come down and see me in the jail, but I have something very important to tell you. Bring the papers too. JOHN DORR.

"Are you sure he is in jail?" demanded the woman when she had finished. "And what is the idea of getting the papers into his hands?"

"He'll just turn them over to Everett," muttered Drake.

Wilkerson smiled slyly. "The idea is that Drake here will disguise himself as a chauffeur, take this note to the hotel, see that it reaches Ruth and then drive her supposedly to the jail. But really to where I'll shoot him."

They discussed the plan and at last agreed that it was feasible. Drake himself saw nothing dangerous in it so long as Wilkerson was to meet him and take Ruth off his hands. He promptly proceeded to dress himself as a chauffeur and went whistling away to a garage after receiving explicit instructions as to what streets he was to take and where he was to meet Wilkerson.

It was an hour later that Drake drove his rented car up before the hotel and delivered his note. It found Ruth still deep in conversation with Tom Kane and yet anxious for the return to Dorr and Everett. On the presentation of the note Ruth Wilkerson had forged she instantly took alarm.

"John must be in trouble and Mr. Everett can't get him out," she said. "He's written for me to come down to the jail and see him and bring the papers."

"Please hurry!" Ruth pleaded.

"Humph!" said Kane. "Most peculiar funny to me."

Ruth nodded, looking at the note. Then she said, more cheerfully: "I'll dress anyway. Maybe he needs me. Now, you old dear, leave me awhile."

Kane departed, and Ruth quickly changed into street dress. While she was doing this the lobby returned to say that a machine was waiting for both.

"The one that brought the note," he said. "The same he was told to wait."

"Oh!" she exclaimed. "Will you go to the jail first?"

When the boy had gone she called Tom Kane on the telephone and told him that she was going. "John sent a car [illegible]"

"All right," came back the answer. "I'll just travel along. Maybe I might help John myself."

So it was agreed, and they met in the lobby, where Ruth showed the note to the clerk in her impulsive way. Something in that official's expression made the old cook unobtrusively take out his revolver and see that it was in good condition. He followed Ruth to the street and into the waiting machine.

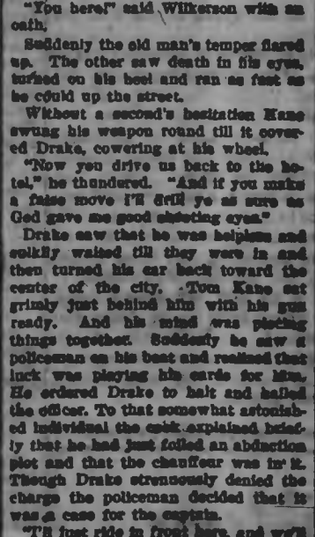
This move disconcerted Drake. He had not intended to have two passengers, but he saw no help for it and merely nodded when Ruth ordered him to take her to the city prison. He started his engine and they sped off up the hill.

They rode for some time and as neither of them was acquainted with the city it did not occur to them that they were being rapidly conveyed into a part of town only partly built up and now veiled in dense clouds of swirling fog.

"It's a long way," Ruth remarked several times, but Kane merely grunted. He was busily pondering over some method of extricating John Dorr.

Suddenly the car swerved around a corner, dived down a steep hill and came to a stop before a big gray building—the boarded up residence of an absentee. Reaching back, Drake opened the door, and Ruth sprang out. A figure darted across the sidewalk, and she felt herself clutched by the arm.

She looked into the gleaming, cruel eyes of Wilkerson.



"I don't want to discourage you, Ruthie."

"I've got you now!" he said triumphantly.

"Oh!" moaned Ruth, shrinking back in terror.

"Yes, indeed," Wilkerson taunted her.

But at that moment he heard another voice, stern, commanding and familiar. He looked around into the muzzle of Tom Kane's revolver.

For the moment they faced each other, while Ruth shrank back still farther. The old man's eyes gleamed, and his trigger finger seemed to rest on the trigger with a precise and delicate touch.

"You here!" said Wilkerson with an oath.

Suddenly the old man's temper flared up. The other saw death in his eyes, turned on his heel and ran as fast as he could up the street.

Without a second's hesitation Kane swung his weapon round till it covered Drake, cowering at his wheel.

"Now you drive us back to the hotel," he thundered. "And if you make a false move I'll drill ye as sure as God gave me good shooting eyes."

Drake saw that he was helpless and sullenly waited till they were in and then turned his car back toward the center of the city. Tom Kane sat grimly just behind him with his gun ready. And his mind was piecing things together. Suddenly he saw a policeman on his beat and realized that luck was playing his cards for him. He ordered Drake to halt and hailed the officer. To that somewhat astonished individual the cook explained briefly that he had just foiled an abduction plot and that the chauffeur was in it. Though Drake strenuously denied the charge the policeman decided that it was a case for the captain.

"I'll just ride in front here, and we'll go to headquarters," he remarked. "You can put up that gun, old fellow, for I'll see that young fellow doesn't cut up any monkey shines."

In the meantime Everett had successfully managed Dorr's business, and he had been released on nominal bail for a hearing. "And I guess you won't find us very anxious to make it hard for you," said the prosecuting attorney.

Free again, John insisted on taking the quickest route back to the hotel. Everett, sympathetic in this, agreed, and in a few minutes they were at the hotel inquiring for Ruth.

"Why, she left only a little while ago to see you in the prison," said the clerk. "She had a note from you."

"I wrote no note," said John.

"Here it is," was the response. "She left it on the desk in her hurry."

Eagerly John snatched the sheet of paper, but the instant his eyes lit on it he turned a furious face to Everett.

"It's a forgery, a trick," he said. "I never wrote it!"

HAD INDIGESTION FOR OVER 10 YEARS.

ALMOST DESPAIRED OF EVER GETTING WELL.

Indigestion is one of the worst forms of stomach trouble. The stomach becomes upset and you have a raw, debilitating feeling in it. After a meal you feel that you must get rid of that nasty, bilious, bursing sensation. It is not necessary for you to be troubled with indigestion if you will only try that old and well-known remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, which is a combination of nature's best known roots, herbs and barks for the cure of all stomach and blood troubles.

Mrs. Mary MacKay, Hunter's Mountain, N.S., writes: "I was troubled with indigestion for more than ten years. I tried several doctors' medicines claiming the power to cure, but all without success. Having heard of the many cures effected by Burdock Blood Bitters, I decided to give it a trial. After taking two bottles I was completely cured. My appetite which was very poor is now good, and I can eat most everything without any disagreeable feelings.

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

NEW V.C. KILLED

Private Barber Paid Fine Tribute to Canadian Officers and Men

Sorrow is mingled with pride in the picturesque little cottage outside the old-world Hertfordshire town of Tring, where live the parents of Private Edward Barber, V.C., one of the two heroic Grenadiers to win glory at Neuve Chapelle by capturing, single-handed, in the words of the "Gazette," a "very great number" of Germans, for their gallant son was killed shortly after the glorious feat for which he was honored by the King.

The last letter Mrs. Barber received from her son was undated, nor was there any indication of what part of the long battle line he was at.

"I am staying here to give instruction to the Canadian troops," he wrote, "and my regiment has gone away to another position. I should very much like to remain with the Canadians. They are very nice fellows indeed, and the officers are proper gentlemen."

Mr. and Mrs. Barber have good reason to be proud of their family's record, for three other of their sons have given their services to King and country.

The official account of Private Barber's exploit at Neuve Chapelle, which won for him the Victoria Cross, read: "For most conspicuous bravery at Neuve Chapelle. He ran speedily in front of the grenade company to which he belonged and threw bombs on the enemy with such effect that a very great number of them at once surrendered. When the grenade party reached Private Barber they found him quite alone and unsupported with the enemy surrendering all about him."

I HAVE two cows which have been coughing for over a month, and I have reason to suspect tuberculosis. Does the government give any assistance in subjecting cattle to the tuberculin test?—J. B. K., Peterboro Co., Ont.

The following regulations are from "The Animal Contagious Diseases Act," and answer fully the query of our subscriber:

"The Department does not test any cattle for tuberculosis, except those imported and exported for breeding purposes, and such herds as are placed entirely under the control and supervision of its officers.

"If any owner of cattle desires to have his animals tested, and will send in to the Department the number of doses required, and the name of any reputable qualified veterinary surgeon whom he wishes to employ to do the work, the latter will be furnished with sufficient tuberculin, on condition that he reports to the Department the result of the test on charts which are supplied for that purpose.

"The Department does not order the slaughter of tuberculous animals, and consequently no compensation is or can be paid.

"It must be distinctly understood that the remuneration of the veterinarian making the test is to be paid by the owner of the animals and not by the department.

"Attention is specially directed to the fact that cattle reacting under any circumstances are permanently earmarked by one of the regular officers of the Department, and may then be dealt with as the owner sees fit, subject to the approval of the local health authorities, except that their exportation will not be permitted."

The Certified Statement of One Has Proven the Efficiency of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills

Mr. Colin M. Kiel, Craighurst, Simcoe county, Ontario, writes: "My mother and I have both used Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills with great satisfaction. EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

STYLISH BELTED COSTUME.

By Anabel Worthington.

This girlish gown may be made with the Empire effect or the low waist line, according as the belt is raised or lowered.

The design is exceedingly simple, the pattern consisting of only six pieces, front, back, sleeve, collar, cuff and belt. The fewer the pieces naturally the easier to make. Straps at under-arm hold the belt in position. The belt may be made of the material, or of satin or leather, as preferred. It is a matter of choice whether the sleeve be long or short, the long sleeve being shaped gracefully at the wrist and the short sleeve finished with a turn-back cuff. The collar is a neat square one.

This design is suitable for misses and small women and is very adaptable on account of the opportunity for placing the belt wherever it will be the most becoming. Any one of a number of materials might be used. For instance, serge in the midnight blue tone, with black satin collar and cuffs, or shepherd check with military braiding in black linen with cotton braiding would be very smart, or plain ratine or gabardine. In inexpensive wash material this stylish little dress could be copied for a dollar or a dollar and a half, certainly not a prohibitive figure for any one. For 18 year size you would require 5½ yards of material 36 inches wide. The pattern, No. 7,172, can be obtained in four sizes, from 14 to 20 years. Price, 10 cents.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

GERMS OF MENINGITIS ARE EASILY SPREAD

Chiefly Harbored in Mouth or Nose of Those Affected—A Sneeze Can Carry the Bacteria

Special interest is being taken in Cerebro-Spinal Meningitis because of the number of cases which have occurred amongst the Canadian troops. It is quite right, says a bulletin issued by the Department of Public Health of Nova Scotia, that attention should be given to this disease and to the methods which may prevent its spread.

There are several bacteria which may cause cerebo-spinal meningitis but the one most commonly responsible for the disease is called the meningococcus. This is usually to be found in the throat and nose of those who are suffering from the disease during the first ten or twelve days of the illness, but, as a general rule, it is not to be found after the fourteenth day. Occasionally, however, it persists for much longer periods, and while it is present anyone who comes into fairly close contact with the patient may become infected. Moreover, whilst those so exposed may not themselves develop the disease they may harbor meningococci in their mouths and noses for indefinite periods, and may convey the disease to others with whom they come in contact. Such people are "carriers" of the infection, and studies made in connection with some epidemics prove that a large percentage of those who have been brought into contact with meningitis cases become carriers.

It is thought by some authorities that the carrier is the main factor in the convection of this disease from [illegible] of the most important points in its control is to eliminate the carrier. This might involve the examination of everyone in the community in order to determine who is and who is not a carrier. But much may be done to prevent the creation of new carriers by careful isolation of all patients suffering from the disease, by thorough disinfection of the discharges from their mouth, nose and bowels, and by destruction or disinfection of any article which may become soiled with any such discharge. It is in these discharges that the infectious organisms is given off by patient or by carrier.

Those who are known to be carriers should pay scrupulous attention to the hygiene of the mouth and nostrils, to the disinfection of their handkerchiefs, dishes, table cutlery, etc., and to covering the mouth and nose when coughing or sneezing. All expectorated matters and other discharges should be disinfected.

Those brought into contact with the patients should be careful to cleanse the hands carefully after rendering any service at the bedside, and especially before eating. These should make frequent use of antiseptic throat and nasal spray, or should gargle the throat and douche the nostrils with a suitable antiseptic solution.

The first essential to success in treatment is an early diagnosis, so there should be no delay in providing the patient with medical care. In the cure of the disease, our main reliance is in the early and repeated use of antimeningococcic serum.

In order that they may readily identify the enemy, photographs of the German and Austrian soldiery are displayed in the camps of the British Indian troops.

WHAT DYSPEPTICS SHOULD EAT

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE.

"Indigestion and practically all forms of stomach trouble are, nine times out of ten, due to acidity; therefore stomach sufferers should, whenever possible, avoid eating food that is acid in its nature, or which by chemical action in the stomach develops acidity. Unfortunately, such a rule eliminates most foods which are pleasant to the taste as well as those which are rich in blood, flesh and nerve building properties. This is the reason why dyspeptics and stomach sufferers are usually so thin, emaciated and lacking in that vital energy which can only come from a well fed body. For the benefit of those sufferers who have been obliged to exclude from their diet all starchy, sweet or fatty food, and are trying to keep up a miserable existence on gluten products, I would suggest that you should try a meal of any food or foods which you may like, in moderate amount, taking immediately afterwards a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia in a little hot or cold water. This will neutralize any acid which may be present, or which may be formed, and instead of the usual feeling of uneasiness and fullness, you will find that your food agrees with you perfectly. Bisurated magnesia is doubtless the best food corrective and antacid known. It has no direct action on the stomach; but by neutralizing the acidity of the food contents, and thus removing the source of of the acid irritation which inflames the delicate stomach lining, it does more than could possibly be done by any drug or medicine. As a physician, I believe in the use of medicine whenever necessary, but I must admit that I cannot see the sense of dosing an inflamed and irritated stomach with drugs instead of getting rid of the acid—the cause of all the trouble. Get a little bisurated magnesia from your druggist, eat what you want at your next meal, take some of the bisurated magnesia as directed above, and see if I'm not right."

FACE PADS FOR GAS BOMBS

War Office Issued Circular Telling How to Make Protecting Masks

The War Office issued the following communication:

As a protection against the asphyxiating gases being used as a weapon of warfare by the Germans, supplies of one or both of the following types of respirator are required by the troops at the front. Either can be made easily in any household.

First, a face piece (to cover mouth and nostrils) formed of an oblong pad of bleached absorbent cotton wool about 5½ inches by 5 inches by ¾ inches, covered with three layers of bleached cotton gauze, and fitted with a band, to fit round the head and keep the pad in position, consisting of a piece of ½-inch cotton elastic 16 inches long attached to the narrow end of the face pad so as to form a loop with the pad.

Second, a piece of double stockinette, 9½ inches long, 3½ inches wide in the centre, gradually diminishing in width to 2½ inches at each end, with a piece of thick plaited worsted about 5 inches long attached at each end, so as to form a loop to pass over the ear.

These respirators should be sent in packages of not less than one hundred to "Chief Ordnance Officer, Royal Army Clothing Department, Pimlico."

The Supply of Officers

In all the armies in the field, the question of how to maintain the supply of officers is, says the Glasgow News, of the greatest importance. The French headquarters staff claim to be able to solve the problem, however; as their army is thoroughly democratic, they can readily promote men from the ranks. Herein they claim to have a great advantage over Germany, and the claim is sound. For their part, the Germans have been assuring themselves that Great Britain could not possibly put a million of men in the field, because the necessary officers could not be obtained or maintained. This is one more of their miscalculations, no doubt, but we have still to recognize that it is for us a difficult problem.

Mr. Wm. Collins Cared By, etc.

lins mentioned the fact that the Department of Agriculture had found it necessary to reduce its assistance. He thought it a great mistake to cut down the small grants in view of the acknowledged importance of agriculture in the supplying of foodstuffs.

Mr. Ed. Elliott said that the Government, by its tax of one mill on the Province would have sufficient money to continue its aid to the Institutes.

Mr. C. E. Moore regretted that the meetings at Stewart's Hall, Otonabee, the 4th line of Smith, and Buckhorn had been eliminated. He suggested that efforts be made to secure speakers for these places this year.

The probability of having only local speakers for this year was also referred to. On motion of Mr. Collins, seconded by Mr. J. H. Garbutt, the several points were referred to the directors to be discussed and reported to the Department.

Mr. Colquette of Farm and Dairy gave an interesting talk on farm credits, and little Mildred Archer recited "Faith and Good Works."

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P.

Mr. Burnham, in a meaty address, placed several important considerations before the agriculturists. Since August, 1914, for the first time in the history of Canada, we are no longer colonials, but actual members of the British Empire. Canadians, Australians, and South Africans are on an equal footing in the Empire with our brothers in the British Isles. A rapid succession of great events had eclipsed this fact which would otherwise have received greater attention. After a conference of representatives of the Dominions and Britain, the British Naturalisation Act was passed, by which Canadians stand on a precisely equal footing with the people [illegible] country.

Mr. Burnham remarked that Canadians had obtained only what they deserved when they were made equal citizens in the Empire. He referred in eloquent terms to the assistance rendered by the Canadians in the Flanders battle line, and quickly turned to home events. Our soldiers must feel that the deeds they are doing are worthy of the people here at home. Mr. Burnham said there had been recent indications which were not all gratifying. The Premier of the Dominion had to read two members out of party for stealing What happened in Manitoba recently was appalling. Such conduct he said must be repudiated. Men sold bad horses, bad boots, bad provisions for the soldiers, bad everything, so long as they made money. What did they care for the lives of the soldiers? And by countenancing such acts things would be worse than they have been. Hence it might be that the very best people could ruin the country. Such things must be put down with an iron hand, otherwise we will drift owing to bad habits, and the country will go to rack and ruin. And it will be our own fault. Mr. Burnham reminded his audience that no part of the population furnished better men than the farmers, and they had a great duty to demand that no man can ask their confidence who is not honest.

The Anchor Province.

Mr. Burnham advocated Ontario first After twenty or thirty years of cultivation in Western Canada, and after Ontario property had been mortgaged to the extent of $500,000,000, the Government had to loan the West $13,000,000 for seed grain, and, he added, we had no right to do it. The West had said that without the money they could not go on. Ontario is the anchor province of this country. Don't be carried away by the Western boom, he cautioned. Many men out there are immensely wealthy, and they never earned it. In urging more attention to home interests he said that the day of intensive farming was close at hand, and it would make a vast difference.

Mr. S. C. McCrea.

Mr. S. C. McCrea, district representative at Norwood, spoke on under drainage. He said there was an opportunity to secure a ditching machine if sufficient farmers in Ontario were interested.

G. A. Gillespie, M.P.P.

Mr. Gillespie arrived from a cheese inspecting trip just as his name was mentioned. "It takes a lot of money to buy your cheese," he said, "and we've never had a finer lot of cheese leave this country than that I have just inspected. The price seems high, but the cheese is worth it. It is at a point more nearly equal the value of cheese as a food. I hope it will remain there all summer, as it should. If so, it would mean a good year for the farmers The whole country has never realized until right now, the need of farmers. Mr. Gillespie spoke of the place the farmer occupies in keeping up the cities. He had always spoken of the necessity of citizens co-operating with the farmers, and believed it was as beneficial to the city to help the farmers as to bonus an industry. At the present time the wealth from the land will materially assist the stability of home manufactories.

Mr. Ed. M. Elliott.

Mr. Elliott, County Clerk, mentioned Mr. Smithson's care of his home as a model to others to do likewise. The Institute was indebted to him for his hospitality.

Mr. W. A. Anderson.

Mr. Anderson, Reeve of Otonabee, urged the farmers to keep only the best milk-producing cows. The present price of cheese should bring a return of the heavier makes recorded a few years ago.

Ex-Warden Scott.

Mr. R. N. Scott extended an invitation to the Institute to hold the next annual meeting at his home, in Smith. His offer was gratefully accepted.

A vote of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Smithson was passed, on motion of Mr. Elliott, seconded by Mr. Riddell.

Mr. Smithson replied briefly, saying that his home was always open, and he hoped to see another meeting at his residence.

The Supper.

The supper was immense. A long table was fairly burdened with home made bread, biscuits, pies, cakes, salads, etc., etc. Among those noticed present were Mr. Burnham, Mr. Dawson Kennedy, Mr. G. A. Gillespie, Mr. J. H. Garbutt, and and Mrs. Harry Garbutt, R. N. Scott, William Collins, John Riddell, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Elliott and Miss Elliott, John Flood, John Telford, Mr. and Mrs. Clayton Telford, Allan B. Mann, C. E. Moore, J. K. Moore, Thos. Thompson, of Rice Lake, T. H. Graham, Mr. McCrea and Mr. McDowell of Norwood, W. A. Anderson and many others.

The financial statement presented by Mr. Mann showed a balance of $41.34, with total receipts of $108.74.

The French Are Fighting On To Lens

Austrians Trying To Dislodge The Italians

THE FRENCH ADVANCE ON LENS IS BEING STEADILY PUSHED FORWARD

Whole Villages Are Being Reduced to Ruins by the Crash of Big Shells as the Attacks Continue---Defence After Defence in the Labyrinth Falling Into the Hands of the French--Battle of the Sugar Mill Increases in Violence

POSITIONS AND PRISONERS ARE TAKEN

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, June 4.—(French official.)—Whole villages in the region north of Arras are being reduced to ruins in the crash of big shells accompanying the fierce fighting that marks the French advance upon [illegible] with the exception of a few stone buildings, behind which the Germans are resisting the French attacks. The battling east of the Souchez sugar mill is increasing in fury. The war office announced this afternoon that the French in this region have captured German fortified positions, taking a number of prisoners.

Further progress is being made by the French in the "Labyrinth" region southeast of Neuville. One after another of the "Labyrinth" defences are falling before the French attack.

Along the road from Bethune to Arras and eastward the battle of heavy artillery continues .

STEAMER TORPEDOED

LONDON, Eng., June 4.—The Swedish steamer Lapland has been torpedoed, according to the admiralty despatches to-day.

OTTAWA,, June 4.—The Canadian casualties in Langemarck and Festubert fights so far total 7327 ,with 1119 killed in action, 4683 wounded, and 1523 missing or prisoners of war, and there is no abatement whatever of the numbers still being received by the casualty bureau. The bulk of the recent casualties seem to be from the fighting of May 24 and thereafter. In the most recent fighting the battalions which have suffered the most heavily are those of the men of the second and third brigades. Apparently the first brigade, consisting of Ontario troops, has not figured in this fight to any extent.

PETROGRAD, June 4.—The official announcement made to-day that three Austrian regiments were slaughtered and four thousand prisoners taken in a fierce battle 50 miles north west of Przemysl, partly offsets the admission from the war office that the Galician fortress surrendered to the enemy early yesterday. The war office also reported that hundreds of Germans were asphyxiated by their own gas bombs on the Bzura front in Poland. "A sudden change of the wind swept the poisonous gases back upon the enemy's trenches, forcing them to evacuate them," said the official statement. "Our fire decimated the retreating Germans on a wide front. The war office bulletin to-day declared that the evacuation of Przemysl must not be construed as a severe reverse to the Russians.

ROME, June 4.—By artillery and infantry attacks, the Austrians are making a determined effort to dislodge the Italians from Monte Croco Pass. The fighting here and around the Monte Nero ridge is of the most violent character, but General Cadorna reported to-day that all Austrian attacks have been repulsed.

CONVICTION QUASHED

TORONTO, June 4.—The conviction of Emil Nerlich on a charge of having conspired to commit an indictable offence in connection with the attempt of a German lieutenant, Arthur Zirzow, to leave Toronto, was quashed to-day by a majority judgment of the first divisional court. It is likely however that the Crown will proceed again against Nerlich on another charge of treason.

ANOTHER VICTIM

LONDON, June 4.—Six deaths resulted from the recent Zeppelin attack on London, it became known to-day, when an inquest was held over the body of Mrs. Eleanor Wills, aged 75. She died from shock.

NO ITALIAN OPERA FOR GERMANS

RIGHTS OF THE U. S. MUST BE RECOGNIZED

That is the Key-note of the Memorandum That President Wilson Will Send to Germany in Reply to the Lusitania Note

SITUATION VERY GRAVE

Special to The Examiner:

WASHINGTON, D.C., June 4. — The intense gravity of the present international situation, so far as it concerns the United States, was emphasised when the Cabinet met to-day.

Confronted with the final approval of the rejoinder to Germany, which is to go forward probably within the next few hours, President Wilson summoned to his aid Robert Lansing, Counsellor of the State Department. This was the first time that the Counsellor, admittedly one of the great international law experts in the United States, has been present, at a Cabinet meeting, which his Chief, Secretary Bryan, also attended.

The Cabinet will sweep aside as irrevelent the Lusitania contentions including the affidavits alleging that the liner was armed and carried explosives which were otherwise described in her manifests.

While it was generally expected that the complete note will set forth that all other points raised by Germany must be disregarded until the United States is assured that rights guaranteed to this country under international law, are recognised.

No Word From Two Brothers

Nephews of Mr. J. L. Wood of Peterborough Not Heard From Since Langemarck

No word has been received from either Pte. H. L. Shearman, of F. Co., 15th Battalion, 48th Highlanders, or his brother, Pte. F. J. Shearman, of the 2nd Battalion, since Langemarck. The two boys who went from Toronto are nephews of Mr. J. L. Wood, of Peterborough. Pte. H. L. Shearman lived in Peterborough for several years. Cables and letters have been unavailing, and Mrs. Shearman would be grateful to any Canadians receiving letters from their men at the front, if they would ask these to make public any word they may receive. She suggests that those writing to the front might ask their friends to try to locate either of these missing sons if any are in touch with their regiments.

BANK CLEARINGS

The bank clearings for the week ending June 3rd totalled $334,048, a decrease over the previous week of $17,208. The corresponding week last month the clearings were $366,838.

The clearings for the month of May totalled $1,567,367, a decrease over last month of $127,894.

HOW SOLDIERS ON FIRING LINE ENJOY TOBACCO

Canadian Doctor, Writing From France, Tells of the Pleasure Cigarettes Bring the Men, Especially the Wounded

TOBACCO FUND IS OPEN

Captain Howard B. Jeffs, at the front with No. 2 Field Ambulance, Canadian Army Medical Corps, gives an interesting description of his work in a letter to his father, Dr. W. H. M. Jeffs, of North Toronto. He comments especially on how the wounded men appreciate cigarettes and tobacco, remarking that if chronic anti-tobacconists could only see the relaxation and great signs of satisfaction the men get out of their smokes in time of stress and danger, they would revert to an acute stage where they would have a chance to cure.

"Every wounded man who come to our dressing station," Capt. Jeffs writes, "was given a cigarette, and then he didn't care how we hurt him dressing his wounds. The man whose leg McKillop and I amputated asked first for a cigarette, and while we cut it off he didn't miss a puff, and never said a word. The grit of the wounded men is marvellous. The doling around of cigarettes to the wounded men is the parson's special job, and he is welcomed as much as the paymaster is when back in billets."

The Overseas Tobacco Fund is still open at The Examiner Office. 25c will provide 50 cigarettes and ¼ of a pound of tobacco for some heriоc Canuck. Better drop in to-night.

Bad Boys Raid and Rob Good Gardens

A citizen has reported to the Examiner, the exploits of bands or gangs of bad boys—from three or four to a dozen in each—who have been raiding and robbing gardens to the rear of the north side of Charlotte street. Yesterday one garden was robbed in broad daylight. The young rascals up-rooted radishes, lettuce, onions and carried them away. In the process they necessarily destroy as much, and perhaps more, by trampling about in the darkness and ruining tender growths. A St. Joseph street lady saw one of the acts of depredation, but as she is a new arrival in the neighbourhood, she could identify none of the boys. Residents with gardens are naturally greatly annoyed and wonder if the police can do nothing to protect the property of tax-payers.

Round Corners in City Street Design

The recent changes at the Charlotte-Park intersection give the city another rounded corner. Not long ago a visitor who had travelled widely remarked upon the appearance of Fleming Place and its curved effect. He expressed the opinion that rounded corners and segments relieve the monotony and severity of the usual street designs. Citizens will acknowledge the pleasing appearance at Park and Charlotte street corner apart from the car lines.

"Never a War in History in Which Labourers at Home Played Such an Important Part" Remarks Lloyd George

ADDRESSES LONGSHOREMEN

LIVERPOOL, June 4.—Britain's fate rests with her labouring classes, David Lloyd George, the new Minister of Munitions, declared in an address to the organized battalions of longshoremen here this afternoon.

"There was never a war in history in which the labourers at home played [illegible]," said Lloyd George. "If labour does not pull with the Government, then the whole machine is clogged and demoralized. That can mean but one thing, defeat, not because our soldiers are not valiant, but because they are not supported at home."

By kind permission of Lt.-Col. Walker, officer commanding the 57th Regiment, under the direction of Lieut. R. Gliddon, will give the firs tconcert of the season at Victoria Park to-night, and there will undoubtedly be a large crowd in attendance. An attractive programme, nearly all the numbers of which will be played for the first time in public by the band, has been prepared. The list is as follows:

Patriotic march—"United Empire."
March—"The Avenger."
Overture—"Raymond."
Novelty—"The Irish Patrol."
Trombone solo—"The Holy City"—Bandsman Gilbert.
March—"Boston Commandery."
Characteristic—"In the Shadows."
Selection from the English musical comedy, "A Gaiety Girl."
Descriptive — "A Southern Wedding."
March—"Col Gorton."

Complete System of Lighting For Bowlers

A complete system of illumination has been installed at the bowling green, thoroughly lighting every rink. The lawn is in fine shape, in fact is in better condition than ever. With the new illuminating effects the night games should be very popular. Everything has been done to give the rinks a strong appeal and all the members are requested to be present to-night. Bowling commends itself particularly to the business and professional men who desire a moderate exercise. The Brookside lawn on Aylmer street should be more attractive than ever this season.

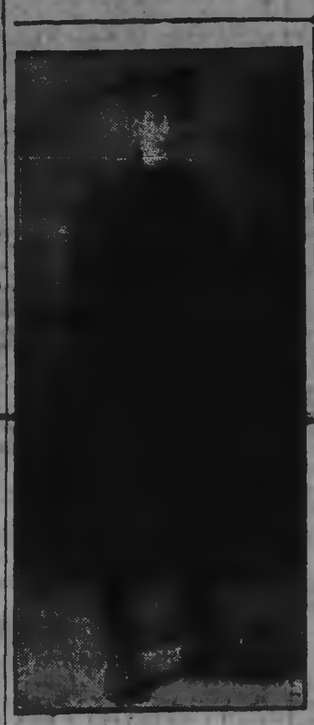
CORP. CARPENTER KILLED ON MAY 23

Well Known 57th Non-com. After Escaping Unhurt Through Langemarck Meets Death in a Later Action.



CORP. H. E. CARPENTER, formerly sergeant in No. 1 Company, 57th Regiment, killed in action on May 23rd.

PTE. MONGOUR WOUNDED

Killed in Action—

On May 23rd Corp. H. E. Carpenter, 57th detachment, 2nd Battalion, formerly of No. 1 Company, 57th Regiment.

Wounded.

Pte. Chas. Mongour, 414 Dublin Street, 57th detachment, 2nd Battalion, formerly of No. 1 Company, 57th Regimen (shrapnel wounds in the legs).

Missing.

Pte. Osborne Montgomery, Buckhorn, 57th detachment, 2nd Battalion, through telegraphic error, reported yesterday as seriously ill.

That the remnants of the Peterborough detachment who survived the battle of Langemarck have again been in action is only too evident from the above list. Corp. Carpenter was an enthusiastic member of the 57th Regiment and Pte. Charlie Mongour was well known. Pte. Montgomery was, through an error in transmitting the telegraphic list, given yesterday as seriously ill, instead of missing.

CORP. H. E. CARPENTER.

Peterborough has contributed another name to the roll of heroes who have found a last resting place near the battle line in France. This time it is Corp. Herbert Edward Carpenter, 7365, Peterborough detachment, 2nd Battalion, First Canadian Expeditionary Force. The message received by the next of kin states that Corp. Carpenter was killed in action on May 23rd.

Corp. Carpenter was a son of Mr. George Carpenter of Otonabee. Besides his parents he leaves one brother, Bryer, who is employed in the local freight office of the Grand Trunk Railway and one sister, Winnifred, at home. Prior to enlisting, Corp. Carpenter was a sergeant in No. 1 company of the 57th Regiment, in which capacity he was well liked by the men over whom he had jurisdiction. Upon enlisting for overseas service he received the appointment of Corporal in "A" Company under Major Bennett. He was twenty years of age and was born in Otonabee township. Before leaving Peterborough he was employed in the Grand Trunk freight office. The last communication received from him was dated May the second. On that date he was well. Corp. Carpenter was a member of St. Lukes church.

Known to everyone as "Bert", Corp. Carpenter was a most popular young man, and his many friends who were delighted to hear that he had come through the terrific fighting at Langemarck safely will be shocked to learn that he has fallen in the recent battle.

PTE. CHAS. MONGOUR.

The news that Pte. Charles Anthony Mongour of the 57th detachment, 1st C.E.F., had been wounded in action was received by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Mongour, 414 Dublin street, this morning. The message announced that he had been wounded in the leg by shrapnel and had been admitted to 1st Southern General Hospital, Edgbaston.

The parents of Pte. Mongour were rejoicing in the news that he had come through the battle of Langemarck without a scratch, but evidently he has been in action since that battle. A card received last Tuesday, informed his parents that he was well at time of writing.

Pte. Mongour was probably the youngest member of the 57th detachment, he being only sixteen years of age. He spent his sixteenth birthday in Valcartier in September. He was born in England but has been in Canada nine years. He was a big boy, and when he was 13 years of age he joined the 57th Regiment. He has always been interested in military work, and as soon as the war was declared he was keen to enlist. He finally secured the consent of his parents in time to go with the First Contingent. Before enlisting he was employed at the Bonner-Worth plant. He is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Mongour. He is a member of the Y.M.C.A. and is very well known in the city.

Russian Forces Operating South of That Place Have Cut Libau Off From the City of Memel

CAPTURE POLANGEN, TOO

LONDON, Eng., June 4.— Russian forces operating south of Libau have cut that city off from Memel, depriving the Germans of their base of supplies, says a Reuter despatch from Petrograd.

At the same time the Russians took Polangen "on the Baltic in Courland," and the village of Rutxan, south of Libau.

Another Russian force is approaching Libeau from the north.

With this city enveloped the Germans have an outlet only to the sea.

Garden Party at Mr. R. C. Braund's

Successful Affair Held Last Evening in Aid of Brownton Sunday School

A very successful garden party was held last evening at the home of Mr. R. C. Braund, Albert and Park Streets, in aid of the Brownton Salvation Army Sunday School. A very large crowd was present and a good sum was realised. A museum-cum-exhibiting numerous relics was visited by many, and the ice cream and strawberry booths were accorded a liberal patronage. The Young Peoples Band rendered a splendid programme, and altogether a very happy evening was spent.

THURSDAY HALF-HOLIDAYS AS USUAL THIS SUMMER

The merchants have decided upon the Thursday half-holiday during July and August, information that will doubtless be welcome to the clerks. One of the prominent business men stated to-day that the stores will close on Thursday afternoons this summer according to the custom now established.

EAST CITY HAS A GRIEVANCE

A Number of Residents Proposed to Introduce a Private Garbage Collecting System

One result of East City's refusal, through aldermanic representation, to have garbage collection in that neighbourhood is to be found in a ravine situated in Engleburn Park. Here has been dumped a motley collection of tin cans, dead hens, and in fact everything that is usually found on a recognised dumping ground such as existed in this city before the incinerator was built. Residents in East City are complaining of this condition of affairs and demand to know why they were not consulted when a proposal to introduce garbage collection to East City, successfully, was opposed by the Aldermen of that particular Ward. So bad has the situation become that a number of residents propose introducing a private garbage collecting system on their own account, each party to the arrangement to pay a proportionate part of the cost.

ROBBING KITCHEN GARDENS.

The citizens have had administered a good deal of advice and appeal to cultivate home gardens. Many have responded and have neat little gardens, in good condition with promise of great enjoyment of the fresh crisp vegetables they contain. But as to be seen in our news columns, all the work is, in some cases, wasted by the bad actions of bad boys who—sometimes even in daylight — raid the gardens and destroy more than they steal.

This is a very discouraging and disgraceful state of affairs; a small thing perhaps in itself, but intensely annoying to those concerned, and extremely important as giving one to see abroad a spirit of lawlessness that does not contribute to ideal conditions of peaceful living. A city garden is as the apple of an eye to the owner. After cultivating, planting, watching the seeds develop into plants, watering, weeding, and protecting from the frost—to have all this labour neutralized; to be deprived of the fruits of it in a moment, is something citizens should not be exposed to. Why is not Chief Thompson's idea of police for the residence districts acted upon? The fact of a policeman on duty in the residence streets, who might put in an appearance at any point at any time, would have a deterrent effect. The Horticultural Society is just now distributing plants to citizens to be used in beautifying their premises and, collectively, beautifying the city. But what's the use, if the work of days, and the growth of weeks, is liable to be destroyed in a moment?

These things suggest the question, Have we not a good deal of German "kultur" right here in Peterborough? The Germans destroy for the sake of destroying, without any military object being advanced. The lads spoken of put in effect the same spirit—destruction for destruction's sake. The vegetables they steal are not yet fit for use. In the work of stealing them the boys trample and destroy far more than they carry away. They ignore private rights, the sacredness of private property, and in every way carry out the devilish spirit of German culture. Can we throw stones at the Germans when we train our children so badly that they become Huns in a supposedly civilized community? The legend is that in Alfred's time, law and order were so universally effective that people could hang their jewellery upon wayside trees, with confidence that it would not be disturbed. We have not advanced much in a thousand years. We have to chain down our radish roots to be assured of keeping them till we can enjoy them. Why are things thus?

$42,000 FOR THE Y. M. C. A.

This dreadful war in its effects; this glorious war in its objects, imposes new duties; calls upon us to do things we never thought we could do or be called upon to do. The soldiers we send to fight are doing things they never expected to be called upon to do, and are doing what they thought they could not do, but are nevertheless doing it, and doing it splendidly.

While they are fighting and doing impossibilities; we at home are called upon to do more than we ever have done; we are fighting, to retain what we have; to keep the conditions we now have as the freest, happiest country in the world. While our soldiers are doing their bit, we must do ours; we must keep the machinery of life and enterprise moving. We are called upon to bear a double burden.

We are fighting to save our liberties; to save our country. We at home must do our share to make it worth saving.

The greatest asset of any country is its manhood; and our manhood has stood one crucial test—on the battlefield. It must stand the home test. The men and women of to-day are the makers of the men and women of to-morrow. Shall we not say that they are up to specifications?

The Y. M. C. A. is doing a noble work to realize the ideal human condition—a sound mind in a sound body. A sound mind stands for a sound moral constitution, and that cannot exist in a stunted, starvated body. The Y. M. C. A. is equipped as far as organization goes, to promote the dual object—of promoting in our growing youth conjoint moral and physical stamina. But it needs the further equipment of money. The silver bullet is as essential in its fight as it is in the war in the battlefield.

In helping on the work of the Y. M. C. A. we are helping on a work that has helped in our share of the war. There are scores of our soldiers now fighting in France, who received their morals—their moral and physical training in the Y. M. C. A.

We must look to the moral and physical well-being of our boys, for they are the men of to-morrow and the sacrifices we are making to save our country, if we do not at the same time conserve and develop our youth into strong, straight manhood, will be in vain.

Think on these things. Dangerous temptations stand thick through all the town, to push boys into bad ways. The work of the Y. M. C. A. is intended to counteract these temptations, to furnish not only harmless, but physically helpful, amusement, which youth must have; to surround boys with wholesome associations, to build up the power to resist temptation; to demonstrate the beauty of clean, manly, upright living, and make it attractive; in a word to make the conditions of the greatest asset in life—manhood.

The work is to make of the boy of to-day, the man of to-morrow. Money is poured out in unthinkable millions to make war; to make widows and orphans; to make desolation. Shall we not pour out a little—even $12,000—to make men. Some may dismiss the duty confronting, by sneers at the value of religious or semi-religious influences in our life; but deep down in every heart is the belief that these things are the foundation of all good in the individual, in society and in the nation.

AMMUNITION, MORE THAN ARMIES, NEEDED.

Mr. C. H. Allison, of Chicago, a former member of The Examiner editorial staff, in a private letter to a Peterborough citizen, says:

> I haven't received any papers from home for some time. The letters from the front are very interesting, and whenever you can spare them I should be glad to receive a bundle. People here were very much wrought up over the Lusitania affair. Anti-German feeling is strong. But the people here don't like to have the British and Canadian papers tell them what they ought to do. The loss of that there is the better off British interests will be so far as this country is concerned. I gather this from the tone of all the editorials. I gather also that Uncle Sam doesn't need or want advice from outsiders, especially those with "an axe to grind."

Two things come from this. One is that expatriated Canadians, don't by their change of habitat lose interest in Canada, but follow and sympathize with Canadian doings and interests. Another is the proof that the United States people, the better element, are in sympathy with the cause of Britain and the allies. It is just as natural that Uncle Sam should resent unsolicited advice, as it is that people, even newspapers, should be free with advice. No one doubts the ability of the United States to do its own thinking, and to look after its own national interests; but it is not immune from criticism or discussion of its attitude in a crisis that involves such great interests as national and so wide an area of human interests.

It is especially natural that Canadian newspapers and citizens should take a keen interest in what their neighbour, and the newspaper advice given by some Canadian journals is not more impertinent than that given by some of the United States journals. But after all we have reason to believe that Uncle Sam's heart is in the right place, and that the national attitude as held and expressed by the Government, will continue to be friendly to the cause of freedom and right, as involved in this war. If the present diplomatic tension between the United States and Germany should end in rupture, the action of the United States in the conjuncture is its own affair; if it leads to war the United States has to wage the war.

It is doubtful, however, whether war would be an advantage to the allies. At present the United States is serving the cause of the allies very effectively by supplying ammunition and other agencies of war. And ammunition is the greatest present need, an indispensable element in shortening the war. The question seems to be whether the United States would be of greater service to the cause of the allies by manufacturing ammunition for them to shoot, than by confining her attention to manufacturing ammunition for its own shooting. The latter would mean a long delay.

Like Britain was ten months ago, the United States, except in the matter of her navy, is not prepared for war. She has, with her 105 million of population, an army at home of only a little over 75,000. According to Whittaker, the total strength of the United States army at home (including the Porto Rico regiment) was, on June 30, 1911, 4,281 officers and 73,454 men, a total of 78,735, and not perhaps equipped for campaigning. As armies go to-day this is not a corporals' guard—only a trifle larger than the army Canada, with only 8 millions population, has now, fully equipped and in the fighting line.

Of course, in case of war, the present United States army could be multiplied many times. That, however, and its proper equipment, would take time—and time is the essence of the contract. The need is to shorten the war and put an end to the terrible loss of human life, the waste of money, and the desolation of the countries where the widespread fighting is going on. It would, therefore seem, to a layman, that the United States would serve the cause of the allies better by making ammunition for them, than by dropping making ammunition and making war. Ammunition is the big need. The loss of Przemysl, recorded to-day—won by Russia after months of fighting and the sacrifice of tens of thousands of lives—was due to the failure of the Russian supply of ammunition. For lack of a few shells. Russia at similar sacrifice will have, as she will do, to do the work over again, as similar or greater cost of lives.

RURAL FRANCE BRAVE.

Old and Young Till Fields Silently and Uncomplainingly.

That the Parisians calmly and confidently await the outcome of this dreadful war, all the world knows, but what do the French countay people think of it and how do they bear the dreadful strain that has been put on them?

The French farmer and villager is really the marrow of the French nation.

Everywhere among these people the same patience and determination is found to hold out to the end as is found among the French soldiers at the front.

What first strikes one on entering these country districts is the great activity everywhere. The French peasants love the soil on which they live as they love their own children and they would just as soon let a child of theirs starve as they would think of neglecting their dear fields, vineyards and orchards. Of course, there are uncultivated fields here and there, but the presence of these is explained by closed cottages and the many fresh graves in the cemeteries.

Everywhere, however, can be seen women, old men and children, who had been taken away from the school working silently and spending their energies on tasks too heavy for their hands. They are undeterred by the fact that they lack horses as well as oxen. The work must be done, the people must be fed and there are no shirkers.

In the villages there are now only old men, orphans, widows and wives, who will be, perhaps, widows to-morrow. You might expect to hear complaints, or reproaches, but you hear nothing of the kind.

All class distinction has disappeared, the people, rich or poor, noble or humble, are one great family. As an old peasant woman said:

"My son is in the trenches, but I have no right to complain. The noble and the rich are there, too."

Want, that is to say material want, is unknown in the country. The state does its duty toward those left behind, but the wealthy go further and share everything with those less fortunate.

Some weeks ago those left behind in the country were worried; the harvest must be provided and the old men and women were afraid of failing in their efforts with the soil, but the minister of war felt what was going on and soldiers from agricultural districts were sent home temporarily to work.

Canada's Relation to the United States; Competition or Co-operation?

Canada has arrived on the industrial map of the world and especially of the Western Hemisphere through the travail of the war. For the moment the Dominion is in part a sort of half-way house between the United States and the European allies as represented by Great Britain.

Ottawa handles important features of our fiscal relations with London; gold comes to us by way of the Dominion and various industrial operations are directed to the same route. But it all goes to enhancement of Canadian importance in the British system.

War's opening saw Canada in far worse position than the United States, because Canada not only is a heavy borrower abroad but always has had an unfavourable balance of trade. She has possessed opportunities, but not capital from England's inexhaustible reservoir in a measure which is startling even to Americans, accustomed as they are to calm realization that this country owes several billions abroad. Canada has something like one-tenth the people of the United States and about the same area, and much of the United States is still a sparsely settled country.

The war affected Canada almost exactly like this country. At the outset foreign creditors wanted to "cash in," but didn't want to buy. Panic resulted; but panic was quickly followed by tremendous demand for what both Canada and this country had to sell. To-day Canada has prospects that her foreign sales of war specialties will run from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000 for the year, while she is likely to sell of surplus crops almost as much. This means that she will pay her fixed charges abroad and realize at the same and for the first time an actual favourable balance of trade.

Accomplishment of this, when the ordinary opportunities for getting capital abroad are cut off, means that Canada, like the United States, is being established as a financially self-supporting nation. It means that in future Canada will more and more rely on herself; she will stand, will walk, at last will run. The war will change her even more than it will change the United States, because it will introduce her among the important industrial countries, and that means a greater change to Canada than to us already there.

Canada and the United States will always maintain the peculiar intimacy which comes from propinquity plus racial similarity. Tariffs can't keep Canada and the United States apart. The two countries are going to be more distinctly competitors in the future than ever before, unless they shall become co-operators. They ought to be both, with co-operation as the stronger force.

Both countries are of America; and America, all America, offers them its great field of opportunity. They may work together or separately; they may, after a fashion, pool issues, or decline to do so. But North America will be the stronger in the competitive race of the world if it shall present some evidence of solidarity and unity.

Canada has much, and will constantly have more, to coptribute to a co-operation of this kind. It should be the partner of the United States so far as such an arrangement can be effected.—New York Press.

When You Wash Your Hair Don't Use Soap

Most soaps and prepared shampoos contain too much alkali, which is very injurious, as it dries the scalp and makes the hair brittle.

The best thing to use is just plain mulsified cocoanut oil, for this is pure and entirely greaseless. It's very cheap, and beats soaps or anything else all to pieces. You can get this at any drug store, and a few ounces will last the whole family for months.

Simply moisten the hair with water and rub it in, about a teaspoonful is all that is required. It makes an abundance of rich, creamy lather, cleanses thoroughly, and rinses out easily. The hair dries quickly and evenly, and is soft, fresh looking, bright, fluffy, wavy and easy to handle. Besides, it loosens and takes out every particle of dust, dirt and dandruff.

That it will give more air to a user than the usual type of fan is the claim of the inventor of a saucer shaped affair that has a hole in the centre.

Spain has developed only about one fifth of its coal lands, the area of which is nearly double that of France's and only one-third less than England's.

Strange Medley Of Races Found In Czar's Army

WARSAW.—Over the Vistula bridge which leads from the Brest (Moscow) depot—"the finest bridge in Europe"—up the Jerusalem alley, thence to the Vienna depot for the front, march battalions of warriors from Asia. It seems they will never end. You get the impression that now, after half Europe is out fighting for Czar Nicholas, half of Asia is on the way.

In the new troops you see more and more Asiatic types; sometimes Asiatics from Europe, such as Volga Tartars; sometimes Caucasus Asiatics; sometimes Kirghizes and Turcomans from Asia proper; sometimes Siberians, who, though Europeans by race, have a physical type of their own. Among these men from Asia are Christians, Moslems, Buddhists, even heathen fire worshippers. For the purposes of this war all are Russians. When you see the heterogeneous types of men tramping westward you begin to understand what an interminable empire is Czar Nicholas'.

Two hundred thousand men of Russia's big army in peace time are men from Asia or from the Caucasus. Now in war there are at least half a million Asiatics in the field. It is these Asiatics who play the greatest role on Russia's side.

Arrive When Wanted Most

Being far from Poland they arrived late and when they were wanted most. It was three corps of Siberians who turned up in October and prevented Hindenburg crossing the Vistula. Had it not been for the Siberians Warsaw to-day would have been in German hands. Two Caucasus corps at the same time did the main work of checking the Austrian assault on the Upper Vistula, south of Iwangorod fortress.

The Asiatic troops are now the best officered and have the biggest proportion of well trained men. That is because they came late and have had the smallest losses. In all the combatant armies most of the original troops have been killed or wounded, and war is now being waged with second line men and new formations. The Asiatic corps are still intact. The part they play grows daily more important.

I have had on the Skierniewice front an example of the strange race types in Russia's army. I got to Ghirardoff, a factory town southwest of here, in the daily military train, and from there was driven to Radaiwiloff, whence you can see the German shells bursting. A mile north I came on the Asiatics.

There was a big, water filled hole, made by a German twelve inch shell last October, and in the middle of the water was a good looking, ruddy soldier with oblique eyes. He had no clothes on and his head and shoulders projected out of the water. The shell hole is ten feet deep, and the soldier, I learned, was standing on petroleum cans.

Sees Strange Ceremony.

Around the pit were other Asiatic soldiers in uniform. The letters on their shoulder straps showed that they came from different units. They were all sturdy, intelligent looking men, with the same oblique eyes. The man in the water took with his left hand a handful of beans, threw them on the surface, and with his right scooped up the water and the beans and sent both flying over the soldiers who stood around. The soldiers looked serious and bawled "Ya, Ya, Ya!" The naked soldier kicked from under him the petroleum cans; dived entirely under the water, reappeared, got out and dressed.

I asked Capt. Volkoff what that meant. He said it was a "Kama Christening." The soldiers were half Christians, half Moslems from a Finno-Tartar tribe which lives on the Kama river, a Volga tributary.

The "Kama Christening" has nothing to do with christening. It has ablutionary significance.

Volkoff said: "There are fire worshippers in the Eleventh army. These also come from the Volga. They worship the sun, and in Poland in winter when the sun is mostly absent they light a fire and worship it. The fire worshipper soldier carries, sewn to his uniform, a ball of yellow silk. This symbolizes the sun."

In a Siberian corps, which is part of one of the southern armies are pagan Yakhuts, Buriats from Mongolia, and Japanese (Russian subjects) Shintoists. There are, in all Czar Nicholas' armies, thirty thousand men who are neither Christians nor Moslems, but are either mixtures of both or are pure heathens.

GEORGIANS ARE CHRISTIANS.

The Caucasus corps are composed of Christians and Moslems. The strongest Christian element are the Georgians—the most advanced of all Caucasus races. I saw some Georgian troops in this city. Except the Circassians, they were the best looking men I have seen. Compared with the moujik warriors every Georgian looks an aristocrat. The moujik is strong but gnarled, wrinkled, flat faced, apathetic, and his demeanor is servile. The Georgians are aristocrats. You see fair men and red haired men among them—as you see them among Poland's Jews.

Of Russia's Christian soldiers the Siberians are the best. The Siberians are popular; every one talks of their hardihood and courage. They are big, red faced, unusually ugly men. Their faces show more independence and vigor than you see in the European moujik.

I saw some Siberians coming through here after a fierce night attack on the Bzura. The Germans had taken their trenches; the Siberians had retaken them, and taken the German trenches. Before morning the trenches had four times changed hands. Four hours later the men ere in Warsaw, singing and joking on the road. A company which had 180 men in the evening had only thirty in the morning, but these thirty men, without an officer, stayed stoutly in their trench and repelled new German attacks.

A private soldier named Lipkowsky took command. He relinquished it only after he had had three wounds. Most of the Siberians who marched through here had trophies tied to their haversacks. Some had German helmets; others pieces of German uniforms; other had German buttons pinned on their gray lambskin "papakha" hats. As they strode down the Nowy Swiat they chanted aloud the "Vistalo" song, which is as popular in Russia as "Tipperary" is in Britain.

GIVEN MANY DECORATIONS.

Russia's appreciation of her Asiatic soldiers is shown by the fact that she gives them decorations and promotion at a higher rate than the average rate for the whole army. The greatest number of St. George's crosses go to Siberians. The St. George's cross is given for personal valor.

The Moslem Asiatic soldiers also get many St. George's crosses. They get them with a change. The cross as given to Christians bears in the centre in enamel a picture of the saint spearing the dragon. This is a Christian emblem which might offend a Mohammedan, so the Mohammedans get the cross without St. George, and merely with an enamel picture of the Imperial Russian eagle.

An innocent Tartar, on being given this eagle cross threw it angrily at the presenter with the words: "Take back your silly old hen; I want the cross with the Tartar cavalryman spearing Kaiser Wilhelm."—By Byron Lonax, in the Chicago Tribune.

FELL IN A FAINT.

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall to the floor. I could not sweep without fainting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has so built up my system that I can wash and do my housework. Your medicine saved me when doctors had failed."

"LOVE PIRATE" IS ORDERED TO PAY $3,000 DAMAGES

LOS ANGELES, June 2.—In a futile attempt to disprove the "love pirate" charges made against him by D. M. Gue, Ephraim U. Robbins took the witness stand in his own defence in the $75,000 damage suit brought against him, based on charges of alienating the affections of Mr. Ida M. Gue.

At the conclusion of Robbins's testimony Judge Jackson gave Gue judgment for $3,000 and scored the defendant.

Robbins, who says he is a nerve specialist, denied all accusations made by Mrs. Gue.

"I never made love to her, I never caressed her and I never hypnotized Mrs. Gue or any other woman," declared Robbins.

"When she came to me for treatment," he said, "her husband claimed a man named Walker, a piano tuner, had previously hypnotized her. He wanted me to restore her faculties, and I told him I wasn't practising black art."

"But you made your patients disrobe when you gave them treatments, did you not?" demanded Attorney Moor, counsel for Gue.

"It is true that I require all my patients to don thin kimonos, but that is customary. I treat by massage, and necessarily these treatments cannot be given in street attire," replied the witness.

"Many women have been treated by me, but no one else has complained."

On cross-examination Robbins admitted he was not a regularly graduated physician and that his study had consisted of a two months course on chiropractics and courses in therapy. He denied that he was learned in the lore of astrology, but said he had studied charts of the stars and had given the subject some consideration.

How Thin People Can Put On Flesh

A New Discovery

This man and woman—that big, hearty, filling dinner you ate last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there, but your food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is you hardly get enough nourishment from your meals to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of thin folks the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation, are sadly out of gear and need reconstruction.

Cut out the foolish foods and fussy expedient diets. Omit the fault curing rubbish. Cut out everything but the meals you are eating now and eat with every one of them a simple Sargol tablet. In two weeks note the difference. Five to eight good solid pounds of healthy, "stay there" fat should be the net result. Sargol charges your weak, starved blood with millions of fresh new red blood corpuscles on the wings of the marvelous strength and energy carrying power to deliver every ounce of fat-making material in your food to every part of your body. Sargol ten, taken with your food and prepared it for the blood is easily assimilated form. Thin people gain all the way from 10 to 30 pounds a month while taking Sargol, and the new flesh stays put. Sargol builds up the entire constitution, for all of the rich fresh nourishment absorbed passes to the blood-producing glands of the system. They come as tablets to a druggist, and all druggists sell them subject to an absolute guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Food for Thought

HE THAT dwelleth in the secret place of the most high, shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. . . . There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling."—Psalm 91: 1 and 10.

At one time two families, close friends, were both in very sore trouble. In one, the mother was a victim with an only son. She had brought him up tenderly and wisely and loved him as only a mother could, but just at an age at which he should have been a comfort to her and support, he was convicted on a serious charge of theft for a long term of imprisonment. Though for many a day, one could not look into her face without the feeling that one should not do so, so keen was the agony there, yet afterwards I realised she was a nobler, grander woman than ever before.

The other case was that of a lovely girl of sixteen, who, owing to what at first seemed to be a slight accident, had to have one limb cut off at the hip. With a great dread, I went to see her for the first time after the operation, but as I entered the room, there on the little white bed, was the same Hope, with the same bright look, the same laughing eyes, though the face was white and drawn from suffering. One day she asked me to read her favorite selection, the ninety-first Psalm.

Rebelliously I thought why had God let such a terrible thing befall her, who certainly dwelt "in the secret place of the Most High." But after reading the Psalm as I looked at her radiant face, I knew then for the first time, what that Psalm meant. It did not refer at all to the material, the external things of life, but to the great, the grand, the spiritual part of our natures. With the woman and with the girl, no harm had really befallen them.

No matter what the disgrace, what the suffering, what the trials, nothing whatsoever can hurt or harm the soul of the pure, the good, the noble, to whom the Lord is a refuge and a fortress.—I. H. N.

MATHEMATICAL PUZZLE

Here is a mathematical puzzle for the boys and girls who enjoy working out such puzzles to their own satisfaction and then experimenting on someone else. Put down the number of your living brothers. Multiply by two. Add three. Multiply the result by five. Add the number of living sisters. Multiply the result by ten. Add the number of dead brothers and sisters. Subtract 150 from the result. The right hand figure will be the number of deaths. The middle figure will show the number of living sisters. The left hand figure will be the number of living brothers.

Sees Strange Ceremony.

Around the pit were other Asiatic soldiers in uniform. The letters on their shoulder straps showed that they came from different units. They were all sturdy, intelligent looking men, with the same oblique eyes. The man in the water took with his left hand a handful of beans, threw them on the surface, and with his right scooped up the water and the beans and sent both flying over the soldiers who stood around. The soldiers looked serious and bawled "Ya, Ya, Ya!" The naked soldier kicked from under him the petroleum cans; dived entirely under the water, reappeared, got out and dressed.

I asked Capt. Volkoff what that meant. He said it was a "Kama Christening." The soldiers were half Christians, half Moslems from a Finno-Tartar tribe which lives on the Kama river, a Volga tributary.

The "Kama Christening" has nothing to do with christening. It has ablutionary significance.

Volkoff said: "There are fire worshippers in the Eleventh army. These also come from the Volga. They worship the sun, and in Poland in winter when the sun is mostly absent they light a fire and worship it. The fire worshipper soldier carries, sewn to his uniform, a ball of yellow silk. This symbolizes the sun."

In a Siberian corps, which is part of one of the southern armies are pagan Yakhuts, Buriats from Mongolia, and Japanese (Russian subjects) Shintoists. There are, in all Czar Nicholas' armies, thirty thousand men who are neither Christians nor Moslems, but are either mixtures of both or are pure heathens.

GEORGIANS ARE CHRISTIANS.

The Caucasus corps are composed of Christians and Moslems. The strongest Christian element are the Georgians—the most advanced of all Caucasus races. I saw some Georgian troops in this city. Except the Circassians, they were the best looking men I have seen. Compared with the moujik warriors every Georgian looks an aristocrat. The moujik is strong but gnarled, wrinkled, flat faced, apathetic, and his demeanor is servile. The Georgians are aristocrats. You see fair men and red haired men among them—as you see them among Poland's Jews.

Of Russia's Christian soldiers the Siberians are the best. The Siberians are popular; every one talks of their hardihood and courage. They are big, red faced, unusually ugly men. Their faces show more independence and vigor than you see in the European moujik.

I saw some Siberians coming through here after a fierce night attack on the Bzura. The Germans had taken their trenches; the Siberians had retaken them, and taken the German trenches. Before morning the trenches had four times changed hands. Four hours later the men are in Warsaw, singing and joking on the road. A company which had 150 men in the evening had only thirty in the morning, but these thirty men, without an officer, stayed stoutly in their trench and repelled new German attacks.

A private soldier named Lipkowsky took command. He relinquished it only after he had had three wounds. Most of the Siberians who marched through here had trophies tied to their haversacks. Some had German helmets; others pieces of German uniforms; other had German buttons pinned on their gray lambskin "papakha" hats. As they strode down the Nowy Swiat they chanted aloud the "Vistulo" song, which is as popular in Russia as "Tipperary" is in Britain.

GIVEN MANY DECORATIONS.

Russia's appreciation of her Asiatic soldiers is shown by the fact that she gives them decorations and promotion at a higher rate than the average rate in the white army. The largest number of St. George's crosses go to Siberians. The St. George's cross is given for personal valor.

The Moslem Asiatic soldiers also get many St. George's crosses. They get them with a change. The cross as given to Christians bears in the centre in enamel a picture of the saint spearing the dragon. This is a Christian emblem which might offend a Mohammedan, so the Mohammedans get the cross without St. George, and merely with an enamel picture of the Imperial Russian eagle.

An innocent Tartar, on being given this eagle cross threw it angrily at the presenter with the words: "Take back your silly old hen; I want the cross with the Tartar cavalryman spearing Kaiser Wilhelm."—By Byron Lonax, in the Chicago Tribune.

FELL IN A FAINT.

Mrs. Edwin Martin, Ayer's Cliff, Que., writes: "Before using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food I was in a terrible condition. Dizzy spells would come over me and I would fall to the floor. I could not dress without fainting. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food has so built up my system that I can wash and do my housework. Your medicine saved me when doctors had failed."

"LOVE PIRATE" IS ORDERED TO PAY $3,000 DAMAGES

LOS ANGELES, June 3.—In a futile attempt to disprove the "love pirate" charges made against him by D. M. Gue, Ephraim U. Robbins took the witness stand in his own defence in the $75,000 damage suit brought against him, based on charges of alienating the affections of Mr. Ida M. Gue.

At the conclusion of Robbins's testimony Judge Jackson gave Gue judgment for $3,000 and scored the defendant.

Robbins, who says he is a nerve specialist, denied all accusations made by Mrs. Gue.

"I never made love to her, I never caressed her and I never hypnotized Mrs. Gue or any other woman," declared Robbins.

"When she came to me for treatment," he said, "her husband claimed a man named Walker, a piano tuner, had previously hypnotized her. He wanted me to restore her faculties, and I told him I wasn't practising black art."

"But you made your patients disrobe when you gave them treatments, did you not?" demanded Attorney Moor, counsel for Gue.

"It is true that I require all my patients to don thin kimonos, but that is customary. I treat by massage, and necessarily these treatments cannot be given in street attire," replied the witness.

"Many women have been treated by me, but no one else has complained."

On cross-examination Robbins admitted he was not a regularly graduated physician and that his study had consisted of a two months course on chiropractics and courses in therapy. He denied that he was learned in the lore of astrology, but said he had studied charts of the stars and had given the subject some consideration.

How Thin People Can Put On Flesh

A New Discovery

This man and woman—that big, hearty, filling dinner you ate last night. What became of all the fat-producing nourishment it contained? You haven't gained in weight one ounce. That food passed from your body like unburned coal through an open grate. The material was there, but your food doesn't work and stick, and the plain truth is you hardly get enough nourishment from your meals to pay for the cost of cooking. This is true of thin folks the world over. Your nutritive organs, your functions of assimilation, are sadly out of gear and need reconstructing.

Cut out the foolish foods and famous cave-dwelling diets. Omit the fads and rub-ons. Cut out everything but the meals you are eating now and eat with every one of them a single Sargol tablet. In two weeks note the difference. Five to eight good solid pounds of healthy, "stay there" flesh should be the net result. Sargol changes your weak, starvation blood with millions of flesh, nerve and red blood corpuscles—gives the blood the carrying power to deliver every ounce of fat-making material in your food to every part of your body. Sargol, ten, mixes with your food and produces it for the blood in easily assimilated form. Thin people gain all the way from 10 to 20 pounds a month while taking Sargol, and the new flesh stays put. Sargol tablets are a scientific combination of the 45 elements known to organic chemistry. They come 60 tablets to a package, and all druggists sell them subject to an absolute guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Food for Thought

HE THAT dwelleth in the secret place of the most high, shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty. . . . There shall no evil befall thee, neither shall any plague come nigh thy dwelling."—Psalm 91: 1 and 10.

At one time two families, close friends, were both in very sore trouble. In one, the mother was a cripple. In the other, the husband was overtaken by an awful sin. The bad example of a member could, but just at an age as a member could, but just at an age when he should have been a comfort and support, he was convicted on a serious charge of theft for a long term of imprisonment. Though for many a day, one could not look into her face without the feeling that one should not do so, so keen was the agony there, yet afterwards I realized she was a nobler, grander woman than ever before.

The other case was that of a lovely girl of sixteen, who, owing to what at first seemed to be a slight accident, had to have one limb cut off at the hip. With a great dread, I went to see her for the first time after the operation, but as I entered the room, there on the little white bed, was the same Hope, with the same bright look, the same laughing eyes, though the face was white and drawn from suffering. One day she asked me to read her favorite selection, the ninety-first Psalm.

Rebelliously I thought why had God let such a terrible thing befall her, who certainly dwelt "in the secret place of the Most High." But after reading the Psalm as I looked at her radiant face, I knew then for the first time, what that Psalm meant. It did not refer at all to the material, the external things of life, but to the great, the grand, the spiritual part of our natures. With the woman and with the girl, no harm had really befallen them.

No matter what the disgrace, what the suffering, what the trials, nothing whatsoever can hurt or harm the soul of the pure, the good, the noble, to whom the Lord is a refuge and a fortress.—I. H. M.

The Making Of A Man

Peterborough Boys have time to burn---or to burn them. They have lusty strength that must spend itself on something. They have minds that are like blotting paper, soft and porous, ready to soak up every fluid experience. They have aspirations that can sustain them---or shatter them. They have souls that soar upward.

But boys are plastic creatures—easily moulded. Their characters require making and shaping—and hardening.

What imprint shall the Boys of Peterborough have put on them ?

A Youth who grows up to serious years, without handicaps of evil habits, or a diseased will, or a befogged vision as to the ways of righteousness.

A Youth Strong to Resist Temptation and to Walk in the Ways of Truth and Honour.

MATHEMATICAL PUZZLE

Here is a mathematical puzzle for the boys and girls who enjoy working out such puzzles to their own satisfaction and then experimenting on someone else. Put down the number of your living brothers. Multiply by two. Add three. Multiply the result by five. Add the number of living sisters. Multiply the result by ten. Add the number of dead brothers and sisters. Subtract 150 from the result. The right hand figure will be the number of deaths. The middle figure will show the number of living sisters. The left hand figure will be the number of living brothers.

Otonabee Farms Are in Splendid Condition

A short trip into Otonabee yesterday revealed the fact that all the grains have made recent progress, but the ground is beginning to call again for rain. Several fields of rye in the southern township were noticed partly cut. Fall wheat is looking fine and oats and barley are in good condition. The pastures are fresh and green. A heavy rain would preserve the present splendid condition and would set at ease any misgivings that may arise in regard to the weather.

DUST NUISANCE ON BURNHAM ST.

Residents Are Taking Matter Into Their Own Hands—Use the Garden Hose

A striking tribute to the inadequacy of the means employed by the city to mitigate the dust evil was to be seen on Burnham street last evening, when a number of the residents found it necessary to water the roadway in the same manner as they water their lawns. Some of them took chairs out to the edge of the road and sprinkled the roadway with water obtained from the lawn services. Only in this manner can conditions be rendered at all tolerable and household effects preserved from the ravages of dust. It is stated that from Robinson street south on Burnham street, the roadway has never been watered by the city this season, so that the residents, of whom there are a number on that particular portion of the street, have been forced to adopt protective measures on their own account.

Enquiries at the city hall and elsewhere as to when the city will commence oiling the streets invariably results in a reiteration of what has become to be a time-worn excuse, namely, the watering carts are being fitted with nozzles capable of applying the oil in the manner desired, or arrangements are being made to procure a supply of oil. Burnham street is not the only street that is suffering from the need of water. There are a number throughout the city all testifying in their own way to the inability of the present Council to cope with the situation.

Each member of the executive will be held responsible for five dollars each for the funds of the Association.

HAVE YOU A BAD SORE?

If so, remember these facts—Zam-Buk is by far the most widely used balm in Canada! Why has it become so popular? Because it heals sores, cures skin diseases, and does what is claimed for it. Why not let it heal your sore?

Remember that Zam-Buk is altogether different to the ordinary ointments. Most of these consist of animal fats. Zam-Buk contains no trace of any animal fat, or any mineral matter. It is absolutely herbal.

Remember that Zam-Buk is at the same time healing, soothing, and antiseptic. Kills poison instantly, and all harmful germs. It is suitable alike for recent injuries and diseases, and for chronic sores, ulcers, etc. Test how different and superior Zam-Buk really is. All druggists and stores at 50c. box. Use also Zam-Buk Soap. Relieves sunburn and prevents freckles. Best for baby's bath. 25c. tablet.

A PRE-NUPTIAL PRESENTATION

A very pleasing incident took place on Thursday evening at the Bonner-Worth Co., Ltd., when Mr. Edgar Worth, who is to be married in Toronto on Saturday the 5th inst., was presented with a grandfather clock by the employees of the company. The presentation was made at the close of the day, and an address was read by Mr. David Melton. Mr. W. Smith made the presentation on behalf of the employees, and Mr. Worth responded with a neat speech worthy of the occasion.

Vagrants Had Long Records

George Murphy and William Walsh Who Have Several Aliases Were Sent to Guelph for 6 Months

George Murphy, alias George McKenzie, alias Charles Murphy alias James McCaffery alias George Clarke and James Walsh, alias William Walsh, who have been "touching" local citizens for the price of a meal, were found to have quite lengthy records in the Police Commissioners' Department at Ottawa. The two men were arrested a week ago and remanded, while some inquiries were instituted. Chief Thompson received word from Ottawa that their finger prints were identical with those of George Murphy and William Walsh.

Murphy's record was as follows:

1911, January 25th—George Murphy, Brockville, Ont. Vagrancy—6 months Ontario Reformatory.

1912, January 15th—Charles Murphy, Ottawa, Ont. Vagrancy — 6 months in gaol.

1912, October 22rd—George Clarke, Hamilton, Ont. Vagrancy—6 months Ontario Reformatory.

Walsh's record was as follows:

1905, July 28th—St. Catharines, Ont. Vagrancy—6 months Ontario Reformatory.

1906, May 1st—Toronto, Ont. Assault and robbery—50 days in gaol.

1910, July 22nd — Toronto, Ont. Theft—6 months Ontario Reformatory.

1911, September 27th—Toronto, Ont. Aggravated assault, occasioning actual bodily harm—6 months Ontario Reformatory.

1913, December 20th—Toronto, Ont. Vagrancy—6 months Ontario Reformatory.

1914, October 8—Toronto, Ont. Vagrancy—6 months Ontario Reformatory.

The two men were sent down this morning by Magistrate Dumble for 6 months, to be sent at the Guelph Prison Farm.

CHIEF EXECUTIVE OFFICER WAS HERE

In Connection With Delay in Payment of Separation Allowances to Soldiers' Wives

The chief executive officer of the Paymaster General's Department, Ottawa, was in the city last night investigating complaints of soldiers' dependents. He found that the reason soldiers' wives had not received their allowance was due to a lack of inspection. He cited an example. At one mobilization centre the Chief Executive Officer asked if all the cards had been sent in, and he was told that they had. On parading the men it was found that cards of seventy-five had never been sent.

A conference was held last night, with Col. Walker, Major Eastwood, and the local member, Mr. J. H. Burnham, relative to the men who had been invalided home, and who were entitled to pensions, but whose money had not yet come. These matters will be settled as soon as possible and in the meantime by a local arrangement, there will be no hitch in the payment of monies to those entitled thereto.

STRAWBERRIES SAID TO HAVE SUFFERED

Fruit men believe that strawberries suffered severely from the recent frosts. Plants that were in flower about the middle of April turned black under the frost's blighting bite. Definite information should be forthcoming in a short time. Up in the Niagra district most fruits apparently escaped, although grapes are believed to have been caught. Canadian hot-house tomatoes and cucumbers are coming in now and the price is sagging slightly. Florida cucumbers in hampers, and Florida tomatoes in baskets are cheaper. Delaware strawberries are slightly higher; cabbages from Charleston are also easier. Another cargo of Cuban pines are expected in New York to-morrow and will be soon followed by Florida fruit. The pine season has only a few weeks more at its peak. Grapefruit supplies will apparently be ample until fall.

ELLIOT'S

COST OF THE WAR TO THE FRENCH NATION

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, June 4.—Alexandre F. Ribot, the French Minister of Finance, yesterday introduced a bill in the Chamber of Deputies providing for the appropriation of 5,600,000,000 francs ($1,120,000,000), provisionally for the requirements in the third quarter of the present year.

M. Ribot presented with the bill memoranda showing that the extraordinary appropriations since the war began, and including the estimates for the third quarter of 1915, ($4,400,000,000). If one included the appropriations already made when the war began for the last five months of 1914, the total, the Finance Minister said, would rise to 24,000,000,000 francs ($4,800,000,000) for the fourteen months ending September 3.

TIRED-OUT KIDNEYS

Kidney troubles are so frightfully common because the kidneys are so easily upset by overwork or excesses of eating and drinking. Cure is effected not by whipping them on to renewed effort, but by awakening the action of liver and bowels by the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills. This rests the kidneys and makes them well. Backache and urinary disorders then disappear.

The engine of a motor driven street sprinkler in England also is used to operate one pump to fill its tank and another to help scatter the water.

Illness of Men Who Inhale German Gas Resembles in Symptoms Slow Drowning

LONDON, June 4.—Following is a graphic description, published here, of what the poison gas of the Germans means to those who come in contact with its deadly fumes:

"Tuesday and the day before I went with —— to see some of the men in hospital at ——, who were "gassed" Tuesday and the day before on Hill 60. The whole of England and the civilized world ought to have the truth fully brought before them in vivid detail, and not wrapped up as at present.

"When we got to the hospital we had no difficulty in finding out in which ward the men were, as the noise of the poor devils trying to get breath was sufficient to direct us. We were met by a physician belonging to our division, who took us into the ward. There were about twenty of the worst cases in the ward, on mattresses, all more or less in a sitting position, propped up against the walls.

"Their faces, arms, hands were of a shiny, gray-black colour, with mouths open and lead glazed eyes, all swaying slightly backward and forward trying to get breath. It was a most appalling sight, all these poor black faces, struggling, struggling for life. What with the groaning and noise of the effort for breath, Colonel ——, who, as every one knows, has had as wide an experience as any one all over the savage parts of Africa, told me that he never felt so ill as he did after the scene in these cases.

"There is practically nothing to be done for them except to give them salt and water to try to make them ill.

"The effect the gas has is to fill the lungs with a watery frothy matter, which constantly increases and rises till it fills up the throat, nose and mouth, and so the sufferer drowns, even when they die; it is suffocation; slow drowning, taking in some cases one or two days.

"We have lost hundreds of men who died in the trenches, and more than half the men who reached hospital have died. Eight died Tuesday night out of the twenty I saw, and most of the others I saw will die; while those who get over the gas invariably develop acute pneumonia. It is without doubt the most awful form of scientific torture. Not one of the men I saw in hospital had a scratch or wound.

"The nurses and physicians were all working their utmost against this terror; but one could see from the tension of their nerves that it was like fighting a hidden danger which was overtaking every one.

"A German prisoner was caught with a respirator in his pocket; the pad was analyzed and found to contain hyposulphite of soda with one per cent of some other substance.

"The gas is in a cylinder, from which when they send it out it is propelled a distance of 100 yards; it then spreads.

"Please make a point of publishing this in every paper in England. English people, men and women, ought to know exactly what is going on; also members of both houses. The people of England can't know. The Germans have given out that it is a rapid, painless death. The liars! No torture could be worse than to give them a dose of their own gas. The gas, I am told, is chlorine, and probably some other gas in the shells they burst. They think ammonia kills it."

Peterborough District Report

District Comprises Fifteen Appointments.—Officers Elected

The Statistical Secretary of the Peterborough District, Rev. J. R. Butler of Cavan, has furnished the following interesting figures, relative to the work of the Methodist Church in connection with the above district for this Conference year. There are fifteen appointments comprising 30 preaching places, with a total membership of 4,364, and at those preaching places 2,337 Methodist families. The people have subscribed $50,624 to the support of the church, or an average of $20.80 per family. The missionary givings were $7,233, revealing a splendid increase during the year. It might be mentioned that George Street Church, Peterborough, gave $2,272 of this and Charlotte Street Church $1,375, and that in addition the W.M.S. of the district gave $1,945. When one considers the numerous other claims met by this district, for Red Cross fund, Belgian and Patriotic funds, the showing is worthy of commendation There was paid also for Ministerial support $13,189; there are also 28 Y.P. societies, with a total membership of 985, and these contributed $1,273 to the work of the Church. The Sabbath work has been most encouraging for there are 37 Sabbath Schools, with a membership of 2,200—1,849 of whom are members of the Church. The total raised for school purposes is 3,859. The A.B.C. movement claims in its membership 1,448 members.

The district has elected Rev. Geo. Brown to the Missionary Committee, and Rev. W. T. Walker, the efficient S. S. Secretary, while Rev. R. G. Power of George Street is Financial Secretary, and Rev. Wm. Johnston, Chairman.

To Escape Divorce Choose Elderly Mate

CHICAGO, June 3. — Matrimonial bliss with an aged spouse has an extra advantage nowadays. In addition to being an old man's darling a young woman escapes becoming a divorcee.

After a careful search among divorce records and a conscientious visiting at the Court of Domestic Relations Mrs. Leonra Z. Meder, Commissioner of Public Welfare, could find but one man of sixty who had deserted his wife.

There is safeguard in youthful marriages—from the marriage mills also. In surveying the records of 100 couples it was found that but 20 per cent. of the couples who marry between twenty and twenty-five seek separations. The greatest divorcing ages are between twenty-five and thirty years.

Fathers-in-law are much more harmless than mothers-in-law, too

But the greatest cause for divorce is intemperance, according to the report. The second is immorality. Incompatibility of temper follows third. Gambling, dishonesty and the morphine habit are serious reasons for separation.

The one man who was divorced at sixty had married an American wife. He could not speak English well and his wife was too up to date for him or he would have kept away from the divorce mills.

"Children are the binding links, next to age. The more children the merrier, and the safer the marriage tie," says Mrs. Meder.

Y.M.C.A. ACTIVE BEHIND LINES

Big Meeting Within Sound of Guns —Distribute Vast Quantity of Comforts and Supplies

The following letter had been received from Capt. H. A. Pearson, Y.M.C.A. representative at the front:

For several days we have it fairly quiet, but Saturday it opened up again and lasted until this morning. Such a number of guns were engaged on our side that it seemed like one continual roar, and while the battle was about eight miles away, all our men had to be ready to move, as it looked like an advance on our part. But it did not quite materialise as the cavalry were not able to get through the barbed wire, but 1,100 German prisoners were taken, and four guns.

We had a splendid service at the Y. M. C. A. last night—our rooms here are larger than usual, and more than 300 fellows crowded into the place. The Belgian people cannot quite make us out, but they gather around to hear the songs. I have plenty of books, and I wish you could have heard them sing "Lead Kindly Light" and "Stand Up For Jesus." Our singing nearly drowned out the noise of the guns, but the vibration shook the building and rattled the windows. This afternoon we have a football game on, and a big concert at 7.30, special late leave having been granted. Rush has organized a quartette and they make their initial appearance to-night. Wouldn't you like to occupy a seat (on the floor) in the front row? Admission, free. "Smokes" supplied. You ask what things we are able to supply. During the month I have received for distribution a very great amount of goods, most of which is free issue, including 70,000 sheets of writing paper, socks, shirts, soap, towels, etc. We have on sale chocolate, tobacco, cigarettes and tooth powder. A whole carload of comforts is due to arrive to-morrow. This stuff comes from many different organizations is collected at Boulogne or Havre, and then sent on here. The stuff is especially welcome at this time, for so many of our fellows have lost their kit bags in the recent fighting. I shall be able to send you a few pictures in a day or two.

In regard to the news, we get papers—a few days late—but always we know fairly well what is doing along our line. The German official reports are unreliable and the English leave too much unsaid. The French, we have always found reliable, except in one case when they took to themselves credit which belonged to the Canadians. Many times English gains appear first in the French reports. I know how you would feel to hear news of reverses, but you can imagine how we feel when our schemes go astray, and we back up. Sometimes it looks like a long way home, but to-day we are more cheerful than we have been for a long time, and it does not seem that either the enemy or the Allies can continue long, with such big losses as have occurred during the past two weeks. We have lost many, but their losses have been tremendous. With our glasses we can see German dead by the hundred. They certainly are wasting many men. They still make advances in massed formation, and are mowed down like so much grain. The day will come when they will not be able to fill up the gaps in their line. Our allied army grows each day, although we are heartily sick of the English strikes, etc., and their rotten systems which allows men to sit around Pubs. and suck booze while we are hung up for want of ammunition.

Saw Frank again yesterday and Forgie—both well. Peg. is still in hospital at Boulogne. In the case of Irwin, there is just the faintest hope that the Germans may have picked him up and cared for his wounds.

We have not felt the heat much yet but I have left off a sweater which I had been wearing as a vest. I lost all my underclothes, etc., at Ypres, but got some issue stuff which will do for a while. I can get some light garments over from England later on. I have been in France six months and am therefore entitled to four days leave of absence, but I guess I'll plug ahead till this game is over.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

The Finance committee of the City Council will meet in regular session this afternoon at four o'clock.

Council Meeting.

On Monday evening next the City Council will meet. A fairly large budget is promised which should ensure some of the aldermen ample scope for their oratorical propensities.

Flagpole Painted.

The flagpole on top of the city hall has been re-painted. The work was performed by Art. Drummond of Toronto and was accomplished without taking the pole down.

Have Returned.

His Worship Mayor Butler and Ald. Green have returned from Cobourg, where they were attending an executive committee meeting of the Trent Valley Hydro Radial Association.

Information Wanted.

A number of East City ratepayers are anxious to know why that section of the city was not included in the garbage collecting area. A number of enquiries have been referred to the representatives of that particular ward.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

Brant County Council endorsed the proposal of Oxford calling upon the Provincial Government to have municipal elections held only every two years.

POTATO CROP MAY BE SMALL

Department of Agriculture Expects a Good Fall Wheat Yield—Clover Conditions Satisfactory

In a report issued yesterday on crop conditions throughout the province, the Ontario Department of Agriculture says:

Fall Wheat.—This important grain crop, with its largely increased acreage, gives promise of an unusually good yield should favourable weather ensue. It wintered well, and evidently was not much injured by "heaving" during the very open weather of March-Apirl. In fact, spring injury may be regarded as practically nil. Hardly any fall wheat land has been ploughed up, and very little has been redrilled to spring grains. Injury from insects, also, has been slight, only the barest mention being made of the presence of the wire-worm, cut-worm, or Hessian fly. While a few patchy fields in low-lying places are reported, the opinion is very generally expressed that the crop never looked better at this time of the year. Some correspondents are inclined to fear that growth has been rather too rank.

Clover.—Nearly all the injury to clover occurred from drought either last year or the season before, as the crop wintered well. While some spring heaving was reported, it was not so serious as usual, and the remarkably early growth has very fully compensated for any losses in that way. The crop is now looking unusually well, although thin on the ground in places, owing to the poor catch in sowing. Taken all together the May reports regarding clover are the most cheerful for years.

Alfalfa. —Like clover, this crop had a poor catch last year, but otherwise it has come through the winter and spring in fair condition. It appears to be steady growing in favour as a fodder crop, although some unfavourable reports have been received as to its suitability to local growing conditions.

Vegetation. — Unusually warm weather in April brought growth forward with a bound, and correspondents writing about the middle of May reported vegetation as being a week or two in advance of the ordinary, although the cold dip then prevailing had halted advancement. Cattle had then been on the grass in some localities for a fortnight, with good picking.

Spring sowing. — Reports regarding spring crops are almost an unbroken chorus of praise for the excellent condition of the soil at seeding, and the general successful nature of the catch. Sowing was unusually early, as most of the spring grains were in, and some of them nicely started by the 1st of May. More land than usual is being put to crop this year, and beans especially will experience a considerable increase in acreage judging by expressed intentions. On the other hand, potatoes will be the one crop likely to have a reduced area, owing to the poor prices realised for last year's crop.

He Was Not a Deserter, is in French Hospital

SPECIAL CABLE:

OTTAWA, June 4.—There is a certain Montreal soldier, a member of the first Canadain division, who has been the object lately of much undeserved approbium. Having been in the Langemarck fighting, in which the Canadians distinguished themselves, he failed to turn up afterwards. As he was not reported as a prisoner and was not seen to be wounded, friends who enquired for him were informed that he had deserted. It has now been discovered, however, that the soldier in question is lying in a French hospital with gunshot wounds

May Send Parcels By Ordinary Post To Prisoners With Perfect Safety

The following article relative to sending parcels to prisoners of war in Germany is taken from the Daily Mail and will be read with interest:

A recent article by The Daily Mail's Special Commissioner in Germany —a neutral writer of eminence and reliability—in which he described the hunger and neglect of British war prisoners in Germany, has touched the public with profound pity and moved it to eager desire to send assistance.

Ample machinery already exists for the safe despatch of gifts of money, food, and comforts; but it must be assumed that very many people, anxious to help, have been unaware of its facilities.

The Prisoners of War Help Committee, Savoy Hotel (Embankment entrance), Victoria Embankment, London, W. C., is an official organization under Government supervision. Gifts may be sent either through this society or through the Post Office. In case of great urgency arrangements can be made to have articles bought in Holland and thence sent to prisoners. Remittances should be sent to the committee—at the Savoy Hotel, London, and should not be less than 5s. in amount. The articles required may either be specified or left to the committee's discretion.

Help Committee's Work.

The Help committee sits as an advisory bureau and clearing house. Card indexes are kept to date of latest German official information of all British war prisoners in Germany, together with the place of each prisoner's internment. The committee tries to get in touch with all funds raised with the object of helping prisoners of war, and makes special efforts to prevent "overlapping" and to ensure that "the lonely soldier" is not left out. Its policy is to get, as far as possible, funds organized for the benefit of individual regiments.

Regiments, through their record offices, have the best chance of getting into touch with their men. Gifts cannot be sent addressed to the German commandants of the camps for general distribution but need to be sent to some responsible and trustworthy non-commissioned officer for division among his fellow prisoners. Ninety-six separate regiments and other institutions are sending out parcels.

How to Help.

The public are recommended to apply to the committee at the Savoy Hotel (at the address above), who will acquaint them with the address of the regimental committee of their country —or of any other regiment they may favour—and the regimental committee will accept, acknowledge, and despatch their gifts. Those who have individual friends or relatives who are prisoners of war and whose camp of internment is known may, with perfect safety, send them parcels up to 11lb. in weight by ordinary post. The Post Office are already handling 8,000 of such parcels daily.

What To Send.

Foods and comforts are better than money. The following articles are suggested: Tea, biscuits (not sweet), butter (salt, in tin), cake, cheese (in tin), chocolate, cocoa (or coffee) and milk, bread, condensed milk, golden syrup, jams (in tins), meats (tinned), dried fruits, sardines, crushed oats, sugar, Oxo, brawn, peas, lentils, soup packets, fish (tinned), tinned vegetables, tinned beef, tobacco, plugs, twist and cigarettes, pack of cards and games, ordinary washing soap, carbolic soap, insect powder, tooth brushes, tooth powder.

A great number of the regimental committees are run on the following lines: Their central offices keep a record and a number of associated ladies sends one or more parcels a week or fortnight to individual men. It is open to every generous and patriotic member of the public to assist in this way. Find out your county regimental committee from the Prisoners of War Help Committee and send sorely needed food and little luxuries to the lonely prisoners of war. For his is the saddest and hardest lot of the soldier's life.

A Wave of Warm Weather Sweeps Over Stoney Lake

Water is Going Down a Little—A Rush of Tourists Expected When Fishing Season Opens

The cold snap that visited Stony Lake around the holiday has given place to a welcome wave of warm weather. The attention of the cottagers has been transferred from fireplaces to screen doors and windows. We have had over a week of almost perfect weather.

It will not be long now till the law of the land will allow us to throw our lines into the water. Things will loosen up then. The fifteenth of June will see an inrush of tourists, and if all predictions be true their number will be legion.

On that day will be inaugurated the regular mail service for Stony Lake points; and only those who have been subjected to the inconvenience of securing their mail by indirect and out-of-the-way routes can fully appreciate its value.

The main wharf at Juniper Island store is still many inches under water. The level of Stony Lake will soon go down with a rush for the river drivers will [illegible] the water as they see fit. It has been done in the past, and there is every reason to believe that it will be the same this season.

We hear a great deal about the conservation of water for power purposes and for navigation, but let a few logs get stranded any place and bang goes the water regardless of either.

The McDonald Lumber Co.'s drive which was boomed at the mouth of Squaw River, Ball Lake, is now passing Buckhorn. The steamer "Empress is towing for them.

Last fall Dr. Husband's wharf was anchored to the Kawartha Park prize package cement wharf. At the present time it is lacking across the approach with its "back up" in the air.

Mr. Arthur Sawers returned to Peterborough on Saturday after a short holiday at "Bonnicastle."

Messrs. H. M. Rice and son spent the week end at "Grassy Island."

Mr. John Butcher is having a boathouse added to his summer establishment.

Messrs. Douglas Carlisle and Harold Hill motored from Peterborough to Lakefield Saturday night and paddled to the Carlisle cottage "Upside-down" Monday morning they departed for the city "rightside up."

The Misses Neil are enjoying a few days' outing on "Leather Isle."

Miss Constance A. Cook, of Buffalo, is the guest of her uncle, Mr. H. W. Stock, at Juniper Island.

Messrs. Percy A. Crane and Ernest McKeeley of Peterborough, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Stubbs at "Restmore."

M. Baptie of Lakefield, spent Sunday at his cottage.

A new flag pole has been delivered at "Shingle-shanty."

The old boathouse, which for many years sheltered the good ship "Estelle," owned by Dr. Race, is lying a wreck in Brown's Bay.

The Dredge "Fenelon" has been operating recently in Lake Katchawanooka opposite "Kandy Kidd Kamp." The "Bob Hall" is paying her attention and is depositing the gravel which she rips from the bed of the river, near the shore south of the "temporary" home of Mr. George Douglas. To-day as we passed a couple of gray-haired inspectors of immaculate appearance were looking her over, and of course, all the men were having a rest.

The many friends of Mrs. James Acton will be pleased to learn that she is greatly improved in health since her recent operation. She will spend a short vacation in the city, [illegible] it will be a complete rest, consequently they will not occupy their cottage "Tawasentha."

$12,000.00 Needed Right Now For The Y. M. C. A.

THE Directors of the Peterborough Young Men's Christian Association have decided that to carry on this helpful work in this City that the sum of $12,000 must be raised in support of the practical work. This sum will be expended so as to directly bring much increased accommodation and ensure added efficiency to carrying on the work. The facilities are now wholly inadequate.

A Campaign has been undertaken among our citizens. Details of this will be placed before the Public from day to day, and the campaign supported with arguments that should convince all that the Y. M. C. A. should be heartily and substantially supported.

Give the matter attention and thought. It is your boy, perhaps, that the Y. M. C. A. is here for. He will make a better man for its associations, and while you are helping your own boy you are helping some other.

We need $12.000. Will you lend a hand. See other Advertisements for Particulars. Canvassing days—TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, JUNE 8th, 9th and 10th.

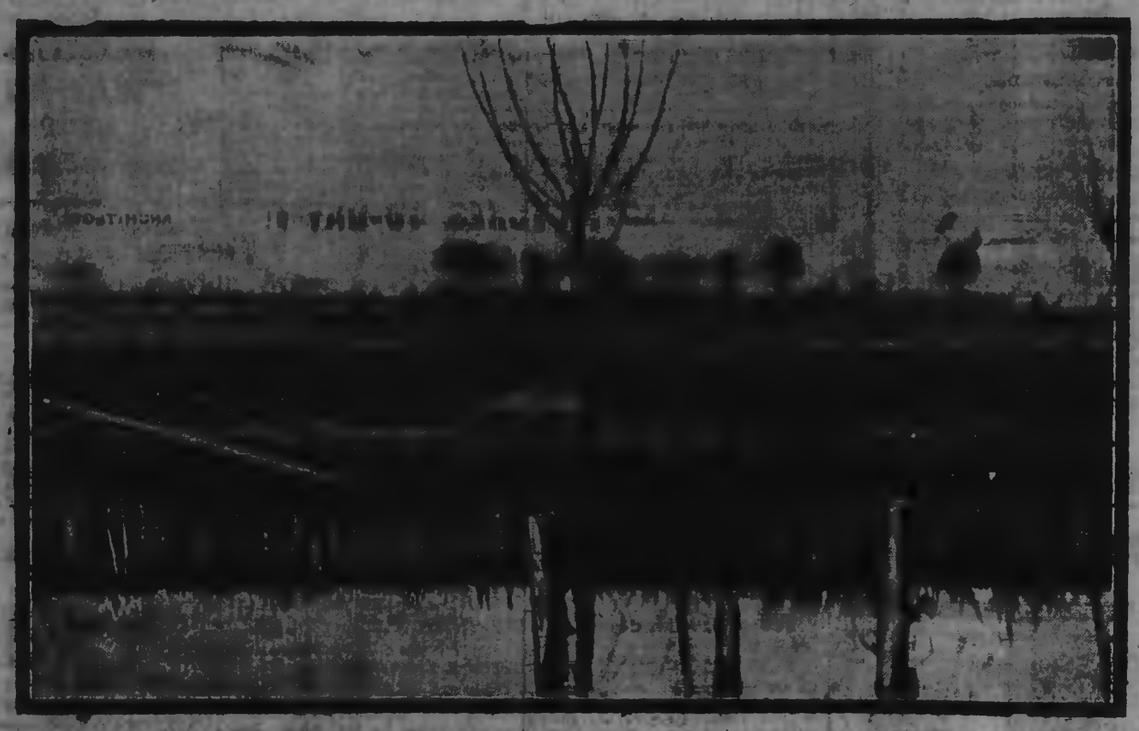
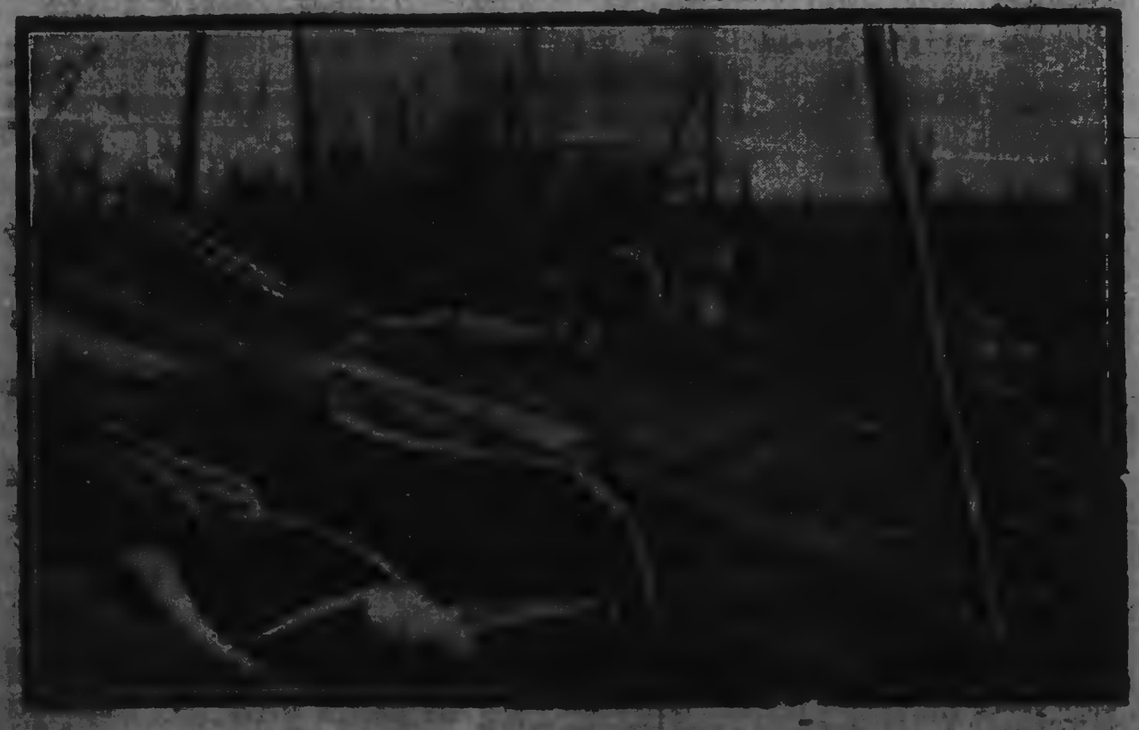
Photos taken under fire from Canadian trenches by officer of the First Canadian Division



(1) These photos are perhaps the most remarkable that have come out of the western war zone. This picture shows a German advance toward the Canadian trench. No details accompany the photos—the censor has probably seen to that—so that it is impossible to specify in what part of the line the photos were taken. Apparently the German advance is a reconnoitring or wire-cutting party as the men are not in mass formation for a charge.



(2) This picture gives a view of the second line of the Canadian trenches.

Stoney Lake Breezes

The Source of Indian River Presents a Pretty Picture

With the possible exception of Eel's Creek, there is no place on Stony Lake so popular as Gilchrist Bay, which includes the source of Indian River. At any time of the year it presents a striking picture for the lovers of nature, but just now it is at the height of its glory. The water in the lake is so high that a raging torrent flows where usually there is a gentle fall.

Almost every shade of green greets the eye from the sombre hues of the pines to the lighter tints of the poplars.

Standing out against the creations of nature is the new cement and steel bridge which carries the Hall's Glen-Crowe's Landing road over the Indian River. This substantial structure was erected last fall by the county and replaces an old wooden one which did duty for many years.

A visit to the Fraser cottage near Burleigh Falls reminds one of a trip through the ancient cities of Egypt.

A forest of stone pillars rise on the summit of the island, towering high in the air, which eventually will receive the beams upon which the mammoth cottage will rest.

The shore line in the vicinity of McCracken's Landing is fast passing into the hands of cottagers. To the south of the Victoria House is the property of J. W. Wilson of Rochester. To the north are: Mr. Choate of Warsaw, Mr. John Brown of Dummer, Mr. J. Hunter of "Glen Oak," Stoney Lake, Mr. Flynn of Havelock, Mr. Sam Hunter the cartoonist of Toronto, Mr. Vincent of Rochester, Mr. Baptie of Lakefield, Dr. Barnes, Jr., of Cleveland, Mr. J. Goulnlock of Toronto, Mr. Loomis and Dr. Barnes, Sr., of Cleveland.

Mr. William Graham visited "Viamede' on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter spent Tuesday and Wednesday in Peterborough.

Mr. James Stubbs spent Wednesday in Peterborough.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. McBain visited their cottage on Tuesday.

Mrs. J. W. McKinney went down to Peterborough on Tuesday to meet her husband, who left Sewickley, Pa., Monday. They came up to Stony Lake on Wednesday.

The Str. 'Stoney Lake,' resplendant in a fresh coat of paint, started the regular trips for the season on Thursday.

—Monty La Rock.

Club for Men of Overseas Service

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

LONDON, June 4.—A club provided for the men of the overseas forces by the Victoria League and the Ladies' Empire Club was opened in Regent Street to-day by Lord Grenfell, who made special reference to the achievements of the Canadians in Northern France. Sir George Perley, in acknowledging the services of the Victoria League, said that it had been for many years a tie between the home and the overseas people. This latest proof of kindness, he said, would be greatly appreciated by Canadians. Lady Drummond of Montreal has subscribed $750 toward the club.

WILDING'S DEATH GREAT LOSS TO TENNIS WORLD

NEW YORK, May 28.—Since the news of the death of Anthony F. Wilding, the great Australian tennis champion in the English campaign around the Dardanelles tennis players in New York have not ceased to talk of his wonderful record.

And in the discussions of Manhattan tennis fans there has been heard much about the untimely death of a man who has been of as much value to the world as Wilding. The young tennis champ was a lieutenant in the Royal Marine Corps and he went to his death as bravely and as calmly as ever he faced an opponent across the net. He was in the prime of his career and rated as the greatest man who ever handled a racket in the history of the game.

Wilding was born in 1883 in New Zealand, and was 32 years old. He began his tennis career when 16 years old, but he did not leap into fame until round about 1905, when he made his first appearance as an international contender in the Davis Cup matches.

WON DAVIS CUP IN 1906

Wilding aided Norman Brooks in winning the Davis Cup for Australia in 1906. In the same year Wilding, playing beside Ritchie, won the English doubles title. Wilding and Brookes were crowned tennis champions in that year and no one has appeared who was able to wrest their laurels from them.

But even greater victories came to Wilding in 1910 when he won the all comers' tournament at Wimbledon, England, and in the challenge round beat Gore down to defeat. In the doubles, teamed with Ritchie, he won again.

Through the years until 1913 he was acclaimed the tennis champion of the world winning all the singles in this time and holding practically every tennis title in Europe.

WILDING-McLOUGHLIN MATCH

The memorable match between Wilding and McLoughlin in 1913, is still fresh in the minds of tennis bugs. Previous to their meeting not a few followers of the soft ball game placed their money on the American. When they faced each other, however, the great Wilding toyed with McLoughlin and won his game easily. That again cinched his title as the most wonderful tennis player in the world. In 1913 Wilding probably reached the zenith of his career, for he did not devote as much time to the practice of the game as he had in former years, and his game was slightly below his old time form.

But there was nothing even in his 1914 playing that can dim claim to the world's champion. He won it brilliantly and kept it consistently, meeting all comers and beating them as only a master can. Tennis players all over the world are still mourning his passing away.

Wilding's death is really the first instance of the killing of an athletic star in this war, for while there have been numerous reports of the death of French and German athletes they have never been confirmed. Wilding was one of England's biggest men in sport and there are none to gainsay him to same title in battle. He died as he lived, fighting squarely, and accepting defeat as bravely as ever he achieved victory.

Campbellford Lacrosse Team Talks Loudly

Johnny Sutherland of the Lacrosse Club has an information bureau almost as elaborate as the Germans. Let us hope it is more accurate. Johnny has secret agents, for instance, in Campbellford, where, at street corner meetings, they have already trimmed the local team.

The 'Ford boys say they have a real lacrosse team which is chiefly built around three Indians of mysterious origin. Johnny has inside intelligence that one of the tourists, or whatever they are, has already departed, and that the burden of the team is beginning to weigh heavily on some of the angels who had undertaken to give Campbellford something over which they could enthuse. As above stated Johnny's foreign henchmen may be jumping at conclusions. It is generally known that Campbellford have been talking loudly and Hastings and Peterborough have already been informed that they haven't a chance in this district. But it's a long way out of the woods. Peterborough's first game is here with Millbrook next week and on the 16th they go to Hastings.

SEVEN MISTAKES OF LIFE.

1—The delusion that individual advancement is made by crushing others down.

2—The tendency to worry about things that cannot be changed or corrected.

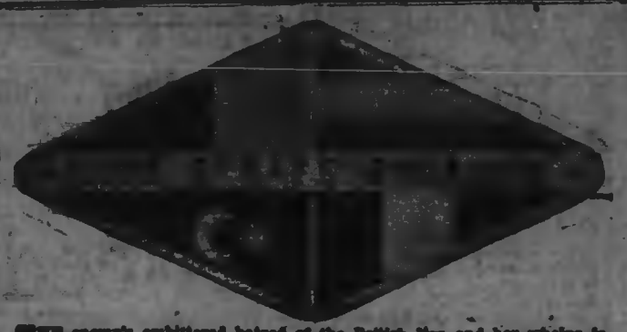
3—Insisting that a thing is impossible because we ourselves cannot accomplish it.

4—Attempting to compel other men to believe and live as we do.

5—Failure to refine the mind by acquiring the habit of reading good literature.

6—Refusing to set aside trivial preferences in order that important things may be accomplished.

7—The failure to establish the habit of saving money.



THE enemy's embittered hatred of the British lion and her whelps is manifested by a brooch with the words "Gott strafe England" (God punish England) across the centre, one of which the Canadian Pacific Railway secured as a reminder of the relentless nature of the foe with which we are now in conflict. The brooch is in colors, the two top sections showing the Austro-Hungarian flag colors, and the two bottom the Turkish and German. Millions of these brooches are now being worn in the Central European and Turkish Empires, and even the postal letters in these countries are stamped with a similar inscription.

The Civil and Criminal List For the June Sittings

General Sessions and County Court Will Open in Peterboro' on Tuesday Next—His Honour Judge Huycke Will Preside —The Appearances

The June sittings of the General Sessions and County Court will open in Peterborough on Tuesday next with His Honour Judge Huycke presiding. The civil list is represented by six cases and the criminal side by two.

The case of King versus Alexander Lillico will come up for trial. Lillico, who resides in Brownton, is charged with entering a house with intent to assault. He was committed for trial by Police Magistrate Dumble.

The other case concerns Gordon Reynolds, and Robert Peters, of Asburner, who are charged with removing trees off the Peterborough Lumber Company's limits. The preliminary hearing was before County Police Magistrate Langley.

List of Jury Cases.

Edward Greer is plaintiff in an action to recover the sum of $344 from Albert Henry McIntyre, alleged to be wages due him in connection with a contract under which plaintiff was hired to defendant for five months at $60 a month. Both parties to the action reside in Otonabee.

Mr. G. N. Gordon is appearing for the plaintiff and the firm of Dumble and Johnston for the defendant.

Suit for Damages.

Frank Harding versus William Batten, both farmers, residing in Dummer Township, constitutes an action in which plaintiff claims $1,500 damages and costs. Harding charges Batten with falsely and maliciously causing to be spoken and published of the plaintiff that he had been guilty of stealing four thousand feet of pine lumber from defendant's driving shed and that defendant did at various other times and places maliciously speak ill of him.

Peck, Kerr and McElderry are appearing for the plaintiff, and Mr. G. N. Gordon for the defendant.

Commission Claimed.

Dennis Corkery is defendant in an action in which Edward Huff, plaintiff, seeks to recover $800, which it is claimed defendant agreed to pay as commission on acceptance by James Hoolihan of defendant's offer to sell his hotel business, known as the King George Hotel. The defendant Corkery denies the claim and enters counter-claim for $800 by reason, it is claimed, of plaintiff stating to others that the hotel was tied up under agreement of sale, and thereby preventing defendant selling to others.

Mr. F. D. Kerr is named as solicitor for plaintiff, and Mr. G. N. Gordon will act for defendant.

Sawmill Accident.

John E. Clark has instituted action against the Spencer Brothers of Havelock. Plaintiff, who resides in Campbellford, claims that on December 19th, 1914, while in the employ of the defendants, he sustained bodily injury by having the tendons of his right arm severed at the wrist through coming in contact with the saw of a jointer, and that the said arm has become useless, incapacitating plaintiff for his work as a labourer. Plaintiff alleges that the machine in question was not properly guarded. He claims $1,500 and costs.

Mr. F. D. Kerr is appearing for the plaintiff, and Mr. G. N. Gordon for Waggon Broke Down.

Albert P. Hardman versus David Wilson, both residents of Otonabee, are concerned in an action in which plaintiff seeks to recover $1,000 and costs for permanent injuries said to have been received as a result of defendant's milk waggon being in a dangerous condition. Plaintiff was employed by defendant as a milk driver.

Mr. G. N. Gordon is appearing for the plaintiff, while defendant is represented by the firm of Peck, Kerr and McElderry.

Balance Due.

Frederick T. Mahood is suing John Hayes for $230.04 said to be balance due for concrete work. The sum of $25 is also claimed for costs.

The appearances are Ruddy and Burnham for plaintiff, and Mr. D. O'Connell for defendant.

Stock Markets

New York Stocks

A. H. Stanton & Co., Brokers, report the following:

NEW YORK, June 4.—The resiliency of the stock market was never demonstrated under such unprecedented conditions as it has been within the past few months, and also within the past day or two. After a prolonged and decided slump following unfavourable news, the market has rebounded to an extent scarcely anticipated by the most sanguine bull trader. Stocks that a few days ago were fluctuating around low levels are from five to ten and even fifteen points higher, with a promise of further increases. The movement is general and extends along the entire board. It includes everything from rails to "war specialties". The latter have been particularly active as was to be expected, although they suffer equally with the rest of the market when the tendency is bearish. There is every reason to believe that the present upward movement will continue. This afternoon the market closed particularly strong.

PTE. CONEYBEARE REACHES ENGLAND

LINDSAY, June 4.—Mrs. George Coneybeare, William Street, is in receipt of a letter from her son, Howard, who enlisted in the 46th Regiment, and who left with the 24th Battalion for England. It was written on May 12th at Sandling Camp, near Hythe, England, and is dated May 12th. The soldiers were twelve days crossing the ocean. The 21st Batt., Kingston, are in the same camp, and there are all told, several thousand under canvas. During the last two days of the trip, as the transport was nearing England, Howard says he saw a number of battleships. Three torpedo boats and one battleship sailed alongside to guard their ship. The soldiers slept in the life boats six nights with their life belts on.

Funeral of Miss Ruby Adamson

Many Friends Paid Their Last Respects This Afternoon—Numerous Floral Tributes

No Peterborough young lady was ever laid to rest with more feeling of sorrow and devotion than Miss Ruby Irene Adamson, who passed away in Nicholls Hospital on Wednesday afternoon, and whose body was borne to its resting place in Little Lake Cemetery this afternoon. The simple funeral service was commenced at the residence of the parents, Mr. and Mrs. William P. Adamson, 313 Stewart Street, at 2.30 o'clock, by Rev. J. P. Wilson, Pastor of Charlotte Street Methodist Church, of which the late Miss Adamson was a member. To the large number of relatives and friends present, in the flower-filled room, the beautiful words from the 5th Chapter of the Gospel according to St. Mark: "The damsel is not dead, but sleepeth," brought comfort. Rev. Mr. Wilson made touching reference to the character and life of the late Miss Adamson, conveying the message that the deceased had merely passed home, where she waited to be re-united with her loved ones.

The Pall-Bearers.

The pall-bearers were: Messrs. Frank Spriggs, Ross Dobbin, John Laing, Wilbert Regan, Percy Hooper and E. V. Warne. Among the out-of-town friends who came to Peterborough to be present at the funeral were: Mrs. T. J. Main and her daughter, Mrs. Robert Patterson, of Toronto.

Many Flowers.

The wonderful wreaths, pillows and baskets of flowers, which made the rooms fragrant, were remarkable for lovely colour combination, and brought with them nothing of the suggestion of death. The number of floral gifts was over seventy, two cabs were necessary to convey them all in the funeral cortege; from organizations to which the deceased young lady belonged, a number from the different branches of Charlotte street Methodist church, from the firms where she was employed, and from the many friends of the young lady. Indeed so numerous were they it would be almost impossible to make mention of all the individual gifts, but some of them included a wreath from Messrs. Hall and Hall and one from Canadian Canoe Co., the firms with which Miss Adamson was employed in the city, a cross from Corinthian Lodge, A. F. and A. M., of which Mr. Adamson, father of the deceased young lady, was a member, from the W.T.S. Girls' Sewing Club; tokens from the Mission Circle, Ladies' Aid, C.L.A., and Official Board, all of Charlotte Street Methodist Church, one each from the Business Girls' Club of Peterborough and Gurney Foundry Company, Toronto, and Metal, Shingle and Siding Company, of Preston, and many others, including tokens from friends in Montreal, Toronto and other outside points.

The gift of the members of the W. T. S. Girls' Sewing Club, in the form of a broken wheel, one spoke missing, indicating the first break in their number, was an especially touching tribute to the one who has passed away.

The funeral cortege was a particularly long one, and those present at the residence and the grave were representative, paying their respects to the memory of one of the city's most popular young ladies.

FUNERAL OF LATE DAVID GUIRY

The funeral of Mr. David Guiry, of Ennismore, whose death occurred as result of injuries sustained in an automobile accident, took place this morning to St. Martin's Church, Ennismore, and thence to St. Martin's cemetery, and was very largely attended. The service was in charge of Rev. Father Guiry, a nephew of the deceased, assisted by Rev. Dean McColl, as deacon. Rev. Father O'Brien, as sub-deacon, and Rev. Father Fitzpatrick as master of ceremonies. The pall-bearers were Messrs. Patrick Clancy, Patrick Crough, Eugene Moloney, Samuel Killen, Daniel Kennedy and Daniel Crough.

SOCIAL AND PERSONAL

Miss Jessie Glover returned to Rochester yesterday, having been home for the past week.

Miss Maggie McGrath, Aylmer street, has returned home from a visit to Toronto.

The many friends of Mrs. Thomas Kelly will regret to learn of her very serious condition at the present time.

DEATH OF REV. FATHER T. J. SPRATT

Death came peacefully yesterday at Hotel Dieu, Kingston, when Rev. Father Thomas J. Spratt, brother of His Grace, Archbishop Spratt, of Kingston, and Mr. R. P. Spratt, of Lindsay, passed to his eternal rest after a lingering illness.

The deceased, who was born in Lindsay, was one of the best known clergymen in the province and was up to the time of his illness, parish priest of Wolfe Island, where he was greatly beloved by all classes. He was a clergyman of high, scholarly attainments, a zealous worker in the services of his church, and his demise will be greatly felt.

Besides his two brothers, the late Rev. Father Spratt is survived by one sister, Mrs. Wm. O'Keefe, of Detroit.

CAPTURED PEAK 7,400 FEET HIGH

Italians Take Summit of Monte Nero on the Isonzo Front

A NOTABLE TRIUMPH

ROME, June 5.—The capture by the Italians of the summit of Monte Nero, a peak 7,400 feet high, dominating Tolmino, on the upper reaches of the Isonzo, was announced in the official statement issued here last evening. This victory was won after several days of the heaviest fighting so far in the campaign against Austria.

Monte Nero is in the region where the Italians made their first definite crossing of the Isonzo, and the invaders are now apparently in direct touch with the main fortified positions of the Austrians. The report of the chief of staff lays stress on the particularly difficult nature of the ground and the formidable entrenchments which the Italians had to force. These, in addition to the heavy rains which have been falling for a week, make the achievement of the Italians a notable triumph.

RUSSIANS LAUNCHING SERIES OF HOT ATTACKS ON GERMAN FLANK BATTLE CONTINUES FIERCE AS EVER

Heavy Fighting is Now in Progress Along Nearly the Entire Galician Front---Loss of Fortress is Viewed in Petrograd With Equanimity.

GREAT CONFLICT NEAR STRY

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, June 5.—Heavy fighting is now in progress along nearly the entire Galician front, and, according to information from Austrian sources, a decisive conclusion to the Russian campaign in that province is looked for by the hostile commanders. A statement given out to the press yesterday from the field headquarters of the Austrian army declares:

"The Russian rear guards are fighting delaying actions south of the Dniester River against the Austro-German forces advancing from Stry to cover the passage of the river. The Russians north of Peremysl are launching a series of the most desperate attacks against Gen. von Mackensen's army. Here they are making use of new reserves and at the same time they are exerting heavy pressure against the troops commanded by Archduke Joseph Ferdinand in the triangle between the River San and the River Vistula."

The same authority asserts that the Russian offensive in Bukowina has failed of its object.

GREAT EVENTS IMPENDING.

The correspondent of the Berlin Lokalanseiger with the German forces around Stry, telegraphing under date of June 2, announces that events of the highest importance are developing along the Dniester River north of Stry. The Russians, he says, are holding tenaciously north and northwest of Sambor, where they have seven lines of defences. They are also desperately resisting the front and left flank of Gen. von Mackensen's army, which is moving to the east from Radymo between Jaroslau and Peremysl. He mentions the fact that the Russians are equally enterprising in the region of the lower San. He prophecies that some very hard battles are imminent in mid-Galicia.

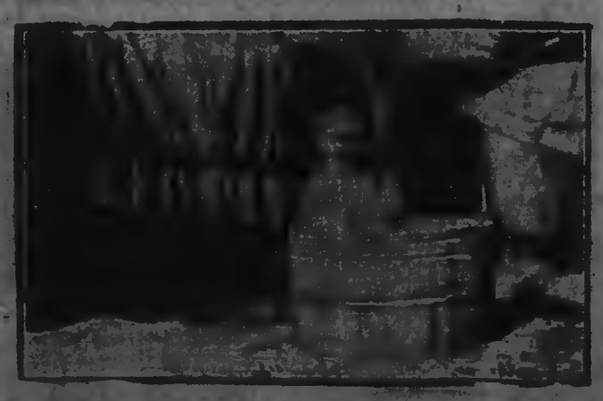
REMOVED ALL BATTERIES.

The Russian official report on the fall of Peremysl, issued Thursday night in Petrograd, says: "We carried away from Peremysl the materials taken from the Austrians. This finished, we removed on Tuesday the last of our batteries. The following night our troops, pursuant to orders, evacuated the fronts to the north and west of the positions surrounding the city and formed a more concentrated force to the east."

News of the fall of Peremysl apparently has awakened no apprehension in Petrograd. It is conceded that the Germans have won a victory, but the strategic importance of the fortress is declared to have been nullified before the Russians relinquished it. A leading Russian military expert is quoted as follows:

"Having crossed the River San with two armies which were to begin operations against the fortress, the Germans found themselves in an extremely dangerous and unstable position; being attacked on their left flank they were compelled to shorten the strip of ground they occupied on the right of the San. Any reverse of these armies would have turned the German movement into a catastrophe, since retreat to the rear would have been cut off by the River San and the pressure of the Russian forces at Sieniawa, on the German left. Accordingly the Germans were forced to hurl their attack against the fortress, throwing forward enormous forces.

"The most convenient directions for attack appeared to be from the north and the northwest. These were the weakest sides, and at the same time they were nearest to the German force which had crossed the river. The indefensibility of the fortress was due to the fact that the Austrians had blown up the most important forts upon their evacuation of Peremysl, coupled with the configuration of the land. This was unsuitable to a stubborn defence, for the reason that its undulations made it possible for the enemy to hide his approaches."



Pictures From the Front—Staff-Sgt. S. A. Shaw of the 3rd Battalion, 1st contingent, is here shown taking an open-air shower bath in Belgium. "It is a great luxury and fully appreciated," he writes. His head is covered with soap in the picture, he is not bald.

Germany Is Running Short Of Ammunition

LONDON, June 5.—The advent of the coalition Government has had a most beneficial result upon the general situation in London. The tone of depression noticeable for the last two or three weeks about the way the war is getting on seems to have disappeared and an optimistic note heard.

This may be due in part to the confidence in the new Government, but it is also due in a great measure to the widespread belief that Germany cannot stand the enormous expenditure of ammunition for their heavy artillery.

Many think that before long they will be found to be seriously short in that respect and this will be taken advantage of by the allies.

The vagaries of the censorship increase. It seems impossible to put any systematic plan in operation, and despatches which are allowed to go forth one day are held up the next.

Mens' Home Will Be Closed

During the Winter Months 3,580 Meals Were Provided—How the City's Contribution Was Spent

The Finance Committee of the City Council is in receipt of a letter from Adjutant McElhiney of the Salvation Army, expressing his intention of closing up the men's home for the summer months. Since its inception 3,580 meals have been provided, 1,212 beds and 182 families have been supplied with clothing, provisions, and other necessities of life. In addition to this a free labour bureau has been in operation. This will be continued for the benefit of the city. The women's home, in the south end of the city will remain open for a while longer, as it contains five women and ten children who have nowhere to go. In closing, Adjt. McElhiney conveys his thanks for the aid given by the city. It will be remembered that the Council made a grant of fifty dollars a month for the maintenance of the homes.

PIMPLES SO BAD ASHAMED TO GO OUT

Also Terrible Rash on Arms. Itched and Burned. Used Cuticura. Eruption All Disappeared.

Cressy, Ontario.—"For a long time I suffered from pimples and blackheads the worst way and I got a terrible rash on my arms. When I got in bed at night and got warm I would have to scratch my arms till blood came. The pimples all came to matter form and then they broke leaving lots of little marks on my face. I was ashamed to go out with my friends. They also itched and burned until I could have torn my face and arms. I could not sleep at night and I rubbed my arms till they bled.

"I thought I would try the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I found great relief and in a short time my pimples and eruptions all disappeared." (Signed) George W. Kay, Aug. 10, 1914.

IS STRIKING HIS MIGHTIEST BLOWS NOW

Powerful German Offensive Has Been Launched Against The British at Ypres

LONDON, Eng., June 5.—With every resource at his command the Kaiser is to-day striking his mightiest blows against the ring of enemies encircling his empire.

A powerful German offensive has been launched against the British at Ypres. From the region of Hooge, the Teutons have renewed the bombardment of the old Flanders town, preparatory to a grand assault and an attempt to break the British front.

German submarines are combing the waters of the Von Tirpitz "war zone," sinking everything within their power.

In Galicia, General Mackenzen is pressing on in a desperate attempt to crush the Russians and drive them out of Galicia by rapid hammering strokes.

In Russian Courland, in South-eastern Poland, north of Arras and at several other sectors of their double battlefront, Germans are driving hard against enemy's positions.

Despatches from Amsterdam and the Hague and official communiques from German, English and French war offices all point to the beginning of a new effort to push the British back from Ypres. German reinforcements already have been sent into action along the Menin road and bloody fighting has occurred at Hooge, only two miles east of Ypres.

All reports to the British government indicate that conditions inside the German empire are rapidly growing worse. Authorities are reported to be taking drastic means to conserve the nation's food supply until another crop is harvested.

The blockade of the German coast apparently has met with success.

Confronted with these conditions the Kaiser is reported to have ordered a desperate attempt to overwhelm the allies by a series of great rushes before the end of June.

FRENCH ARE SHELLING THE ENEMY AT METZ

Airmen Drop Bombs on the Southern Front of Entrenched Camp

ERECTED HUGE GUN

PARIS, June 5.— The Krupps have evidently erected a huge gun similar to that used in the bombardment of Dunkirk from Zeebrugge at the nearest point within their lines to the French fortress at Verdun. The War Office statement last night speaks of the attempt to bombard Verdun by long range, but the shells, the report states, failed to reach their objective. The French, on the other hand, bombarded the southern front of the entrenched camp of the enemy at Metz and apparently did considerable damage.

Simultaneously in Flanders and the province of Artois, France, come official reports of the attacks by the enemy on positions recently captured by the British and French. The Germans have succeeded by the British north-east of Givenchy, and have [illegible] Hooge, part of which the British still held, although for a time the British were compelled to evacuate the buildings which they had captured Monday night. The Germans also claim to be in possession of the sugar refinery at Souchez, the loss of which they have not previously acknowledged. While these in themselves are considered small matters in military circles here, they are believed to be the forerunners of a resumption of fighting on a larger scale. For some time the French have been slowly, but surely diving out the Germans from strong positions north of Arras, and in the "German line." To stop this movement and also to relieve their troops who are suffering very severely from British attacks and through their own counter-attacks, the Germans have despatched a lot of new troops to the Arras-Ypres line, and apparently are making an effort to take the initiative.

The Daily Mail correspondent at Rotterdam says:

"It is reported as significant that the capture of Peremysl by the Austro-Germans has been followed by the strict closing again of the Belgian frontier. This measure hitherto has presaged the movement of German troops.

THE BRITISH OFFICIAL.

Field Marshal Sir John French in a communication made public this evening reports that during the last few days the fighting on the western line has been mainly confined to artillery engagements.

"On the night of the 30th of May," the report says, "we seized some outbuildings in the grounds of a ruined chateau at Hooge. Since then our trenches there have been subjected to a heavy bombardment.

"Fighting on a small scale has been continuous. At one time we were forced to evacuate the buildings taken by us, but last night we recaptured them.

"North-east of Givenchy last night we expelled the enemy from his trenches on a front of 200 yards, taking 40 prisoners. Our infantry, however, was unable to remain in occupation of these trenches after daylight, owing to the enemy's fire."

The Daily Mail correspondent at Copenhagen telegraphs:

"A gigantic Zeppelin of an entirely new type had its trial journey over the international route between Sweden and Denmark on June 3. The airship differs considerably in form and dimensions from the earlier Zeppelins. It is heavily armoured and is supplied with three reservoirs of poisonous gas.

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

He smiled what he could, but it was a purty wobbly grin, and the coffee didn't quite hit the spot. Still, it helped a little and he sez: "How long you goin' to keep me prisoner?"

"Why, land o' love, man," sez I, "I haven't kept you prisoner at all. Just the minute that you get to be you again, I'll turn you loose; but I couldn't abide my own company any longer if I'd left you back at Big Jeff's in the state you were in."

"You're white," sez he. "You've all been mighty patient with me; but my star's a bad one. Take it all around and I reckon I've got into more trouble from tryin' to do wrong—though come to think of it, I've generally had to use wrong when I wanted to bring right. Still, if I've kept Flames from startin' to drink, I'm willin' to pay the piper."

"You goin' on to drink again when you get loose?" sez I.

"No, I'm not," sez he, in earnest; "but like as not, some fool 'll try to make me drink, and that'll sure cause an explosion of some kind. Red is a good sort. I hope he won't fret about this."

"Well, as far as my vote goes," sez I, "I wouldn't mourn noticeable if he did fret a few of his scarlet whiskers white, or even till he got bald on the chin."

"You all gave me a fair show," sez he, after a time, "and I've tried to let you see that I appreciated it; but a feller can't buy back his past no matter how much of his future he's willin' to pay for it."

"Are you willin' to stay quiet in this shack until I come back about noon?" sez I. "The fever 'll be out of your blood by that time and you can make up your real mind with some show of satisfaction."

"I can't stay here any longer," sez he. "I've got to get out and ride."

"Will you agree not to go in the direction of Big Jeff's and to come back here as soon as you've rode your nerves loose again?" sez I, for his eyes were glitterin' bright and I didn't like the way he kept shiftin' 'em.

"I won't promise nothin'," sez he, getin' pettish.

"Then I'm goin' to tie you up again," sez I. He fought again' it and I was surprised at his strength, but I was too heavy for him, and after a long struggle I managed to get a noose over his wrist and a hitch around his neck. I'd jerk up his wrist, snub up the slack on his neck, and by the time I had bent his arm up to his shoulder-blades he was beyond strugglin'. I had a regular, movable bed in my shack, and I tied passed under the bed and outside one of the legs. I did the same with his feet, usin' hangman's knots and leavin' him as much play in the rope as I could, without runnin' any risk of him gettin' a knot in his teeth.

"Don't jerk on those knots, Tom Smith," sez I, "for they don't slack off when you've once pulled 'em tight. Now I'm goin' to have Isaac and Flames wait on you, and when I get back, I hope to find you sleepin' like a babe."

The struggle seemed to have done him good for his face looked calmer though his hands shook noticeable.

They were about through breakfast when I arrived and I didn't take long at mine. As soon as I had finished I took Flames and Isaac up to my shack, told 'em to let Tom Smith have whatever he wanted except his liberty, and hurried off to the corral. We took the bulls out to the herd and started 'em off toward the south-west corner of the range where the grass was the sweetest at this season, and then I came back. On the way I saw the outlaw bulls dustin' around as if they intended to mix in with the herd again and I went back and got three of the boys and we headed the outlaws down towards the brakes. They were purty mean and prancy and I declared war again' 'em then and there, tellin' the boys that any time they felt like a little sport to get a rifle from Jim and go bull-huntin'.

It was near noon before I got back to the ranch house and just as I turned my pony into the small corral, I saw Flames sneakin' down towards Crusader's stable, and I sneaked through the bushes so as to reach it from the other side. I had a lot of confidence in the kid's cleverness, though mighty little in his judgment, but I knew he wouldn't have left Tom Smith unless Tom Smith was all right. I got to the stable first, but before I could slip in, I heard Isaac inside.

We had all got to look upon Isaac about the same as if he'd been a stray dog of the yellow variety: we didn't expect any good of him, but once in a while we found him amusin', and he played around about as he pleased. I found a hole in the chinkin' and looked in, and there was Isaac standin' close to the bars and talkin' to Crusader like as if he'd been a full brother to the silver gray terrier which was standin' back of Isaac watchin' intent to see what wonderful miricle his master was about to pull off this time.

Isaac was wearin' a garment which he called a smokin' jacket. It was gaudy checkered with big, quilted sleeves and collar of some plum coloured stuff, and nothin' set his whiskers off to such an evil advantage as this riggin' did. Isaac was all the time fretzin' for fear some animal wasn't entirely comfortable; but it did seem to me that even he could have seen how impossible it was for a hoss not in the pink of condition to wear burnished satin like what Crusader was sportin' that mornin'. Jim had fed and watered him, but it made him pettish to be kept indoors and Jim had forgot to turn him loose after we had taken the bulls out of his lot. He stood at the far side of his big box-stall nursin' his pout and not carin' a hang about any little man in hay-coloured whiskers and a splotchy smokin' jacket.

"Pore old Crusader," cooed Isaac, "did him have to stay in a mean old stuffy stable and did him—"

Well, I'd bite my tongue twenty times in tryin' to say all the googlegush that Isaac unwound to that hoss; but finally Crusader took a few steps towards Isaac and pricked his ears at him inquisitive. "Ah-ha," sez Isaac, "no animal in the world can resist kindness!"

Crusader took a good look at Isaac, saw that he was neither a hoss'n's nor a food product, and slouched back to his corner again. Isaac kept on cullin' him nice old feller, pretty little pony, and such like epithets until Crusader sauntered over towards the bars again to see what in thunder ailed the human. Isaac was a firm believer in the theory that no animal can look a human in the eye; but Crusader had never heard of this theory and he wouldn't have taken any stock in it if he had. When he drew nigh to the bars Isaac got close to 'em also and trained his eyes on the hoss as though he was goin' to snake-charm him right now. He put his face close to a space in the bars and stared steady and I reckon he felt mighty commandin'; but he reminded me more of one o' these fuzzy worms 'n anything else I could think of.

Now a hoss, no more nor any one else, likes to have some stranger come and yap and stare at him when he's got somethin' on his mind he wants to think out to a finish, and Crusader got sufficiently irritated after a bit to see if something couldn't be done to restore peace, so he stalked over to Isaac, and Isaac thought it was a case of the dumb brute yielding to the eye of reason and he reached in a hand to pat the deserving dumb brute on the nose.

Before I would have had time to yell, Crusader's jaws had popped like a bear-trap and from that on, Isaac had good cause to venerate his smokin' jacket. The hoss had sure intended to remove the arm; but when his mouth got full o' padded sleeve, he thought he had turned the trick, so he snapped his teeth and began to shake his mouthful. Isaac jerked back with a howl, for Crusader had managed to twist off a pinch of flesh, and now the hoss's eyes were blazin' as he tried to pull Isaac in through the bars with a full intention of reducin' him to fractions. The sleeve came uncoupled at the shoulder and Isaac flaunted back again' the wall with a bang.

He jumped up and came as close to the bars as he dared, and stood there shakin' his first at the boss, while the silver blue terrier stood behind him and barked what he intended to do the first time he caught Crusader outside. "You vile beast, you!" howled Isaac. "You ill-natured, ungrateful, ugly souled, man-eatin' vampire! I hope you are kept in that stall until you go blind. And if they dig a hole and bury you in it up to your ears, I wouldn't hold an umberella over you if it hailed hail-stones as big as door-knobs!"

Isaac was clear out of temper. He stopped yowlin' to rub the soot where a piece had been pinched off his arm, and then he thought of his umberella and he picked it up from where it was leanin' again' the wall and holdin' it in both hands, he walked up to the bars. "Come over here," he yelled, "come over here, you coward, and I'll punch out your eyes one after another."

WOMAN WOULD NOT GIVE UP

Though Sick and Suffering; At Last Found Help in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Richmond, Pa. — "When I started taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was in a dreadfully rundown state of health, had internal troubles, and was so extremely nervous and prostrated that if I had given in to my feelings I would have been in bed. As it was I had hardly strength at times to be on my feet and what I did do was by a great effort. I could not sleep at night and of course felt very bad in the morning, and had a steady headache.

"After taking the second bottle I noticed that the headache was not so bad. I rested better, and my nerves were stronger. I continued its use until it made a new woman of me, and now I can hardly realize that I am able to do so much as I do. Whenever I know any woman in need of a good medicine I highly praise Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound." — Mrs. FRANK CLARK, 3146 N. Tulip St., Richmond, Pa.

Candid Misgivings.

"When I go home at night," said the querulous man, "my wife always seems glad to see me."

"Is there anything surprising about that?"

"I don't know how to look at the matter. When I look into the glass I can't help feeling that anybody who is glad to see me must have mighty little artistic sense."—Washington Star.

A Cold Night in China.

One of the facts that ineffaceably cut into my memory during my first winter, some years ago, in Newchwang was the finding on one morning about New Year's time thirty-five masses of ice, each mass having been a living man at 10 o'clock the preceding night. The thermometer was a good bit below zero. The men had just left the opium dens, where they had been enjoying themselves. The keen air sent them to sleep, and they never wakened.—North China Herald.

The Lancer Snake.

There is a snake called the lancer, which lives in South America and is very ready with its fangs. It is a small, brown, insignificant beast, but its bite induces a sort of imaginary swelling all over the victim's body. He feels as if every inch of him were being strained to breaking point, and the agony which results is too awful for words. Generally, however, the excess of pain drives the bitten man mad before very long, and in four hours he dies—a senseless imbecile.

HOME HEALTH CLUB

By DR. DAVID L. REEDER

A Composite Letter: Over a score of years ago one of your articles published in a Chicago newspaper, stated that certain earnest physicians who were then unknown to fame were devoting their lives to find the causes of many diseases that were at that time called incurable. You also stated that you would keep your readers informed from time to time of progress made. Now, I have eagerly read your articles on health each week during all these years and have nearly if of them preserved in my scrap book. I have from time to time acted with great satisfaction various reports of progress made but only once or twice have you mentioned the names of the men whose work you have been watching.

I am always glad to see due credit given and would be pleased to know more about these men and their work. Also I would like to know if a cure has been found for cancer and for tuberculosis as well as Bright's disease.

Answer: The above letter is made up from many, and yet it is in substance the same as I receive daily. I am going to tell you something about remedies and diseases as well as about men.

One of the best home remedies I hve come across in all the years since I first began the study of human ailments and remedies came from a layman. I have used and recommended it in peritonitis, appendicitis, pneumonia and many other similar conditions and always with satisfactory results. The man's name? I could not pick it out of the many hundreds that have, out of their love for humanity, given me their best help, so that I could help others. Afterwards I found, however, that my mother had known and used the formula in helping to care for the neighbours' as well as her own family.

About cancer, well I have watched the work of one man for a long time. I was afraid to tell of what he was doing, because I did not wish to arouse false hopes or be laughed at. I will say, however, that one very bad case of the dread disease has shown no symptoms of recurrence eight yers after it was successfully treated by him. So far as has had no failure to report, and one case that came under my observaton both before and after treatment was, I believe, the worst I have ever seen. The prognosis of three physicians before the treatment started, was that the patient could not live over three months That was nearly five months ago and I had a letter from her son last week saying that she had just returned from a walk of two miles and was not even weary. She is 79 years old and appears to be a well woman. I wish I was at liberty to tell you all about this treatment, but still more proof must be submitted. There have been too many announcements of certain cures and vast sums of money spent only to find them failures.

Another method that I have been observing and encouraging as much as possible has had great success in cases of Bright's disease and epilepsy and I believe the day is not far distant when the work of these men will receive due recognition as the truly specific means of cure for these various diseases, but their methods and theory of disease is so radically different from the old ways of procedure that time only will prove them to all men. I will say, however, that no surgery is used and but very little medicine, what is used, however, seems to do the work perfectly. In a personal letter I have told you more of the men and their methods, but they are working for results and not publicity. The Doctor who really does things usually gets credit after he is dead.

June Bridesmaids Simply Dressed

One of the most perplexing questions which a bride must decide is that of the costumes and accessories for her attendants, especially if these are numerous, as one must consider not only the colour and style which may be becoming to the majority, says a writer in the New York Tribune, but also the varying size of purse, from the well-stuffed to the limp, lean one. The expense of costumes planned has often brought dismay to a young girl, curtailing her expenditures for other necessary clothes in a harrowing manner.

A considerate bride will not ask her friends to purchase expensive frocks and hats, especially if they are not individually becoming. The note of simplicity so strongly emphasized now offers a solution in simple white frocks which have similar lines and the accessories uniform in colour and design.

These accessories may be made at home at small expense and yet be very fascinating. A group of girls in white with wreaths and muffs and floating ribbon forms a most attractive picture. Broad sashes with dashing bows and slippers and stockings of the same colour will carry out the scheme a little more, and all be useful afterwards.

With full skirts the tiny muff of pleated tulle, trimmed with small flowers and floating ribbon, a wreath of fine flowers and floating ribbons on the head recall the picturesque days of Louis XV. While one never tires of the combination of blue and pink, there are other charming arrangements, such as violets and tea roses, or fine yellow flowers with primrose ribbons of taffeta, or lilies of the valley with pink roses. The maid of honour may select one of the colours for her accessories and have them all of yellow or pink or one of whatever combination is used.

A large muff is of satin or silk with a soft covering of chiffon. It has an inner flounce of the deeper rose colour and large chiffon roses with pale green chiffon leaves. The dangling tassels may be of silver or pearl strands. The muff is easily constructed, as it is made to simply throw over the hands, an inside layer of cotton giving it softness.

The roses are made by rolling folds of chiffon very tightly for the centre, and then gradually looser until the outer are large and soft. The same idea may be carried out in daisies, using pointed ends of white satin ribbon for the petals with shirred centre of yellow chiffon or silk. The Castle band and coiffure, looped and tucked under at the ears, is appropriate in conjunction with the muff. A large rose, daisies or pearl ornaments may decorate the band or it may be quite simple.

With either muff may be worn a large transparent hat with streamers or baskets of flowers may replace the muffs when the wreaths are worn.

ECZEMA ON THE HAND.

Mr. Peterson, South Bay, Ont., writes: "For years I suffered a sort of eczema on the hand. I tried four different doctors, giving each a fair trial, but the disease grew worse and spread to my arm. I got Dr. Chase's Ointment, and it has entirely cured me. I give you my name because I want other sufferers to know about this splendid Ointment."

Children Are Never Born Near Sighted

One has only to look about him to see that nowadays many more children are wearing glasses than used to be the case. The reason undoubtedly is that the average child has more school work than formerly and that among all classes young eyes are continually being used for near work to a greater extent. During the growing period of the child the outer envelope or supporting tissue of the eyeball does not attain its full degree of firmness and hardness, and any strain on the focussing muscles has a tendency to make the eyeball stretch. This stretching of the eyeball is really the condition which is commonly known as near-sightedness and is caused in most instances by strain in reading.

Many people believe that a child may be born near-sighted, but this is not the case. Near-sightedness always results from strain and in the great majority of cases can be prevented or at least kept down to low degrees.

It requires no special knowledge to appreciate the fact that a tissue when stretched is weaker than before and is likely to go on stretching, and this is the danger in near-sighted eyes. Such eyes are apt to stretch and grow worse until the child attains its full growth and the tissues have a chance to become hard and firm, hence it is during the period of growth that damage to the eyes is most apt to occur.

If the stretching of the eye-ball goes beyond a certain point the delicate nerve tissues inside the eye are apt to become stretched to an extent which they cannot stand, and tears and breaks occur in them with damage to the sight. The breaks cannot be remedied, nor for that matter can the eye when it is once stretched come back to its normal size.

There is a current belief that near-sightedness runs in families, and this, while partly true, is really an unfortunate misconception, says a writer in the Critic and Guide. Certain families have softer tissues in the eye than others, and their eyes stretch much more easily to a certain degree of strain. This should only make such people more cautious to avoid strain and does not by any means apply that it is necessary for such children to be near-sighted.

The cause of this strain in the young child is astigmatism. There are contributing causes, such as a too short eyeball, poor general health which makes the tissues weaker and less resistant, and also the disposition of the child, some children preferring to sit and read all day, but that astigmatism is the principal cause is well known.

This word is becoming rather familiar and yet its meaning is constantly misunderstood. Many people suppose that astigmatism means a difference in the two eyes, which is entirely wrong. It is an irregularity of the front part of the eye, where the curves should be symmetrical, but are not. This irregularity or inequality of the curves makes objects appear blurred. Certain lines in the objects looked at seem fairly distince, while certain others are blurred, and this causes the eye to make strong muscular efforts to overcome the blur. The strain brought about leads to stiffness and cramps of the muscles with headaches, and in severe cases to an actual stretching of the eyeball.

The surest way to stop the ever-increasing dangers of near-sightedness is to correct astigmatism by means of properly fitting glasses during the growing period.

A FINE COMPLEXION

May Be Had Through the Rich, Red Blood Dr. Williams' Pink Pills Actually Make

A girl's complexion is something more than a matter to concern her vanity. It is an indication of the state of her health. Pallor in a growing girl means a thinning of the blood. Parents should be watchful of their daughters' complexions and should see to it that these danger signs are corrected. When a girl in her teens becomes pale and sallow, if she shows an inclination to tire easily, is listless and inattentive to her work or studies, she needs Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, a tonic which directly and specifically corrects the condition from which she is suffering. A chemical analysis of the blood of such a girl would show it to be deficient in just the elements that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills can supply, and which restore brightness to the eye and colour to the cheeks. Miss Delina Arsenault, Urbainville, P. E. I., is one of the thousands of anaemic girls restored to health by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. She says: "I was attacked with anaemia, and was in such a miserable condition that I had to consult a doctor, and was under his care for several months, but without getting better. I was growing thinner every day, had dark circles around the eyes, I could hardly sleep at night, but tossed restlessly and got up in the morning with black anticipation of the day's miseries before me. I was always bothered with headaches and pains in the back and limbs. My appetite was poor and I frequently vomited what I did eat. My friends feared that I would not recover. I feared that I would not recover. I had often seen Dr. Williams' Pink Pills advertised and finally decided to try them. I used altogether nine boxes and they made me as well as ever I was in my life. All the pains and aches disappeared; my appetite returned. I could sleep soundly at night, and the colour returned to my cheeks. I also gained seventeen pounds in weight. I am now always well, and for this happy condition I have to thank Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

You can get these Pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BELGIUM'S LOST CHILDREN

They Are Rounded Up By Committee of Englishwomen and Neutrals

Mrs. Lewis Chase, an author of note, wife of a famous professor of literature at Columbia University, who has been acting as a war chaperone, escorting girls and babies from Belgium and other places on the war-devastated Continent to England, arrived in New York City, and told some interesting things about the work, although she related no thrilling tales. To a reporter who expected some lurid stories from Mrs. Chase, she said: "I haven't had any thrilling experiences and I suspect those who tell of them. So few see the fighting line." When asked to describe her work, she threw some sidelights on the Belgians. "In the relief work for Belgium a committee of English women attended to all the real, boring drudgery, but of course only neutrals could travel for the Government."

She described bringing deserted Belgian babies to their mothers in England—deserted after the war broke out by the parents, who fled to England. "I shall never be able to understand it, but that is what they did. After they got to safety they wanted the children; and that is why this committee was formed. Those wishing the children brought to England could apply to the committee, then we would go after them. One woman left a two weeks' old baby; and the most beautiful boy I ever saw, a child of four years, was left in a hospital. He would have been taken to a foundlings' hospital if I had not arrived just when I did."

THE NAME OF CANADA NOW HAS NEW MEANING

Glorified Before World by Magnificent Deeds Performed by Her Soldiers at Langemarck and Ypres.

The following thrilling story of Canadian valor, written by Sir Max Aitken, the official "Eye-Witness" with the troops of the Dominion at the front, contains some intensely interesting side-lights on the great battle of Langemarck and the events immediately following that terrific struggle:

A wave of battle is like a wave of the sea. While it advances one is only conscious of its rush and roar, only concerned to measure how far it may advance. As it ebbs the known landmarks show again, and we have leisure to gather observations of comrades who were borne backwards or forwards on the flood. The wave that fell on us around Ypres has christened the Dominion into nationhood; the mere written word "Canada" glows now with a new meaning before all the civilised world. She has proved herself and not unworthily; but those who survive of the men who have won us our world right to pride are too busy to trouble their heads about history. That may come in days of peace.

The main outlines of the battle have been dealt with already. We know what troops took part in it and how they bore themselves, but the thousand vivid and intimate episodes seen between two blasts of gunfire or recounted by men met by chance in some temporary shelter can never all be told. Yet they are too characteristic in their unconsciousness to be left without an attempt at a record, so I give a little handful from a great harvest.

Abolished His Office

In the days before the battle, when the Canadians lived for the most part in and about Sailly, whence one saw, as I have already mentioned, the flaming breath of Hooge like northern lights on the horizon, Hon. Captain Costigan, of Calgary, was the field cashier, and lived as the field cashier must, decently remote from the firing line. Then came the great attack that proved Canada, and the German flares advanced and advanced till they no longer resembled flickering auroras but the dazzling electric arc lights of a great city. Captain Costigan locked up his pay chest and abolished his office with the words, "There is no paymaster."

Next, sinking his rank as honorary captain, he applied for work in the trenches and went off a lieutenant of the Tenth Canadians, who needed officers; he was seen no more until Monday morning, when he returned to search for his office, which had been moved to a cellar at the rear and was at the moment in charge of a sergeant. But he had only returned to inveigle some officer with a gift for accounts into the paymastership. This arranged, he sped back to his Tenth Battalion.

He was not the only one of the department who served as a combatant on that day. Hon. Captain McGregor, of British Columbia, for example, had been paymaster of the Canadian Scottish, 16th battalion. He too, armed with a cane and revolver, went forward at his own desire to hand-to-hand fighting in the wood where he was killed fighting gallantly to the last.

Went as a Lieutenant

The case of Major Guthrie, of New Brunswick, is somewhat similar. He was major of the twelfth battalion, still in England, but was then at the front in some legal military capacity connected with courtmartials.

He, like Captain Costigan, had asked the Quarter-Master-General that Friday morning for a commission in the sorely-tried Tenth. There was some hesitation, since Guthrie as a major might quite possibly find himself in command of what was left of the Tenth, if, and when he found it. "I'll go as a lieutenant, of course," he said, and as a lieutenant he went.

The grim practical joking of fate is illustrated by the adventures of Captain Hercule Barre, a hard bitten French-Canadian, who fought well and spoke English imperfectly. He had been ordered to get to his command in haste and on the way (it was dark), met some British officers, who promptly declared him a spy. The more he protested, the more certain they were that his speech betrayed him. So they had him taken back to the nearest headquarters, where he was identified by a brother-officer and started off afresh, only to be held up a second time by some cyclists, who treated him precisely as the British officers had done. Once again he reached headquarters; once more the officer who had identified him before guaranteed his good faith, and for the third time Captain Barre set out. This time it was a bullet that stopped him. He dragged himself to the side of the road and waited for help. Someone came at last, and he said, "who is it?" "I, Barre," he cried. "What, you, Barre? What do you want this time?" It was the officer who had twice identified him within the last hour. "Stretcher bearers," said Barre. He summoned the stretcher bearer, and Barre was borne off to tell the tale against himself afterwards.

Own Body as Shield

And here is a story of a brigade headquarters that lived in a house surrounded by a moat, over which there was only one road. On Thursday the enemy's artillery found the house, and later on as the rush came their rifle fire found it also. The staff went on with its work until the end of the week, when incendiary shells set the place alight and they were forced to move. The road being impassable on account of the mud, they swam the moat, for whom swimming was out of the question. Captain Scrimger, medical officer attached to the Royal Montreal Regiment, protected the wounded man with his own body against the shrapnel that was coming through the naked rafters and carried him out of the blazing house into the open.

Two of the staff, Lieut.-Col. Hughes (brigade major of the Third Infantry Brigade) and Lieut. Thompson (Third Brigade Grenade Company officer), then re-swam the moat, and, waiting for a lull in the shell-fire, got the wounded man across the road on to a stretcher and into a dressing station, after which they went on with their official duties.

This is but one of a hundred deeds done on the spur of the moment of which there will never be any memorial, except the moment's cheer or the moment's laughter from those who had time to observe. A man can be both heroic and absurd in the same act, and human nature under strain always leans to the comical. What follows is not at all comical, although it made men laugh at the time.

Wounded Men Bayoneted

In one of the many isolated bits of night work it happened that a German detachment was cut off by one of ours, and its situation was hopeless. There was something like a gasp as the enemy realized this, and then a silence broken by a voice crying in unmistakable German-American accents: "Have a heart."

The Canadians had just recovered a dressing station which had been abandoned a few hours before, and there they had found the bodies of their comrades with their wounds dressed, dead of fresh wounds by the bayonet. It is unfortunate that the Canadians' first serious experience of the enemy should have included asphyxiation by gas and the murder of wounded and unconscious men.

The supply of ammunition and medical attendance continued unbroken and unconcerned through all the phases of the last engagement. The ammunition columns waited for hour after hour at their stated points ready to distribute supplies as needed. Their business was to stay where they could be found, and if the shrapnel caught them lined up by the roadside that was part of the business, too. They stuck out the five long days and night, coming up full and going away empty, with no more fuss than is made by delivery wagons on Drummond street in Montreal.

Memories of Fight in Wood.

For some the memory of that struggle in the wood, where the guns were, will stand out clearest in the raw primitiveness of its fighting. Others will recall only struggles among rubbish heaps that once were villages, some wall end or market square inestimably valuable for a few red hours, and then a useless and disregarded charnel house.

Very many will think most of the profiles of bare fields over which men moved in silence from piles of stacked overcoats and equipment towards the trench where, they knew, the fire was waiting that would sweep them away.

There was one such attack in which six thousand troops, of which not more than a third were Canadians, made a charge. Each little company in the space felt itself alone in the world. It is so with all bodies and all individuals in war. Only when night fell did the same picture reveal itself to all. Then it was war as the prints and pictures in our homes at home show it, the horizon lighted all round by the flames of burning villages and the German flares pitching and curving like the comets which are supposed to attend the deaths of kings. Morning light broke up all the commotion, and we were each alone once more, horribly visible or hidden.

Many Appeals by Cable

Also cables from the west are given with appeals, and as information is gathered it is flashed to Canada. A voice calls out of a remote town asking for news of a certain name. It has no claim on the receiver, who may have been perhaps his deadly rival in the little old days. But it calls, and must be answered. Who has had news of this name? Add it to your list that you carry about and consult with your friends, oh, and when you have made sure of your own beloved, in your grief or your joy, remember to mention this name.

The Canadian colony does its best to deal with them all and their inquiries cut across those of the English, and sorrows and griefs are exchanged. It is all one family now, so closely knit by blood that sympathy and service are taken for granted.

"Your case may be mine to-morrow," people say to each other, "my time, and what inquiries I can make are at your disposal if you will only tell me your name and your name."

The grief that we suffer is more new to us than to the English, who have paid the heavy tolls of Mons, the retreat, the Battle of Neuve Chapelle, and the first attack on Ypres, and, like ourselves have prepared and are preparing to fill the gaps; but through their grief and ours runs the unbreakable pride of a race that has called itself Imperial before it knew what empire signified, or had proved itself within its own memory by long and open-handed sacrifice.

In that pride we are full partners, and through the din and confusion of battle Canada perceives how all that has gone before was but in preparation for the destiny upon which she enters and the history which she spells from this hour.

"Fruit-a-tives" Keeps Young And Old in Splendid Health

J. W. HAMMOND Esq.

SCOTLAND, Ont., Aug. 25th, 1913

"Fruit-a-tives" are the only pill manufactured, to my way of thinking. They work completely, no griping whatever, and one is plenty for any ordinary person at a dose. My wife was a martyr to Constipation. We tried everything on the calendar without satisfaction, and spent large sums of money until we happened on "Fruit-a-tives". I cannot say too much in their favor.

We have used them in the family for about two years and we would not use anything else so long as we can get "Fruit-a-tives".

Their action is mild, and no distress at all. I have recommended them to many other people, and our whole family uses them".

Paper Lifeboats.

Rear Admiral Yokoyama of the Japanese navy has invented a collapsible lifeboat, or, rather, raft, made of paper. Having found a very tough paper known as hoshikiwara, made from mulberry tree fiber, he sought for and discovered a chemical treatment to make it waterproof. After experiments he found that the best device was to take several pipelike bags and place them side by side as in a raft. As finally given forth it is a life raft quite immune from wreck and so collapsible that it could be stowed in a submarine and always be ready for use.

How to Feed Baby

If it is impossible to give baby his natural food—the milk of a healthy mother—the more nearly the substitute resembles the natural food, the better will baby thrive.

Mothers and nurses are agreed that non-modified or undiluted cow's milk is not suitable. They say it is "too strong" and forms lumpy curd which the baby cannot digest. But this is not a complete explanation. One should make a comparison between cow's milk and baby's natural food. Cow's milk is acid, contains germs and, as is well known, has a great influence on infant mortality. It cannot be treated and modified accurately at home.

In the 'Allenburys' booklet the anxious mother can learn how the 'Allenburys' Foods are made, why they are so suitable as a substitute for mother's milk, and can learn more about the dangers of herself attempting to make dairy milk into baby's food. This booklet will not only convince you to use the 'Allenburys' Foods; it gives useful comparisons and explanations about cow's milk, and devotes many pages to other matters in a very helpful way.

Do not incur unnecessary risks for your baby this summer. Let us send you the booklet "Infant Feeding and Management," and a sample of the foods. In writing for sample, please state age of child and if weaned or unweaned. 61

The Inventor of the Flouring Mill.

About the year 70 B. C. Mithridates, king of Cappadocia, one of the most ingenious and able princes of the time, invented the first mill driven by water. This triumph of his skill and ingenuity he caused to be erected in the immediate vicinity of the royal palace. In the course of time the Cappadocian bakers became celebrated and were in great demand throughout all parts of the world as then known.

These mills were usually placed upon boats on the river, being so elevated and contrived as to be easily driven by the water, and the millers were thus enabled to move from place to place, distributing the meal to their customers.

Thanks to MILBURN'S Heart and Nerve Pills.

Mrs. J. McLaren, Commanda, Ont., writes us under date of February 9th, 1914. "Sixteen years ago I took bad with my heart and nerves, and was not able to do anything. I tried a good many doctors, but they did me no good; in fact one doctor gave me up to die. I heard about Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and I thought I would give them a trial, and after using a couple of boxes I saw that I was improving. I kept on using them for quite a long time. I am eighty-three years old and my heart does not bother me at all.

"I am raising a little girl who was never very strong, and the doctor said that she had palpitation of the heart, so I started to give them to her. She is now twelve years old, and they are doing her more good than I can possibly tell you. I would advise anyone who has a weak heart to try Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, as they have done wonders for me."

CHAPTER XVI.

Too Late!

TOGETHER John and Everett went outside, and from the starter they learned that a car had driven up, that the chauffeur had delivered a note and that later Ruth Gallon had come down and been driven off. "There was an old gentleman with her, Mr. Kane, I believe," the starter added.

John heaved a sigh of relief. "At any rate, Tom will see that she doesn't come to harm," he said.

After a few more questions, which showed them the futility of trying to find Ruth, they re-entered the hotel and settled down to a discussion of business. They were interrupted by the return of Ruth and the cook, who recounted their adventures.

"I'll get Wilkerson," John Dorr said quietly when they had finished. Meanwhile we must get ahead with our fixing up of the affairs of the 'Master Key' mine."

Wilkerson's last failure had driven him furious. He did not know what to do, and he especially dreaded returning to Jean Darnell with the news. He walked the streets for a long time, lunched in a cheap house and then doggedly started downtown. On the way he bought an evening paper and read of Drake's arrest. With scowling brows he perused this minutely until he was sure that his tool had not betrayed him so far. But he knew that minutes were precious. He must get into communication with the young man and assure his silence. He could not do this without Mrs. Darnell's help.

As he expected, she flew into a towering rage, but her keen mind saw that Drake must be pacified, and she managed to control herself at last. She read the account carefully and then looked through the rest of the paper for some item about John Dorr. Her eye lit upon an advertisement, which she read twice before speaking; then she pointed it out to Wilkerson. He, too, read it;

LOST.—Deeds to certain mining property. On proof of ownership same will be returned. Reward expected. S. J. C., 38 Hill street.

"They must be the papers," he acknowledged. "Pell probably threw them away for fear of their being used as evidence against him, and some one picked them up."

"This time I shall see to the matter," Jean said sharply. "Whether they are the papers or not, we must be sure."

"Other people will see that ad.," he suggested.

"All the more reason for hurry," she snapped. Then she called her maid.

"Estelle," she said, "I want you to dress for the street and go on an errand for me. It is very important, and you must hurry."

"Yes, madame."

"And if you show good judgment you shan't be sorry. You know how

A Glance Told Her That They Belonged to Ruth.

Miss Gallon dresses and acts. I want you to impersonate her for a little while."

"But, madame"—

"There is no danger at all," Mrs. Darnell went on. "All you have to do is to go to this address and get those papers."

The maid looked at the advertisement and finally consented to go to the Hill street address and see if they were really Ruth's deeds and if so recover them. In a few moments she had departed on her errand, and Wilkerson and Jean once more resigned themselves to waiting.

Estelle tripped along the street to a car line and took the first car that came along, which, the conductor informed her, crossed the street she sought.

Arriving at her street, she got off and found herself in a neighborhood inhabited by very poor people. She looked with disgust at the tumbledown shanties and dirty shacks that littered the rubbish heaped yards. Two blocks up from the car line she found her number, a house slightly better kept than most. But she noticed in the yard an uptilted ash man's cart. In the rear was a rickety stable. She entered the gate and rang the bell.

A very large, ill dressed Italian woman opened the door, letting out a tremendous odor of garlic and cheese. She surveyed her caller with suspicion and then beamed.

"Oh, you come looka da paper?" she demanded.

Estelle merely showed a copy of the advertisement.

"Yes, my husband he put that in da papa," the woman said, losing her smile.

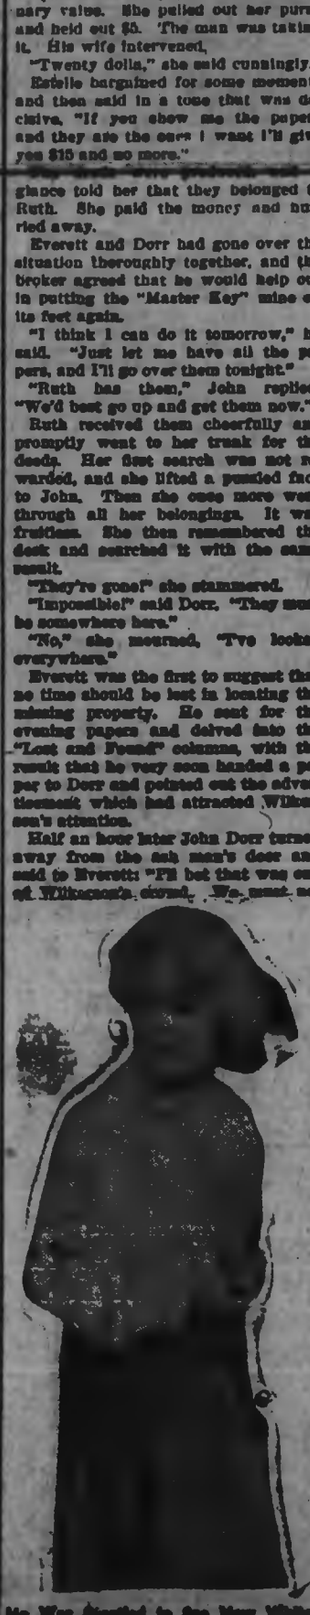
For some moments Estelle tried to get a glimpse of the documents. The Italian himself came on the scene and demanded a full description. When Estelle said that they had been lost from the Manx hotel he nodded and explained that he had been removing the ashes therefrom when his eye had been caught by the folded papers, but he still insisted on an accurate description, which the maid could not give. At last she said quietly, "The papers are of no value to you, and I am authorized to pay a good reward for them."

At the word reward there was a change, and the woman demanded to know how much it would be.

Estelle thought rapidly. It had been impressed on her that haste was necessary. She decided on offering a goodly sum, yet not enough to make the ash man and his wife think they were in possession of papers of extraordinary value. She pulled out her purse and held out $5. The man was taking it. His wife intervened.

"Twenty dolla," she said cunningly.

Estelle bargained for some moments and then said in a tone that was decisive, "If you show me the papers and they are the ones I want I'll give you $15 and no more."



He Was Startled to See How White She Was.

The woman grudgingly produced a glance told her that they belonged to Ruth. She paid the money and hurried away.

Everett and Dorr had gone over the situation thoroughly together, and the broker agreed that he would help out in putting the "Master Key" mine on its feet again.

"I think I can do it tomorrow," he said. "Just let me have all the papers, and I'll go over them tonight."

"Ruth has them," John replied. "We'd best go up and get them now."

Ruth received them cheerfully and promptly went to her trunk for the deeds. Her first search was not rewarded, and she lifted a puzzled face to John. Then she once more went through all her belongings. It was fruitless. She then remembered the desk and searched it with the same result.

"They're gone!" she stammered.

"Impossible!" said Dorr. "They must be somewhere here."

"No," she moaned, "I've looked everywhere."

Everett was the first to suggest that no time should be lost in locating the missing property. He sent for the evening papers and delved into the "Lost and Found" columns, with the result that he very soon handed a paper to Dorr and pointed out the advertisement which had attracted Wilkerson's attention.

Half an hour later John Dorr turned away from the ash man's door and said to Everett: "I'll bet that was one of Wilkerson's crowd. We must secure the papers at once. Come on!"

"We must save ourselves first."

"Ruth, Ruth," he cried in alarm, "what is the matter?"

There was no answer. She had fainted away.

All else was forgotten for the time being. A maid and a doctor were quickly summoned, and presently Ruth revived. Old Tom Kane was seated beside her patting her hand.

"The papers!" she moaned.

"Don't you worry about the papers," he said promptly. "We'll look after them."

"But the folks at the mine—who will look after them?" she pleaded.

The old cook swore that he would do, up himself with John's help. At this point the doctor interfered with orders that she was to be instantly quiet.

In the other room they held a consultation. The physician listened to their explanation of what the girl had been through and then said gravely: "She must have an absolute change of scene for a time. Get her away from here immediately."

"But where?" Dorr demanded.

"Why not take her to the southern part of the state for a little while?" he suggested. "Do whatever you do, do it quickly. Her nerves won't stand much more."

"I know just the place," Kane said. "Take her to Los Angeles and then run into the hills to some quiet hotel. You can catch the night train."

"Excellent!" Everett said quickly. "All of you go with her. I'll look after matters here for a week. If need be I'll go down to the mine myself."

With the papers safely in her possession at last Jean Darnell became more the guiding spirit and told Wilkerson that there was only one thing for them to do—get out of town immediately.

"Drake is in jail, and we'll have to hold him out through some trivial pretext. We cannot afford carelessness in the matter of the police. You can trust Dorr to be looking for those papers right this minute."

"I promised Drake by a messenger that we would have him out before night," he responded.

"We must save ourselves first," she said angrily. "And we must be disguised."

After some argument Wilkerson agreed, and they decided to go south.

"It will give us time to plan things out, and you can work things out at your leisure," Jean told him.

"But how shall I disguise myself?" he demanded.

Mrs. Darnell's eyes gleamed maliciously. "You must go as an old man," she told him—"my father, you see."

He rebelled, but finally acquiesced, and within a short time Jean and the maid had transformed him into a very presentable old man.

"Now, go and buy our tickets," she ordered. "Estelle and I will pack up while you are gone."

"Tickets to where?"

"Tickets to Los Angeles," she snapped.

So he departed, to return in an hour with the tickets and an expressman.

When the trunks were gone Mrs. Darnell sat down with Wilkerson, and they went over the situation again, with the result that she took his advice and disguised herself and made Estelle also do the same.

After a hasty supper they then called a taxi and went to the station. Mrs. Darnell and her maid immediately entered the drawing room reserved for them, and Wilkerson fee'd the porter to make up his berth in the body of the car immediately.

"Safe!" he muttered to himself as the wheels began to turn and he saw the faces of several plain clothes men on the platform.

Neither he nor Mrs. Darnell was aware that in another car Ruth and her maid and John Dorr and Tom Kane were also heading for the south.

The story of The Master Key will appear each Friday and Saturday in the Evening Examiner, and will be shown in Photo Play at the Tis-It Theatre on Monday and Tuesday of each week.

A Curious Fruit.

A fruit that is in season all the year round in India is the papaw. This grows on a short, pulpy looking tree with leaves like the castor oil plant in shape, but woolly on the surface, and the green pumpkin shaped fruit grows in a cluster at the top. When cut open it has orange colored flesh and a number of black seeds in the center. Its flavor slightly resembles mustard and cress, and, though not generally liked, it is said to be excellent as a digestive aid and to lengthen the lives of those who partake of it regularly.

PERFECTION.

He who boasts of being perfect is perfect in folly. I never saw a perfect man. Every rose has its thorns and every day its night. Even the sun shows spots, and the skies are darkened with clouds. And faults of some kind mingle in every heaven.—Spurgeon.

Torpedo Means Year's Work

Torpedoes are fired from a spoon-shaped tube, which is well greased, so that the weapon may shoot out easily and take the water in a horizontal position. A year's work is shot away every time a torpedo is sent speeding to its mark, for it takes 12 months to complete one, so intricate is the machinery which it contains.

Tommy's Retort

A good story is being told of a conversation between a British Tommy and a German prisoner. The latter remarked disparagingly to Tommy: "You fight 'or money; I'd be ashamed to do that. We fight for honor." To which Tommy replied calmly: "Yes, I suppose we're each fighting for what we lack."

Limit of Laziness.

"Dis paper tells erbout a feller wot died from ennui. Wot's dat?"

"Dat," replied Tired Thaddeus, "is de feelin' wot comes to a man when he gets so lazy dat lookin's hard work."—Indianapolis Star.

Her Relative.

Little Lois was standing at the front gate gazing anxiously up and down the street when a woman passerby paused and asked, "Are you looking for some one, dear?"

"Yes, ma'am," replied Lois. "Dinner is on the table, and I came out to see if mamma's husband was coming."—Chicago News.

BAD INDIGESTION FOR OVER 10 YEARS.

ALMOST DESPAIRED OF EVER GETTING WELL.

Indigestion is one of the worst forms of stomach trouble. The stomach becomes upset and you have a raw, debilitating feeling in it. After a meal you feel that you must get rid of that nasty, bilious, burning sensation. It is not necessary for you to be troubled with indigestion if you will only try that old and well-known remedy, Burdock Blood Bitters, which is a combination of nature's best known roots, herbs and barks for the cure of all stomach and blood troubles.

Mrs. Mary MacKay, Hunter's Mountain, N.S., writes: "I was troubled with indigestion for more than ten years. I tried several doctors' medicines claiming the power to cure, but all without success. Having heard of the many cures effected by Burdock Blood Bitters, I decided to give it a trial. After taking two bottles I was completely cured. My appetite which was very poor is now good, and I can eat most everything without any disagreeable feelings.

B.B.B. is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

WAR AND THE QUAKERS

The Society of Friends—popularly known as the Quakers—is divided in Great Britain on the question of naval and military service for its members. Many Friends believe it to be incompatible with the tenets of Quakerism for a man to fight in defence of his country, and they contend that every young man who joins the navy or army should be disowned by the society. The attitude of this gossip is expressed in the following letter from "A Quaker Soldier's Sister," published in the "Friend"—the organ of the Society of Friends:

"Are we a group of men and women who have set out to uphold and try to bring about certain social revolutions which the best spirits among us see can only be compatible with the law of Jesus; or are we a group of men and women united by our desire to seek direct communication with God and to act as well as we can by the Light as it is revealed to us individually?

"Does our society exist for peace, or does it exist for the seeker, the climber towards God? Are the peace principles which many of us hold an essential part of our Quakerism, or has the close walk with God, which the greater proportion of our ancestors so wonderfully practised, frequently brought them to see so much of what the Fatherhood of God and Brotherhood of Man meant, that abolition of slavery, peace, temperance, integrity in business have come to be considered as synonymous with us?

"If we answer the first of these groups of questions in the affirmative, it seems to me we have no alternative but to disown our young men."

Many Quakers, however, are ready unselfishly to sacrifice themselves for love of their country. These, naturally, are very anxious to learn what will be the attitude of the society should they enlist. To be disowned—that is, struck off the roll of the Society of Friends—is a serious matter.

HOW DID YOU FIGHT, AND WHY?

(This stirring poem is being enclosed in all garments and packages sent to the Canadian soldiers in the hospitals and at the front by the Canadian Red Cross Society).

Did you face the trouble that came your way
With a resolute heart, and cheerful?
Or turn your soul from the light of day
With a craven heart, and fearful?

Oh, a trouble's a ton or a trouble's a pound,
Or a bundle is what you make it;
But it isn't the fact that you're hurt that counts.
But only—how did you take it?

You're beaten to earth? Well, well, what's that?
Come up with a smiling face!
It's nothing against you to be knocked flat.
But to lie there—that's disgrace.

The harder you're thrown, the higher you bounce;
Be proud of your blackened eye!
It isn't the fact that you're hurt that counts,
But how did you fight—and why?

And tho' you be done to death, what then?
If you did the best you could.
If you played your part in the world of men,
Why, the Critic will call it good.

Death comes with a crawl, or comes with a pounce,
But whether 'tis slow or spry,
It isn't the fact that you're dead that counts,
But only—how did you die?

Doctor Tells How to Shed Bad Complexion

We cannot restore degenerated facial tissue any more than we can restore a lost limb. It is useless to attempt to convert a worn-out complexion into a new one. The rational procedure is to remove the complexion instead—remove the devitalized cuticle. Not by surgical means, however, as the underlying cutis is too thin, too tender, to withstand immediate exposure. Applying ordinary mercolized wax will gradually absorb the offending cuticle. By degrees, a new, youthful skin appears; soft and delicately tinted as a rose petal.

No lady need hesitate to try this. Procure an ounce of mercolized wax of the druggist. Spread on a thin layer before retiring, removing this in the morning with soap and water. In from one to two weeks the complexion is completely transformed.

An approved treatment for wrinkles is provided by dissolving an ounce of powdered saxolite in a half pint of witch hazel. Bathing the face in the solution brings prompt and remarkable results.—Dr. R. Mackenzie in Popular Medicine.

Snow and Water.

According to the speed of its fall and the temperature the density of snow varies. In cold, crisp, frosty weather it comes down light and dry, and the bulk is greater than in the moist, cold weather, when the snow falls in large, partially thawed flakes, which pack closely and occupy much less space for a given amount of moisture than when there is a greater degree of cold.

Newly fallen snow of average compactness, having a depth of eleven and one third inches, is reckoned as equivalent to one inch of rain. A cubic foot of newly fallen snow weighs five and one-half pounds, and a cubic foot of rain water weighs sixty-two and one-half pounds.

An Ancient Civilization.

"Where was the most ancient civilization known?" asks a recent traveler in Turkestan, Dr. W. J. Parmelee, in the Springfield Republican.

Explorations show that 10,000 years ago (twice the age of the Egyptian pyramids) a people lived southeast of the Caspian sea, about 120 miles from the sea, who had brick houses, decorated pottery, convenient and ingenious household articles and domestic animals; they raised and ground wheat and cooked their food.

So far as can be told, they had no weapons and lived in peace with their neighbors—a trait that may be taken as evidencing civilization or its absence, according to the point of view.

WOMAN'S DEVOTION IS REQUITTED

MILLPORT, Pa., June 4.—This is a story of 38 years of faithful waiting, of woman's devotion than which the world knoweth not a thing more lasting, of confidence requited and a man's reputation cleared. Incidentally is proved the truth of the adage, "death will out," and incidentally the troubled conscience of the guilty is discovered working. It is a theme worthy of a Tennyson.

May 17, 1877, Squire Francis Kindt, of Millport, Pa., kissed his devoted wife and family good-bye and set out for Easton, aP., with $1,700 in his possession, the proceeds of his deceased father's estate. He intended to go to Easten to divide it with his brother, a lawyer in that city. He never arrived, nor was he again seen.

For 38 years the devoted wife has endured the contumely and cynicism of neighbours who have insisted that the squire absconded with his brother's share and sold his soul for $650. Only the devoted wife believed in her husband's integrity and brought up her children in the belief that one day his memory would be vindicated and his reputation cleared. It has been a long, wearisome road to travel, living down the skepticism of the skeptical generation with none but her children to share her faith.

But there was a boy, only 7 years old when his father disappeared, who remembered him as a man of kindly nature and noble principles, to whom the idea that he was untrue was repugnant. From his boyhood has been growing in his mind the purpose to clear up the cloud and he has laboured without ceasing to do this. A short time ago the cloud was lifted. Henry Truxton, a negro convict in the Eastern penitentiary, confessed to aiding slay him and rob him of the inheritance. He even told the cruelty they practiced in torturing the man within a view of his home from a mountain top just before they killed him. Then they slew him while his family was in sight.

It was not until the bones of Squire Francis Kindt were uncovered in a shallow grave on the top of Bushka-Bushka mountain, the place to which the negro convict directed them that the memory of the man was cleared of the loud that had hung over it 38 years.

The strange part is that for a generation Mrs. Kindt had been living on intimate terms with the families of the neighbours who were implicated in the negro's confession. Five years after the disappearance of the squire, one of the men named in the confession committed suicide for no known reason. Since the confession and the finding of the bones, the other man implicated by the negro has taken to his bed.

Thus is the 38 years' waiting of the patient, courageous, faithful wife rewarded: thus is vindicated the honour of their father to the children brought up in belief in his integrity.

THE BEST MEDICINE FOR LITTLE ONES

Thousands of mothers say Baby's Own Tablets are the only medicine they would give their little ones. Among them is Mrs. Howard Hodgkins, St. Catharines, Ont., who says: "I am a user of Baby's Own Tablets and think them the best medicine in the world for little ones." Once a mother has used the Tablets she will use no other medicine because she feels the Tablets are absolutely safe and knows they never fail to banish all the simple ailments of little ones. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HOW YOU MAY REDUCE YOUR WEIGHT

Overstoutness is a very unwelcome condition especially in the present day, when slender figures are so fashionable, and every reader of this paper has noticed the tendency of some people to put on an excessive amount of fat.

If you happen to be one of those whose weight is more than it should be, don't try to starve yourself, eat all you want, but go to your druggist and get oil of orlisse in capsule form and take one with each meal.

Oil of orlisse increases the oxygenizing power of the blood and dissolves the fatty tissue, in many cases at nearly the rate of one lb. per day. Be sure to get oil of orlisse in capsule form. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Any good druggist has it, or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

Through a Big Telescope.

The first look through a great telescope is disappointing, but the novice soon sees that the flat appearance which the heavens present to the naked eye is replaced by a curious concavity. The moon and stars seem to be hung in space rather than spread out on a flat surface. For a moment one feels at the telescope like a child watching the swift moving balls kept in the air by a juggler and expecting to see one of those great, bright bodies fall.

An Indirect Hit.

A patient who was suffering from a scalp wound was recently admitted to a hospital. "How did this happen?" asked the resident surgeon.

"The wife hit me on the head with a stone," was the answer.

"It's the first time I ever heard of a woman hitting anything she aimed at," the doctor observed jokingly.

"Oh, she didn't aim it at me. She was throwing the stone at our neighbor's fowls, and I was standing behind her!"—London Graphic.

MRS. BECKER WILL APPEAL

Says Convicted Policeman Was Offered Immunity to "Squeal"

NEW YORK, June 5.—The fight to save the life of Charles Becker will be carried to the United States Supreme Court. This was announced by Mrs. Becker after a conference with Martin L. Manton, senior counsel in the case. She also asserted her husband had twice been offered immunity by District Attorney Whitman's office if he would "squeal" but then stated he had no revelations to make. None will be made now to escape the penalty since inflicted, she added.

She said she would leave no stone unturned to save her husband from the electric chair. At present she has no intention of appealing personally to Governor Whitman, but may make up her mind to do so as a last resort if the decision of the Federal Court is adverse.

It will be alleged in the Federal appeal that Becker's constitutional rights have been violated by stories circulated before his trial concerning both him and John Becker, his brother.

ECZEMA WAS CURED TWELVE YEARS AGO

Dr. Chase's Ointment Proved to be a Permanent Cure

The old idea of eczema being a disease of the blood has been pretty well exploded by the record of cures made by Dr. Chase's Ointment.

Some doctors still advise internal treatment, but the results are slow and uncertain, and too often a lamentable failure. With Dr. Chase's Ointment it is different. You apply the ointment to the sore parts. It cleanses the sores, and soon sets up the healing process. In a few days you can see with your own eyes the wonderful change that is taking place and are encouraged to keep up the treatment until the cure is complete and the sores replaced by smooth, natural skin.

It is wise to look after your general health, keep the bowels regular and the blood rich but you can depend on Dr. Chase's Ointment to cure the eczema if you will do your part and apply it regularly.

Mr. W. H. Roberts, Charlottetown, P.E.I., writes: "I can recommend Dr. Chase's Ointment to anyone suffering from itching skin disease. I had eczema on my leg and suffered terribly from the itching. I had a doctor treat me for four months without relief, and I was getting worse all the time. A second doctor gave some relief for a time, but made no cure. I tried several advertised treatments, but without relief until I used Dr. Chase's Ointment. This ointment cured me in a month. That was twelve years ago, and I have never had a sign of the old trouble since.

'Since then we have always kept Dr. Chase's Ointment in the house, and find it invaluable for chafing, chilblains, insect stings and burns. I would not be without it if it cost $5 a box."

"This is to certify that I am personally acquainted with Mr. W. H. Roberts, and believe his statement regarding the use of Dr. Chase's Ointment to be true and correct." (Signed) Alex. Horne, Justice of the Peace.

EXAMINER PATTERN SERVICE

BOYS' DUTCH SUIT.

By Anabel Worthington.

7168

Last year everything was Oliver Twist in the way of boys' suits. This year the Dutch suit promises to be the popular style. You can readily see that the change is slightful. The trousers button over the waist much in the Twist manner, and the combination of light and dark materials is quite familiar. This little Dutch suit is easy to make and does not require much material. For the six year size you would need 1¾ yards of 27 inch white material for the blouse and 2½ yards of 36 inch colored goods for the trousers and blouse trimming.

Linen is, as usual, very desirable for these little suits, but the less expensive imitations on similar cotton fabrics do very well as a substitute. The short sleeves are finished with turn back cuffs, but when the long sleeve is used it is laid in plaits at the wrist in sailor suit fashion. The pattern, No. 7,168, comes in sizes from 4 to 8 years.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

THE ITALIANS ADVANCING UPON ROVERETO

ANOTHER ZEPPELIN RAID ON ENGLAND

ITALIANS PRESSING ATTACK ON AUSTRIAN FORTIFIED TOWN

From Two Directions General Cadorna's Forces Are Advancing and Austrians Own Guns Captured by Invaders Have Been Turned Upon the Enemy's Positions---Great Assault on Dardanelle Positions Commenced.

CASUALTIES IN LATEST ZEP. RAID

ROME, June 5.—The battle for Rovereto has begun. Italian Alpinists and Bersaglieri are advancing upon the Austrian fortress town from the south and south east. Austrian guns captured by the Italians when they took Mount Zugno by assault have been bombarding the city from a great height. Elsewhere, the fiercest fighting centres upon the slopes of Monterno. An official report from General Cadorna to-day said that the battle for Ridge continues with heavy losses on both sides. The Italians are making progress.

A GENERAL ADVANCE BEGINS

ATHENS, June 5.—Supported by a raging fire from the war ships, the allied expeditionary forces on the Gallipoli peninsula are attacking the Turkish positions all along the shore. Despatches from Mitylene to-day said a general advance was ordered yesterday. The last of the allied reinforcements had debarked near the southern end of the peninsula. The Turks are stubbornly defending themselves.

ANOTHER RAID

LONDON, June 5.—Zeppelins raided the east and south east coast of England during the night. An official statement from the Admiralty to-day admits that "a few casualties" resulted.

THE CANADIAN CASUALTY LIST

OTTAWA, June 5.—The casualty lists received by the Militia Department since yesterday contain the names of 75 Canadians killed, 98 wounded and 5 missing. This makes the total reported to Ottawa to date 7449, of whom 1151 have been killed, 4781 wounded while 1530 are prisoners of war. There is still no confirmation of the report that Brigadier General Turner, V.C., commanding the Third Canadian Infantry Brigade, is a prisoner of war, as stated in a Berlin wireless.

BERLIN, via wireless, June 5.—The war office admitted this afternoon that the French troops temporarily occupied the ruins of the Souchez sugar mill, arpund which desperate fighting has been proceeding for several days.

KING OF GREECE SUFFERS RELAPSE

ATHENS, June 5.—King Constantine has suffered a relapse. After a hurried consultation of his physicians to-day, Professor Selsberg, a German specialist, announced that he will perform a second operation on the King.

LONDON, June 5.—The Northcliffe newspapers to-day won a victory. The government's charges against the London Times under the Defence of Realm Act was dismissed by the presiding judge at the Mansion House. The Times' defence was that the substance of the article had been printed before with official sanction.

ANOTHER SPY NETTED

LONDON, June 5.—Robert Rosenthaul, who confessed to being a German spy sent to get British naval secrets, was arrested as he was about to leave England today.

"SUBS" HAVE SUNK 16.

LONDON, June 5.—Bulletin.—Sixteen vessels have been torpedoed instead of thirteen, as reported earlier to-day.

TRAWLERS' CREWS AT KIRKWALL

LONDON, June 5.—The crews of the fishing vessels Cortez, Kathleen and Evening Star, torpedoed yesterday off the Orkney Islands, were landed at Kirkwall to-day by trawlers.

ZEPPELINS DRIVEN OUT TO SEA

LONDON, June 5.—German Zeppelins attempeted another raid on London early to-day. An official statement from the Admiralty admitted that the enemy's sky dreadnoughts had bombarded towns and villages on the east and south east coast, inflicting "a few casualties." It was reported that they were driven out to sea before they could approach London.

AMERICANS WERE WARNED

Coupled with the news of a coast raid came reports from a number of American residents that they were warned by mysterious telephone messages last night of the Zeppelins' coming. Mr. M. K. Shaver, of the American relief commission, said his telephone rang at about 9 p.m. and a strange voice told him to remain indoors for the remainder of the night. "Get some water and be ready to fight fire!" was the message sent to other Americans over the telephone. The admiralty has thus far not confirmed the report that the Zeppelins were met and attacked. It is known however that the admiralty anticipates another attack from the skies as part part of the sudden display of activity by the land, sea and air forces of the Kaiser, and that adequate preparations were made to meet the dirigibles.

SUNDAY SCHOOL FOR METHODISTS IN BYERSVILLE

Lot Has Been Offered For That Purpose by Mr. D. W. Dumble --Locality has Been Examined

AN ISOLATED POSITION

Plans are being considered for the establishment of a Methodist Sunday school in Byersville. It is learned that Mr. D. W. Dumble has offered a lot on Cottesmore street, immediately north of Chamberlen street's extension in Monaghan. Cottesmore street is the natural extension of Albert street. During the past week the Methodist ministers of the city and some of the laymen visited Byersville and especially considered Mr. Dumble's proffered site. It is expected that another property owner will give an adjoining lot, thus providing one-quarter of an acre for the Sunday school.

It is practically assured that the proposed Sunday school will be erected. The Byersville suburb had been under consideration for some time. Its expansion and the assured continuance of its growth emphasizes the importance of present attention to its existing and future requirements. From a Methodist standpoint the community is isolated by the distances to St. James' and the new Trinity churches. Just now there is nothing definitely decided upon, but it is safe to say that if the Methodist people decide that a Sunday school is necessary in Byersville they will not be tardy in supplying it.

BLANCHARD IS WOUNDED

Name of Former Associate Editor of the Farm and Dairy Appears on the Canadian Casualty List

WELL KNOWN HERE

The Canadian casualty list contains the name of a former local man, in the person of Pte. Benjamin Howes Blanchard, of Ellershouse, N. S., who is reported wounded.

Pte. Blanchard was well-known in the city, having been connected with the Farm and Dairy, of which publication he was at one time Associate Editor. He was employed there about two years ago, leaving to take his fourth year in Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph. He returned here last summer and spent about three months in the city.

He was a very prominent member of St. Paul's Church, taking an active interest in the Church work and different organizations.

The "Maxwell" Car Making Good

Straightforward Industrious Dealers, Aided by Good Advertising, Bringing Results

The sales of the "Maxwell" automobile in Peterborough this season promises to be well in advance of any on record. The demand for the "Maxwell" is growing and the local dealers, Messrs. Heard & Norhey, are being cheered by the number of people asking for trial demonstrations of their car. There is a substantiality charm about the "Maxwell" which appeals to the prospective buyer, and help to close the bargain." Most any day you may see some one out for a spin in the car, giving all cares a slip, and as happy as a party of youths off for a holiday in the woods.

The following are the names of recent buyers of the "Maxwell" secured by the Heard & Northey Co. of this city: Rowland Bullock, Smith, J. W. Bennett, city, Wesley Williamson, Cavan, William Baker, Lakefield, James Thompson, South Monaghan.

The early hour has been chosen to avoid as much as possible interfering with other church services. The central part of the church will be reserved for the men of the regiment. The public is cordially invited to attend.

All overseas men home on leave and members of other city units are invited to march with the Regiment to the church.

War Heroes' Names Given To Rivers

OTTAWA, June 5.—Names of Canadian soldiers who have fallen at the front are being perpetuated by the Geographic Board of Canada. The north fork of the Fraser River in British Columbia has been renamed McGregor River, and creeks draining into it J. Creek, Herrick Creek, and Captain Creek, in memory of Captain J. Herrick McGregor, 16th Battalion, killed at Ypres, April 26.

The late Lieut. D. P. Bell-Irving's name is given to the north fork of the Naas River in British Columbia. He was a Victoria man who fell early in the Canadian fighting.

The name of Private Philip Norton, a British Columbia man killed at Ypres, April 24, is bestowed on a tributary of the Nation River in that province. It will be known as Philip Creek.

REMAINS TO BE REMOVED

Last Resting Place of a Former Generation to be Reclaimed From Brush and Weeds—Bodies Reduced to Ashes

OLD METHODIST CEMETERY

After a generation of desuetude the old Methodist cemetery at the north end of George street is about to be reclaimed for other purposes. The trustees of the George street Methodist church have commenced clearing this old graveyard of the tangle of underbrush, shrubs and trees which made it a hiding place for loafers and ill-disposed persons.

In the early days of Peterborough when the first burial ground on the present Central park was closed, the Methodist cemetery received the remains of citizens irrespective of creed until the Little Lake cemetery was established. But no one has been buried there for upwards of forty years, and few since 1865. Many bodies have been removed from time to time to the Little Lake cemetery and those that remain will no doubt be transferred within the next few weeks. Of course the bodies of that former generation interred in the Methodist cemetery are represented only by a little dust, mould or a few bones. A citizen remarked that he had effected one removal but he would not attempt another. Nothing remained but a handful of bones and the removal was a mockery—the dead was not there.

All who desire to remove headstones may do so by obtaining permission from the church authorities. A list of names of persons interred there, so far as they can be ascertained, will soon be published for the direction of descendants.

Statute Directs.

By the last revised statutes of Ontario, provision has been made for dealing with abandoned cemeteries, those that have been so surrounded by buildings that the local municipal councils have closed them. These cemeteries are found in many parts of the province. They are generally neglected and become resorts for boys and vagrants. Yet, until now no provision had been made for dealing with them. There is now, however, a general law which makes ample provision for disposing of them.

In Peterborough's old Methodist cemetery near the northern boundary, many of the grave stones have been neglected and become broken. It is very interesting to read the names and legends on these old stones. To the oldest residents many of the names would be particularly familiar, many of them representing well known families of our earliest and most respected people.

COMPLAINT SENT TO CITY COUNCIL

Another Chapter in the Proceedings Between Sanitary Inspector and Mr. G. Howson

The complaint of Mr. George Howson respecting an account of nine dollars that was registered against him for a job of scavengering that was performed by a man named Fair at the instance of Sanitary Inspector Pearce, was referred to the Finance committee at a meeting that was held yesterday afternoon and on motion of Aldermen Duffus and Weir was sent on to the City Council. Its ultimate destination will likely be the Legal committee as the account is disputed. When the Sanitary Inspector orders a property owner to clean up his premises and the order is ignored, which is alleged in this case, he has authority to have the work done on his own account and the amount due for the work is added to the taxes of the property concerned if not paid in the regular way. Mr. Howson seeks to prove that the charge made was excessive and that the "transaction was a fraud." He claims that the cans used to remove the refuse were smaller than the legal requirements, and as weights and measures inspector, was successful in securing a conviction against Fair who was using said cans contrary to the weights and measures act. Fair was fined five dollars and costs by Police Magistrate Dumble. Now Mr. Howson wants the amount charged him for the work, refunded.

CELLARS CHOKED WITH GERMAN CORPSES FOUND BY FRENCH

3000 of the Enemy Buried and 3000 Prisoners Taken in the Fighting North of Arras Says a French "Eye Witness" in Describing Battle for the Souchez Sugar Mill.

FIGHTING WAS DESPERATE

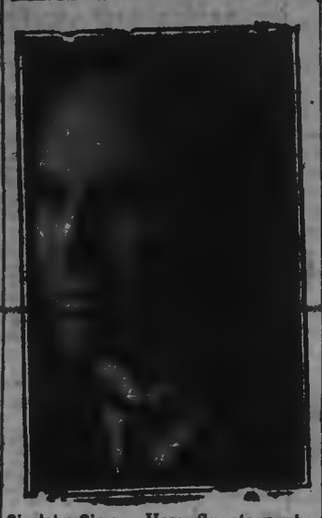
Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, June 5.—Cellars choked with German corpses were found by the French when they stormed and occupied the big stone sugar mill at Souchez after a week of furious fighting.

The official "eye witness" describing the battle around this point declared to-day that in three weeks' fighting north of Arras the French have buried three thousand Germans, and have taken three thousand prisoners. "Our losses during that period have been only a quarter of those suffered by the enemy," the official statement added.

From the outbuildings the French swept forward in a grand assault upon the sugar mill itself. The Germans defended with rattling machine-gun fire from behind the stone ruins. The foremost French columns hurled grenades behind the enemy ramparts with terrible effect, and then charged with the bayonet. After a three-hour fight the Germans relinquished. The sugar mill formed the base of the German operations against Neuth. It was certain that the enemy would bring up reinforcements and attempt to recapture the position. Consequently the French immediately began strengthening their positions, bringing up heavier artillery from the rear. While these preparations were under way, the Germans rushed forward in a furious counter-attack. The battle was fought by the moonlight amid the ruins of the old mill. Rifles became almost useless except for their bayonet points. The fighting resolved itself into maelstrom of hand to hand struggles with knives and even bared fists. In the moonlight it was impossible at a great distance to distinguish between the opposing forces and the French artillery was useless. The enemy's overwhelming numbers at first forced the French to withdraw, but at daybreak the artillery was turned upon the Germans and they were driven out.

"The same troops that won this important victory at Souchez won the recent battle that gave us Carency," said the official statement.



Sir John Simon—Home Secretary, who led the British Commons in the absence of the Prime Minister. Mr. Simon some day may be Premier himself. Meantime the absence of Mr. Asquith on the first day the new coalition cabinet met the House is causing speculation.

JOHN BULL IS MORE JOHN BULL THAN EVER NOW

His Sullen Determination and Calm Tenacity is Strongly in Evidence Says T. P. O'Connor in Discussing the Week's Events

THE COALITION CABINET

(Copyright, 1915, Central News—By T. P. O'Connor)

LONDON, June 5.—An awkward pause, especially in Liberal Party circles, followed the creation of the new ministry. Sturdy Liberals did not see the disappearance of the great Liberal ministry without many pangs and misgivings, and they began immediately to speculate as to the future fate of such outstanding Liberal reforms as Home Rule and plural voting.

These misgivings were not mitigated by the entrance of Sir Edward Carson into the ministry as Attorney-General, which was a veritable shock to Liberal and working-class opinion. F. E. Smith's appointment as Solicitor-General—for he is notable as Carson's lieutenant—was an added shock and for some days there existed some thing like the dangerous beginnings of a Liberal revolt.

Foreign Opinion Helped.

Curiously enough, foreign opinion helped to steady British opinion. All the extracts from German and French papers showed that the change in administration was interpreted as a consolidation of British opinion, and forces for a strenuous continuance of the war and both countries, judging from foreign, rather than British analogies, saw nothing incongruous in this combination of such conflicting political personalities. This conception of the new ministry as a visible and unmistakable sign of a national unity, and, therefore, a national determination, is gradually making its way, and momentarily the general verdict is growing that England's change makes for effectiveness and promises a more skilful and more resolute conduct of the war.

It is further seen that such a combination of political parties destroys, at least for the moment, all criticism based on mere party feeling and such extirpation of party criticism enormously strengthens the ministry which is doing the right thing, irrespective of persons.

Thus, although many have joined with Lord Northcliffe in deploring the deficient supply of shells, no Liberal ministry could tackle the difficulty frankly and promptly less party feeling subject them to party at-

POTATOES.

The potato, which was first cultivated by Ireland 329 years ago, has become a world-wide food. The world crop of potatoes exceeds the yield of wheat by about two thousand million bushels. This is not surprising, for the potato being a most valuable food, and exclusively cultivated, can give an enormous yield. Under ideal conditions the yield per acre is 400 to 450 bushels. Like everything else worth having, we have to fight for our potatoes. Even now, with the plants just nosing through the soil, we shall find the Colorado potato bug mobilising for his summer campaign. Paris green is as effective a destroyer as another product of Paris, it is hoped will be for the Kaiser, a worse pest than the potato bug.

CANADIAN CAPACITY.

Without being narrow one may congratulate Canada upon the prominent and splendid part she is taking in the war. Her troops are regarded as of the best in the field. We may insist upon this, because this is the first chance Canadians have had to show their work on a large scale. We mean no disparagement to other troops. Their bravery has become a fact for centuries. They have won their spurs; and they won't feel jealous at the praise the Canadians are receiving, and what is better, deserving. This war is going to give Canada a good name, and put her big in the world's eye. A Canadian—and a French-Canadian at that—has been chosen for one of the most important positions of responsibility at this time of crisis. Sir Girouard has been chosen by Lloyd George, Minister of Munitions, a cahief organiser of the department; and he gives in reply to Lloyd George's demand for a quarter of a million shells monthly, a promise of a million. And the promise will be kept if Sir Percy retains the Canadian capacity for doing things, which he shows in the past.

UNIVERSAL CONDEMNATION.

The despatches say that San Marino, the smallest republic in the world, situated on the Adriatic, approves the attitude of Italy. This adhesion is a very important matter, as this great republic has an area of 38 square miles teeming with a population of 10,665. It has an army of 1,200, which in case of necessity could be largely increased—the whole male population between 16 and 60 being liable for military service. One can hardly fancy the Republic of San Marino being of much material help to Italy, except in connection with remembrance of the fabled mouse freeing the lion, by nibbling the net. Nibbling as a war plan of campaign, is not to be despised. General Joffre has accomplished a good deal by "nibbling." San Marino's incidental condemnation of Germany is proof that her super-heathen ethics, and her hyper-barbarous methods, have earned and got the condemnation of all nations of the world from the least to the greatest. The unspeakable Turk is the only nation in the class of Germany as represented by her war lords; and even Turkey's reputation has suffered from its associations.

HOLLOW VICTORIES.

Germany's successes are as hollow as the Kaiser's professions of piety. In conjunction with Austria it has spent thousands of soldiers' lives and tons of badly needed ammunition to compass the fall of Przemysl. Its capture, after all, was not a victory of strategic importance, only a moral victory, and no one will grudge Germany the performance of anything moral. Germany's submarine warfare has accomplished little or nothing of military or naval value. Since the war began German submarines have sunk only one hundred merchant vessels, many of them neutrals. On the contrary twenty thousand British shipmen have crossed the danger belt of German submarine "frightfulness" in safety. The German "blockade" of Britain is apart from the loss of life involved, a "joke." But the British navy has sealed up German sea ports hermetically. The Kaiser's crawfish progress is going the wrong way for world-domination; and the circle of danger is growing stronger. The subjugation of Germany and Austria is a hard task, but the Allies are getting it better in hand every day.

SYSTEM NEEDED.

In these days of war strenuosity, the lesson impressed and to be learned is cooperation — pulling together, working together. To secure the best results to secure cooperation there must be a foundation of system, some definite plan to be worked to. With this applied by proper coordination success is better assured.

A plan of battle fails, as it has failed on two or three occasions, in this war, by certain corps of the army not coordinating in effecting the general plan of battle—not coming up in time to fill the appointed place and time in the contest. The result has been reverses which would not have been met if proper coordination of effort had been made.

This principle applies in small things as well as great, and the bad results of neglect of coordination in civic work have been frequently demonstrated. We have seen in our past civic history, hundreds of dollars spent upon putting a street in good order; and we have seen the city immediately almost rip up the street to put down a sewer, with, we know what results, which might have been put down before the money was spent on the street.

The object of street work is, primarily, to make a smooth and comfortably usable driving surface; and any expenditure that does not tend to this end is so much waste, and anything that destroys a smooth driving surface is wrong.

With matured, or even half matured, plan; with proper coordination of the several parts of the civic machine, such working at cross purposes would be avoided.

A little example of the neglect of coordination, the absence of consultation, is found at Park Place, corner of Charlotte and Park streets. Here the city placed a fine curb on the west side of the park and the adjacent space was filled in, nicely levelled and raked ready for seeding or sodding. Hardly had this work been done than two or three huge trenches were dug the nicely levelled soil ripped up, and the work of levelling the park surface will have to be done over again.

This could easily have been avoided by a little coordination of effort—a little consultation. It was no doubt necessary and a proper thing to move the pole; but if there had been some understanding, some working together, the doing of one necessary work would not have destroyed another necessary work.

We have so many separate agencies, with an interest in our streets, with a necessity of digging up streets to plant poles and do other things, that the necessity of systematic regulation of necessary street disturbance is imperative, if we want to get best results, save money, and prevent destruction of street work.

We have sewers, waterworks, gas works, electric light poling, and telephone poling. All these in turn have their innings upon our streets, and all seem to work independently—not as should be done, in cooperation and consultation. Thus we have a half dozen agencies interfering with work done on the streets.

It seems easily possible, that with a little care, a little consultation before putting pick and spade at work, the mischievous interference with completed work could be avoided, and the necessity of doing street work twice, as has often to be done, would be avoided.

To lack of system applied to street work we have added lack of civic foresight. An example. At the corner of Park and Gilmour street, the crossing had a grating to permit of the flow of water from the hill on Park street to the north. This grating was taken out and the opening filled with concrete; and a way for the water was made by digging a ditch along the Park street side of the crossing. It was seen that this ditch provided a fearful bump for autos and other vehicles. It was filled in with gravel, and a dam created so that the water from the slope of Park street is effectively dammed—can't get away without gullying a way for itself in the street surface.

This may be a small matter; but it illustrates the unfortunate consequences of not looking ahead, and working together. The man that had the grating in the crossing blocked with concrete, had no understanding with the man who blocked up the water course to make the street level with the crossing.

From lack of system one department is working against another, and the money spent to do one thing, and the money spent to undo it and do another, is in great part wasted.

Another illustration. The walk on the south side of Charlotte street at its intersection with Park, was a few years ago knowingly laid in the wrong place, and this year it had to be ripped up and from $50 to $60 perhaps spent that would not have been spent if there had been care to do the work right in the beginning.

Another consequence. When subordinates see lack of system and careless work done by their superiors in the department, they easily follow suit.

A splendid innovation is a dump cart laden with street metal, for repairing holes in the streets. The idea is all right, if the work were done properly. But on a certain street a depression caused by a sewer or water service trench was treated; it was filled in the middle, but at one end a depression was left to create a bump for a vehicle, and in the neighbourhood other holes were neglected to be filled. The work employing the dump cart to make a smooth driving surface was not done at one time, and the street to be properly treatd will have to be gone over again.

It may be thought that these are small matters. But they are the small things that help to make big taxes. We have, in years past, spent thousands of dollars to repair careless work, or do over work that has been destroyed by doing other work, all of which, or nearly all, could have been avoided by a little foresight, a little planning and consultation.

We want good streets to use—to use with comfort and with the least possible wear and tear of horse flesh and vehicles. That's the sole object of spending money on street work. If we don't get such a result, the money we spend is wasted. Has the work on our streets for the past twenty or more years been well done? It has rather been over done or done over; with great expenditure for what adequate value has not been received.

All this unsatisfactory work; all this duplication of expenditure; all the increase of taxation is largely due to the lack of system, definite plan, foresight, thought and acting together of the various interests that control, or assume control, of our streets.

No one city council is to blame. No one individual. It is the wrong and slip-shod way of doing things we have inherited and keep.

ARE YOU A GOOD FRIEND OF PETERBOROUGH ?

WHEN OUR SOLDIER BOYS---600 of them---left for the front, when news of the battles in which they took part came in, when we read with pride of the names of those who had been wounded and of those who—and our grief was intense—had been killed, we were proud of Peterborough.

Y. M. C. A., PETERBOROUGH

Peterborough raised some of these valiants, developed others and was home to many. And when the war is all over, Peterborough will have undying memories of her brave ones who counted life and home and friends and love not dearer than Britain's and freedom's call.

The Young Men's Christian Association developed some of those who went to the front: Helped to mould their characters on the solid rock of Christian principles: Shaped their ideals, gave them aspirations, saved them from error and guarded them in many and righteous ways.

Your money made all this possible. When you subscribed your dollar, your $10.00, your $100.00 to the Young Men's Christian Association you were investing it in young manhood.

Your money helped to keep up the building, pay for the heat, light and equipment. Helped to supply the reading room with papers and periodicals. Helped to provide a helpful and spiritual environment. Helped to pay for instructors and helped to sustain the gymnasium work. Your money saved many of these young fellows from evil habits, from the path of backsliders, from drunkenness, from gambling, from indiscretions which degrade young manhood. Your money helped—your dollar, ten dollars, your hundred dollars, did all this good work. Surely it was well expended. Can you think of a larger return on an investment ?

Do you regret the investment ? Are you not ready to again give as much, yea, double as much ? Surely you look at it as an investment in young men, in the machine that keeps a young man upright, up-climbing. Better than an investment in indulgences, extravagances and selfishness.

Men and Women of Peterborough !

Young Men and Women of Peterborough !

We appeal to YOU for your aid and influence to keep Peterborough a clean city---a breeder of young men of strong character and true manhood.

It Will Take

$3,000 to clear the Association from debt.

$3,500 to meet this year's upkeep.

$2,000 for permanent repairs, such as shingling the roof, repairing the boiler, and other essentials.

$3,500 to enlarge the building, to provide needed increased accommodation and fifteen additional revenue-producing dormitories, which with an improved interior arrangement will increase the yearly returns, (after allowing for the expense of maintenance) by $2000 per year, for needed furniture and general equipment.

$12,000 to Help the 'Y'

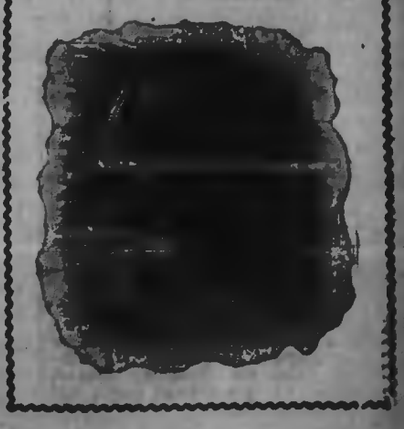
Are You Going To Do YOUR PART ?

WILL YOU PUT UP YOUR SHARE ?

Invest a small part of your money in practical Christianity for Peterborough's good.

Men and Women of Peterborough ! You have given once, twice, thrice, for Civic Good, for Civic Honour, for the Red Cross, for Belgian Relief, for the Patriotic Fund. We ask you most earnestly, and we hope convincingly, to give again. "Give, and it shall be given unto you, good measure, pressed down and shaken together and running over, shall men give unto your bosom. For with the same measure that ye mete withal it shall be measured to you again."

GIVING ! That is the true test of character. By some Divine alchemy our gifts for the world's uplift are restored to us transmuted into God's good Gold.



Are You A Friend of Peterborough ?
IF SO—SUPPORT THE "Y" !

CANVASSING DATES---TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY and THURSDAY, JUNE 8th, 9th, 10th—ALL DAY

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

OPENING BAND CONCERT WAS A BIG TREAT— FINE PROGRAMME GIVEN

The band concert season was inaugurated last evening when the band of the 57th Regiment under the direction of Lieut. R. Gliddon, rendered a delightful programme. The weather conditions were all that could be desired and as a consequence the crowd was very large.

The band, recently reinforced by the return to its ranks of several of the soloists who have been absent for some time, was in splendid fettle, and their long and varied programme was thoroughly enjoyed The overture "Raymond," the most ambitious effort of the evening, was played with an evident appreciation of its beauty. A selection from the tuneful English music comedy "The Gaiety Girl," with its perenially popular "Tommy Atkins," was enthusiastically received. 'A Southern Wedding' a rollicking ethopian novelty, with a vocal and whistling chorus, was cleverly presented, and the tuneful characteristic "In the Shadows," met with a favourable impression. "The Irish Patrol" was splendidly played and the four march numbers on the programme "United Empire," "The Avenger," "Boston Commandery," and "Col. Gorton" were given with an irresistible swing and dash.

The trombone solo "The Holy City" by Bandsman Gilbert, was a treat, the soloist showing a thorough mastery over his difficult instrument, and his number was warmly applauded.

As a finale the band aroused the enthusiasm of the crowd with "Rule Britannia," which had to be repeated and "The Soldiers of the King."

Par Value Asked For Debentures

Odd Lot of Thirty-Year Sewer Debentures for Sale at Par

Mr. J. W. Bennett, on behalf of the Peterborough Protestant Home, has written to the Finance committee of the City Council, asking for a price on two thousand dollars worth of five per cent, sewer debentures. Ald. Green is of the opinion that the city could not afford to let them go at less than par even should it be necessary to hold them for a while longer. The debentures which cover a period of thirty years, are a job lot. Mr. Bennett will be advised that the city will not accept less than par value for the debentures named.

Germany Is Now One Great Truck Farm

BERLIN, June 5—Germany is but one immense truck garden and farm this year. Not in the entire history of the empire has there been such a wholesale reversion to agriculture.

Within a month an Associated Press correspondent had the opportunity of crossing Germany from the most remote northeastern Prussian frontier at Nimmersatt to the Swiss boundary in the southwest, at Leopoldshohe, and of travelling through almost every section of the country except the southwest.

The story without exception was the same. In unprecedented numbers Germans have turned out, in the cities as well as the country, and have ploughed and planted every available acre, almost every square yard of land, in anticipation of a crop that shall put an end to the rumours that the country can be starved out.

The casual visitor to Germany leaves invariably with the impression that there are unusual numbers of young men still in civil life who have not been called to the colours. This impression fades once one gets into the country, however, and it is the exception to see men of military age working in the fields.

In their places are large numbers of women, boys ranging from six to sixteen years, and old men, all industriously ploughing, planting or sowing. In places of the horses that have been requisitioned for military purposes one sees oxen, and even milch cows, attached to plows, harrows and waggons.

Gardens are Everywhere.

So keen has the agricultural contest become that plots of ground that formerly went to waste are now being prepared for gardens. For miles and miles the ploughing extends right up to the railroad tracks, and in places, especially in the central and southern parts of Germany, miniature truck gardens lie between the rails—the gardens of minor railroad officials.

The approach to every city of any size in the land is heralded by acres of tiny gardens, planted and cared for by city residents, who in every spare moment make for the suburbs and spend their time in working. To maintain at least a small plot of ground has become almost a patriotic duty.

Greater Berlin, in common with dozens of other cities, presents an unprecedented appearance. Tennis courts by the dozen have been ripped up and transformed into gardens. A trip through the suburbs on any afternoon reveals hundreds of persons bent over their work.

With characteristic German thoroughness, the gardening impulse has been carefully fostered for months. In the winter plans were laid for giving instruction to women in the agricultural arts, and now that spring has arrived the female relatives of the men in the field are [illegible] their share toward [illegible] crop that shall be a record [illegible]

Voice of The People

To the Editor The Examiner:

The opening of the band concert season in Victoria Park last evening was a great success—except for the misguided few who went there for the purpose of listening to the music. The youngsters—and there were more than ever last night—had a noisy and riotous time; dogs barked, automobiles dashed madly up Brock and Murray streets, with the cut-outs open, little girls danced, and bigger ones giggled; little boys played tag and bigger ones sold papers. Young people flirted and older people gossiped, and the policeman on duty slept peacefully. A few people apparently tried to listen to the excellent music that the band was playing, but every pianissimo passage was drowned in the babble of the crowd. The Park is open every night in the week, why not turn that swarm of misbehaved grown-ups loose on the other evenings and keep Friday night for those who love good music and want a chance to listen to it. Apparently the great mass of the people who are in the Park Friday night have some other object than hearing the band. They don't listen while they are there, and they break for home as if a thunderstorm is imminent long before the programme is completed. They could gossip and flirt, eat peanuts and throw paper bags around any other night in the week. Why not try it for a while and give the music-lovers a chance?

And again when are the people of Peterborough going to learn how to pay proper respect for the National Anthem? Last night when the band rose to its feet and struck into the first bars of "God Save the King," there was a mad rush for the exits. Not fifty people stood while the Anthem was played, and not half a dozen men removed their hats. One would think that now of all times there would be proper regard for the National Anthem. Our preachers should point out to their congregations that "God Save the King" is something more than a signal that its time to go home. Although I have lived in Peterborough all my life, there are occasions when a local crowd makes me positively blush. And the utter disregard for the National Anthem is one of these occasions. With all our churches, schools, mothers' clubs and other organizations, it is a miracle that there should be so many badly trained children, and so many adults that fail to show the least appreciation of the fitness of things as band concert nights prove we have in Peterborough.

Yours truly,
DISGUSTED.

CITY HALL PARAGRAPHS

What's Doing in Civic Circles—Items of Interest Concerning Municipal Administration

The Board of Works will be asked to investigate complaints respecting the Bell Telephone Company, who is charged by Alderman Weir with mutilating trees in East City. Alderman Weir claims that whole tops are cut out of the trees.

Peterborough's Insane.

The Finance Committee has been notified by the Provincial authorities of a couple of Peterborough patients that have been admitted to the Mimico Hospital for the Insane, and for whose maintenance the city will be charged.

Painted Incinerator Stack.

The two steeplejacks, who have been operating in the city for the past week, were awarded the contract of painting the steel stack in connection with the incinerating plant. This they did for the sum of twenty-five dollars.

Houses Placarded.

Two houses have been placarded by Sanitary Inspector Spence as being "unfit for human habitation." The circumstance conected with one of these places may be aired in Police Court.

Slum Conditions.

The conditions that were found to exist in one of the two houses condemned by Sanitary Inspector Spence, in the words of the officials who inspected the premises, "beggar description." It was a case of five or six persons living in one room under conditions incompatible with clean living.

The Dust Nuisance.

Residents along Driscoll Terrace are in sympathy with the residents on Burnham street who are obliged to sit on the edge of the road and sprinkle the thoroughfare in an effort to mitigate the dust evil. Similar conditions prevail on Driscoll Terrace as well as in other parts of the city.

Resident Qualifications.

"What constitutes a resident," is the question that frequently disturbs the equanimity of the Finance committee, especially when it comes to a question of passing accounts respecting indigent patients.

By-law For Sub-station.

It is probable that a by-law authorizing the construction of a sub-station may come before the City Council on Monday night next. It will be eventually submitted to the people. The cost of the sub-station is estimated at $50,000.

Repairs to Council Chamber.

Repairs and improvements are being made to the City Council Chamber. The work is being undertaken by the City Trust Commission. A new set of chairs are being put in for the Aldermen.

Meetings To-day.

The Court of Revision is due to meet this afternoon at four o'clock, when a number of matters respecting appeals on sewers and sidewalks will be dealt with. At the same hour the Board of Health will meet.

WITH OTHER MUNICIPALITIES.

Application has been made by the Water, Light and Sewer Commission to the Ingersoll Council to provide $10,000 for additions and extensions to the waterworks plant.

Two Mills Increase.

Four and one-tenth mills will be the tax rate in Brant county after a day and a half of work by the Councillors in trying to prune the estimates. This is a flat increase of two mills, and is almost entirely due to the war.

Successful Campaign.

The splendid sum of $8,519.90 has been subscribed in two days in Whitby during a campaign in aid of the Canadian Patriotic and the Red Cross Society Funds, and this is in a town of less than three thousand people, and at a time when the town taxes are being collected.

Ingersoll's Tax Rate.

It is expected that Ingersoll's tax rate for 1915 will be 27 1-2 mills on the dollar. This will be the recommendation of the Finance committee to the Council on Monday night, and it is expected a by-law will be passed accordingly. Last year the rate was 26 1-2.

$25,000 to Repair School.

It will cost Brantford $25,000 to put the Central school in proper sanitary condition, and the City Council will be asked to pay that sum to the Board of Education, to be spent in making an up-to-date building.

Seven Cases of Smallpox.

There are now seven cases of small pox in the Toronto Swiss Cottage Hospital at Riverdale.

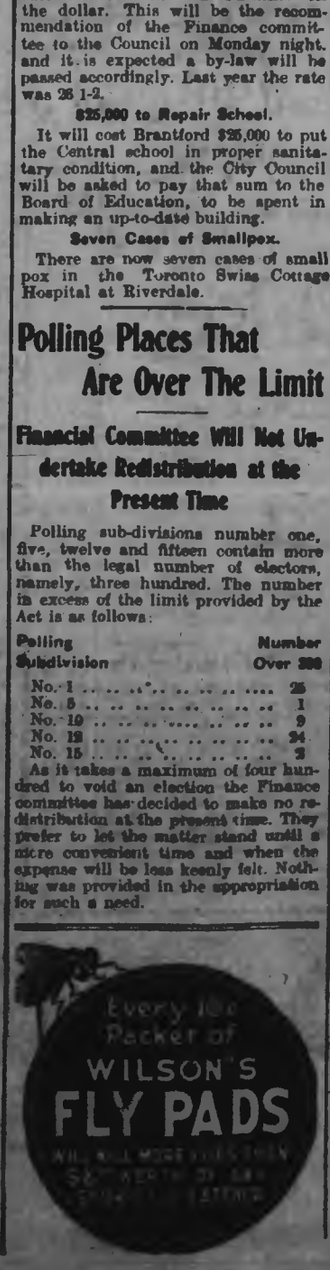
Polling Places That Are Over The Limit

Financial Committee Will Not Undertake Redistribution at the Present Time

Polling sub-divisions number one, five, twelve and fifteen contain more than the legal number of electors, namely, three hundred. The number in excess of the limit provided by the Act is as follows:

Polling Subdivision	Number Over 300
No. 1	25
No. 5	1
No. 10	9
No. 12	24
No. 15	2

As it takes a maximum of four hundred to void an election the Finance committee has decided to make no redistribution at the present time. They prefer to let the matter stand until a more convenient time and when the expense will be less keenly felt. Nothing was provided in the appropriation for such a need.



Trades and Labour Notes

(By the Official Scribe.)

Though the out-of-door attractions grow stronger as the summer advances, yet President Hammacott officiated over a fully representative gathering this week of Peterborough's organized labour.

Secretary Wm. Stevens was granted leave of absence for two months. Bro. R. Mitchell was chosen to carry on the duties.

The Municipal committee's report showed amongst other things that all the fighters are not at the front. More delegates were added to help the committee and its good work. It was decided to hold the usual demonstration on Labour Day. A strong committee was appointed with G. L. Myland as chairman, Chas. Hammacott as secretary, the various sub-committees being also appointed. The delegates present who were nominated will greatly assist if they will inform those other delegates who were nominated though absent at last meeting, that the meeting of the general committee takes place Wednesday, June 10 at 8 p.m.

The delegate to the Labour Educational Association's convention presented his report which was brimful of interesting information to all labourers. The Association's effort to relieve unemployment by the manufacture of toys was gladly received, for it showed that the initial up-hill work to get a footing in the market had been overcome, the ingenuity and price, coupled with the "made in Canada" label, putting the kibosh on those of Fatherland manufacture. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the delegate for his well delivered description of the proceedings.

The Compensation Act, now of paramount importance to toilers, should be studied with diligence; to facilitate this the Legislative committee were asked to secure copies of the measure.

Labour Day joys and routine business took up the remaining portion of the evening.

tack. Now, as both parties are locked up together in carrying on he war, their joint decision will be free and merciless, if need be, because they are saved from any attack based purely on party spirit. They can easily withstand merely irresponsible criticism from isolated individuals. Thus the final verdict is that the country has been enormously strengh ened by the temporary commingling of all political forces.

Feeling in Ireland.

There is a somewhat more critical feeling in Ireland. Redmond's refusal and the absence of any Irish Nationalist fro mthe Cabinet, still creates regret in British circles, Tory as well as Liberal, but Ireland approves. A number of public bodies in Ireland have sent addresses to Redmond, and many events demonstrate that Redmond best serves both the interests of Ireland and the struggle of the Allies for European liberty by remaining an unofficial but equally responsible and more powerful minister for Ireland. These signs are confirmed by the undoubted indications of uneasiness in the Irish popular mind in regard to Sir Edward Carson's hostile influence.

In the meanwhile this transformation of the ministry, revealing as it does the gravity, peril and difficulties of the job which confronts the nation, reflects itself in the attitude of the general public. One gets evidences everywhere of the more profound feeling concerning the war. The bonds are drawn more tightly about every department of British life. One symptom is the prosecution of the London "Times," which has hitherto been allowed perfect liberty to criticise everybody with licentious freedom, sometimes with such bg results as the dismissal of Lord Haldane from the Chancellorship, and the creation of an entire ministerial crisis. But the ministry now feels strong enough to tackle even such a powerful personality as that of Lord Northcliffe, and public opinion will back up that or any other intervention which seeks to make the conduct of the war effective. Another sign of the times is the renewed agitation for compulsory military service. This campaign is confined, however, to the "Times" and "Morning Post," and meets with strong hostility from the Liberal press. It will probably not be attempted even by the reconstructed ministry in the face of the strong conflict of opinions which any such proposal would be bound to excite. But, though conscription will not come, other drastic measures of national coordination and cooperation will be welcomed, and before many weeks virtually every citizen, male and female, in Great Britain, will be organised to help in making war in one form or another.

Women are Restless.

The women are growing daily more restless because they are insufficiently used for war purposes. The most palpable and most curious fact in today's life in London is that women are entering employments which were before not open to them, and that in many hotels, especially since the Italian exodus, they appear as waiters, lift boys and porters.

This growth in the national determination and concentration is also evidenced by the fierce condemnation of all strikes, and notably of the strike of the tramway drivers of London, which collapsed largely through the fierce denunciation of the public, including letters from former tramway drivers now in the trenches who were disgusted at the want of patriotism on the part of their comrades a home.

The prospect, then, since the creation of the new ministry, is for harder work, more men, more women at war work, a fiercer spirit, less toleration of criticism or division of any kind; and for a better administration moving in an atmosphere of national concentration instead of in a division of spirit along party lines.

In such a mood, less swayed by day-to-day incidents, a reverse or a victory in any local centre in either east or west neither depresses nor excites the people as it did earlier in the war. Even the Zeppelin attack upon London did not move a hair of anybody's head. Most of the people of the West End of London were content to remain without asking for further information in regard to what happened.

Neither England nor London can longer be much excited or frightened. The war has come to stay and as such it is accepted with the equanimity which comes from a certainty of ultimate victory.

John Bull is more John Bull than ever in his phlegm, his sullen determination, and his calm tenacity. This accounts largely for the absence of any large option or hope in America's intervention. This is not from indifference, but from the certainty that America had better be spared unwelcome advice, and that conditions and events apart from British interests and desires will bring the United States and Germany into irreconcileable differences, for everybody here now believes that the submarines constitute German's last desperate weapon, to which she looks for the possibility of straightening England's commerce and food supply, and that therefore Germany must face any danger—even world-wide reprobation—rather than abandon the last gambler's throw for victory.

The Military Operations.

I need make no comment on the military operations, in the presence of such a temper on the part of the people of Great Britain as I have described, except that I may state that Italy seems to have made a splendid start.

Russia once again is making a recovery from apparently gigantic disaster and while the final attitude of the other neutral nations, and especially of Roumania and Bulgaria, is still uncertain, it is at least certain that no neutral will ever back up Germany in her policy as exemplified in the torpedoing of the Lusitania. The attack on the Nebraskan opens no new issue, but it and the threats against other big vessels which have sighted German submarines in the Irish Sea indicate that Germany has not in the least abandoned her policy at sea.

The strain of carrying on the war is telling on all the chief figures in it. I have already told that in France most of the ministers seemed to me to be little better than walking automata. Premier Viviani had not had an hour's vacation for months—not since the war began; and he seemed scarcely able to carry on a conversation. M. Delcasse also, the Foreign Secretary, seemed to be very tired. Probably both the men are reduced further in vitality because Viviani has lost a son in battle, while the son of M. Delcasse is wounded and a prisoner in Germany.

With us most of the ministers have been spared the final loss of their children; but Mr. Asquith has four sons in the war, and one has been already wounded. Lloyd George has two sons in the army; neither yet has gone to the front, but they soon will have to go. Bonar Law has also two sons in the war. Death has never been so busy in the ranks of the upper classes. If things go on as they are, it will be true of England, as it has been said of Germany, that the aristocracy was created by war, and perished in war.

Strain is Telling.

The strain is telling, although English ministers, unlike those of France do keep themselves in good condition by exercise, fresh air and that determination to take occasional holidays which is an incurable British instituton. Mr. Asquith regularly goes from Friday night to Monday morning to the country; his country house is quite close to London, and is near a very beautiful golf course, where I have often seen him playing on a Sunday. Besides, Mr. Asquith, is almost inhuman in the splendor of his health. I heard him once say at a meeting of doctors that he never had the least necessity for medical advice. Just for a few weeks when the strain on him was very heavy, he did show signs of human weakness. It was about a couple of years ago; he had a troublesome boil on the back of his neck, but it passed off, and he was himself again. Since the war began he has seemed almost to flourish upon it. It is true that his hair is very white. Like Lloyd George he always wears it long, largely, I believe, because he finds it a waste of time and a bother to go to a hair cutter. Some two years ago he strolled accidentally into a barber's shop in the east end of London; he is rather fond of those little excursions into quiet places. When he was Chancellor of the Exchequer he used to drop into Simpson's, a famous but not fashionable, restaurant, and take his cut off the joint, and his small bottle of wine all alone, just as a few years before, when he was still a barrister only, he frequented Grooms in Fleet Street—a tiny little coffee shop where customers never get anything but a cup of coffee or tea and an egg or toasted bun. His face looks full and florid, his nerve seems under perfect control, and he speaks with his usual command of language and of himself.

Grey Suffers Most.

Sir Edward Grey seems to have suffered most from the anxieties of the war. This is a surprise, for he always seemed one of the most robust men in the Cabinet, and his robustness was increased by his great abstemiousness. I have heard that now and then he would take a few glasses of Hermitage—an inexpensive and delightful French wine; and a friend, boasting of the wine, said that it made Sir Edward Grey almost human. This cold, reserved man usually looks as if he were incapable of unbending, although his reserve is partly the result of more than even the usual quality of English shyness. He was said to have been a good deal upset during the first weeks after the war began, for, of course, he knew how large was his responsibility of the terrific conflict; though nobody in England now outside of a few cranks does not agree with his policy of vigilance against Germany, and everybody is satisfied that if war could have been prevented he would have done so.

But the large amount of reading he has had to do and the long hours he has had to labour have affected his eyesight; he now wears blue goggles, looks thin and worn, for the affection of the eye has affected his general health. He badly wants a vacation. Now and then he has taken a few days, and has rushed down to a trout stream and fished all day long, usually alone or with one companion. But that is not enough for a man who has worked so hard.

One of the men who has emerged from a certain eclipse and from the easy-going life of golf and tennis to which he felt himself entitled to rush after twenty years of almost unbroken office, is Mr. Balfour, who has also joined the big band of hard workers. He is an important member of the war council, a body which he himself created, and which has the general control of military and naval affairs. But though he is very thin man and at one time was considered too lackadaisical to work at all, he has great reserves of strength and nerve. His heart troubled him a good deal at the time when his leadership was challenged by the more ardent protectionists of his own party, but apparently a few years of rest and freedom from anxiety have restored that organ.

Lloyd George Tired.

Lloyd George looks very tired, largely because he apparently takes up every other man's job as well as his own. People heard more from him about the want of ammunition than they ever did from Lord Kitchener. Curiously enough, although he is a man of sanguine temperament he has always been the most serious, and I might even say, the most anxious about the war among his colleagues. He always said that it would be a tough business.

I said to him once, "We must set our teeth." "Perhaps," he replied, "we may also have to tighten our belts."

Of course he never had the least doubt—nobody in England has—as to the ultimate triumph of the cause of the Allies, but he has differed even from some of his colleagues in the duration to which he has put it. He has grown rather irritable, and especially since he failed in carrying the grandiose schemes which he proposed for nationalizing the drink traffic, and for putting down the consumption of all whisky during the war; and now and then he has said sharp and indiscreet things.

But he makes an effort to keep himself in form by going every night he can to his cottage at Walton Heath in a motor car — it is only forty minutes by motor from London — and every Saturday, almost without exception, he plays golf. The Sabbatarian prejudices of his Nonconformist supporters would not understand his playing golf on a Sunday; so he generally invites some friends to lunch with him on that day, and when lunch is over and the conversation on some questions in suspense are closed, he goes off to sleep. He has the gift of sleeping anywhere; often he does it on two chairs; often in a motor car; nearly always in a train.

I am sure there are very few men in public life to-day in either France or England who would not welcome the hour which would rob them of their glory, but would at the same time release them from their killing labours.

Have you ever considered that by buying good tea you are distinctly economizing? Salada Tea is all pure clean leaves and the best at any price. It is so different from the majority of teas that contain dust to a varying degree, and one pound of Salada will go much further than a pound of any dusty tea. Then again, none other has that delightful flavour.

GROWTH HAS BEEN VERY RAPID

Crops Are Much in Need of Rain—Show Effects of Continued Dry Spell

Crops in Peterborough county are beginning to show the effect of the continued dry spell. The growth for the past eight or ten days has been very rapid and unless rain is forthcoming at an early date some of the good effects produced by the previous brand of good weather will have been lost. A substantial rain would be welcomed right now. The probabilities for this section of the country as announced to-day are moderate to fresh easterly winds, fine and warm.

Commission For Her Bravery

Tale of a Russian Girl of 18 Who Has Regularly Joined One of Cossacks Regiments

PETROGRAD, June 5.—According to a Kieff paper, a girl of 18, Alexandra Ephimovna Lagereva by name, has just recived a commission in one of the regiments of Don Cossacks. Her promotion from the ranks was a reward of special services. During one of the battles in the Suvalki Government, the detachment to which she belonged was surrounded by superior numbers and captured.

From certain remarks which the Germans let fall, and from the way in which they looked at her, it was evident that they had guessed the secret of her sex. Perhaps this was the reason that, when the other prisoners were divested of their property, she was allowed to retain her watch and compass. The prisoners were locked up in a church, outside which a sentry patrolled.

During the evening the party was visited by several German officers, who seemed to take a lively interest in Alexandra, and triggered a good deal among themselves. When all was quiet the prisoners broke a window and clambered out, and Alexandra managed to fell the sentry with a stone. The refugees succeeded in recovering their horses, and picked up one or two stragglers, who increased their number to seven. In this force they attacked a German patrol of eighteen Uhlans, and captured them all.

The lieutenant in command of the patrol, on discovering the number of his captors, flung off his hat and tore his hair with rage. He was found to be carrying documents of importance, and these were brought to the Russian commander by Alexandra, who seems to have been the virtual leader in the whole affair.

She is described as being of medium height, slender and graceful, and talks of her experiences of war very much as an ordinary girl of her years might speak of a tea party.

Grant to Health Association

Finance Committee Endorse Request "Until Further Notice"

The Finance Committee of the City Council will recommend that the sum of fifty dollars a month be granted to the Peterborough Health Association until further notice. By "further notice" is meant the city's intention to appeal to the Relief Association with a view of having that body assume a share of the responsibility. The Executive Committee of the [illegible] will [illegible] sometime next month when it may be possible to bring about a satisfactory arrangement of some kind. The Committee, in discussing the matter, viewed with appreciation the work of the Health Association, and were strongly inclined to the opinion that it would be unfair to have such a deserving body suffer for want of [illegible] while negotiations are pending.

DOORMAN HAS A MASSED FORTUNE OF $1,000,000

NEW YORK, June 5.—Jimmy Hebron, who for thirty years was doorman at Delmonico's, and who called Tammany's chieftains, Wall Street financiers, and social leaders by their first names, told Supreme Court Justice Gavegan how he amassed a fortune of more than a million dollars while earning $1 a day at his door opening job.

The old smile which made Jimmie's face almost as famous to the patrons of Delmonico's as the place itself, has not disappeared. Though past sixty and weighted down with troubles, Jimmie smiled every minute of the time he was on the witness stand, when he related how his son James, who also played the Wall Street game, but without success, fraudulently induce his father at a time when the old man's mind was not working just right, to sign a deed to an $80,000 piece of real estate in 53rd Street, near Lexington Avenue.

It is to regain possession of this property that Hebron began suit against a number of real estate companies and several individuals now in possession of the premises.

"Being college bred I was able to converse intelligently with any of the prominent men who dined regularly at Delmonico's," he testified, "and it is needless to say that without the friendly advice I got on such occasions I never could have made $1,000,000 in Wall Street.

"I started in with only $30," the aged witness continued. "I used that in Wall Street. With my profits I gradually branched out into other lines until I had not only a very successful real estate business, but also three livery stables, starting with one horse.

How Studebaker cars are built—starter

The Storage Battery is placed under the front seat and is easily reached at any time. Can be easily filled and is where you can look at and get at it. Connections are large and exposed. And the battery is protected by a special repair guarantee from the maker.

The Electric Generator is a very simple, tight and compact dynamo. Has automatic system of wiring that prevents overcharge of storage battery. Driven by noiseless all-fabric gear in mesh with timing-gear. Needs no care—but is extremely accurate.

The Starter that NEVER Fails

The BIG thing that we'd like you to notice in this Studebaker Starter is its absolute reliability. You press down the starting pedal and, winter or summer, no matter what the weather may be, the motor begins to spin. It NEVER fails. And there's one test on record when the motor was stopped and started 800 times in succession without a slip.

Built to order for the Studebaker Car by the Wagner Electric Company, following Studebaker designs, it is the simplest starter imaginable. As EASY to run and take care of as the electric motor on a sewing-machine. Needs no care, except for refilling the storage battery with a little water twice a month. And every last detail is easily reached.

It cranks the motor thro' a silently-running chain—not thro' gears in mesh with the fly-wheel. It is at rest when it isn't cranking the motor. Noiseless, therefore. And it cranks the motor FASTER than other starters, because there are no mechanical complications, and it delivers MORE power.

But in every little detail of the whole system, you'll find the same simplicity and the same certainty that you expect in a Studebaker Car simply —because it's a Studebaker

So why not come in and see this Electric Starter? Like to have you see the convenience of the starter-pedal and how the switch is made damp-proof and dirt-proof. And then, we'd like to have you drive the car yourself and know from personal experience at this wheel the CERTAINTY of this NEVER-fail Electric Starter that Studebaker uses. When will be most convenient? And if you can't come in soon, write for our booklet on the Studebaker Electric System.

TRUST COMMISSION HAS LARGE SURPLUS

City Made An Unsuccessful Bid For It On Two Occassions — Question of Bonus By-Law

Bonus By-law No. 1314, representing a bonus of $1,200 that was paid to the Rapid Tool Company, and which amount was returned to the city when that company failed to comply with the terms of the agreement, has bobbed up once more. This time it found its way to the Finance Committee of the City Council, and if nothing else was responsible for that Committee finding out that the Peterborough City Trust Commission is in possession of a surplus amounting to thirty thousand dollars. There is some difference of opinion as to what disposition should be made of the $1,200 in question, as it represents money that was voted for a specific purpose and is therefore not available for the general funds of the city. Some of the aldermen suggested that the city secure an order from the Municipal Railway Board, empowering the city to pay the money over to the City Trust Commission, to be used as a contingency fund or some other such purpose. It was then discovered that the Commission is already in possession of a large surplus. Ald. Green thought that the city might obtain special legislation, vesting in the city the right to make use of the thirty thousand dollar surplus. It was pointed out that such a proposal had failed on two previous occasions. It was decided to leave the matter concerning the $1,200 as it is until such time as the city applies for private legislation.

Mitigating The Caterpillar Evil

Board of Works is Prosecuting the Work With Vigor—Action Finds Approval.

"That is the best service the Board of Works is rendering the city at the present time," remarked a citizen this morning, as he watched a civic employee apply a coal oil torch to a nest of caterpillars. Some two or three hundred dollars has been voted for this work with a prospect of more should circumstances warrant. Two men have been assigned to the work. Their duties consist of going around the various wards of the city and taking such steps as may be necessary to eradicate the caterpillars that abound. Some of the officials are inclined to the opinion that the property owners should be made responsible for this work. Such an opinion finds little favour with the citizens generally. It would be very little use destroying the caterpillars on private property if the city did not perform a similar function along the thoroughfares and open waste places.

Farmers Effected.

Farmers and fruit-growers are making every effort to stamp out the tent caterpillar, whose visit this year threatens to become very serious. Although it is still early in the season, many parts of the country are already overrun with the pest. In many of the orchards the trees have been absolutely stripped of foliage.

Experiments at the Ontario Agricultural College have proved that a solution composed of arsenate of lead in proportions of between two and one-half to three pounds to forty gallons of water, if applied before the caterpillars have made any great ravages, will exterminate them.

"Releasing the Soul of a Nation" Is One of the Problems of Canada

Principal John MacKay of Vancouver, contributes to The Westminster the second article of his on "Canadian Problems," dealing on this occasion with "Releasing the Soul of a Nation." This release he expects to be the result of the sacrifices Canada is now making for the cause of Empire and of freedom.

First he thinks there will come a passion for unity—a contempt for all efforts to divide Canadians along racial lines, and a determination to "think and dream and love Canada with one soul and one life from pole to borderland."

His second thought is that Canada will build up a reputation for integrity, more particularly in her politics. Incidentally he says: "The readiness with which the government granted every facility for investigating the army purchase scandals is encouraging, and the country must be proud of its premier for his outspoken words of censure of the men in his own party on whom blame rests." It's a pity to spoil the picture of Sir Robert thus painted, but its accuracy will be more generally accepted when it is seen that adequate punishment is to be meted out to those who have sought to enrich themselves at the country's expense.

The third ideal, the realization of which Prof. MacKay looks for, is efficiency, which means men and women getting the highest out of their threefold being, body, mind and spirit, and making the largest possible contribution to the life of the community.

A passion for liberty is the third ideal to which Prof. MacKay would have Canadians attain, and as to this he says: "In the name of liberty, the dearest treasure of the British race, we must sweep the corrupt politicians out of public office; we must strive to make it possible for the weakest citizen to get fair play and a decent opportunity and yet be free to think and vote according to the dictates of his conscience." This declaration is based on the assumption that many Canadians, more especially among the newcomers, are little better than pawns in the hands of political leaders. This is rather broad generalization, and would carry more weight if specific instances were given of where the writer deplores Party at the cost of the condition of Manitoba under the Roblin government in his eye when he drew such a gloomy picture.

A stronger imperialism is the next ideal of Prof. MacKay, but he wants "No petty jingoistic Imperialism which thinks it honours Britain by antagonizing all other nations. . . . Imperialism must not be the cheap vaunting of political scoundrels, but the deep passion of a whole people for the things which have made Britain great. . . . Our national soul is begotten by the union of two great races now fighting side by side, and if we are intensely and enthusiastically British we may still be true to all that France has given us of chivalry and of greatness."—In other words, after French and British have fought side by side for the attainment of a common purpose, there must no longer be any dividing line drawn between Canadians of French and English descent, or Canadians of any descent, and it must be possible to be loyal to Great Britain without sneering allusions to sister nations, such as the United States. But this is not all. There must be a readjustment of the relations of the self-governing colonies, and of India as well, to the Mother Country, and as to this the Vancouver professor has apparently no vision. He sees much, but he does not see far enough.

Finally, the Professor would have "the spirit of the Christ transmuted into all the institutions and relations of our life as a nation. Then the soul of the nation, embodying the best traits of our common humanity, though stamped with peculiar characteristics, born of our environment, will stand up strong and fearless in the sisterhood of Christian nations of the world that is to be."

The war must mean much to the British Empire, to Canada and to the world at large, if the ideals for which the Allies are contending, are successful. Should they fail, how dismal the picture? The time, however, is scarcely ripe for old men to see visions, or for young men to dream dreams. The immediate duty is to make thorough and complete the overthrow of the ideals of life which seek to prevent the dawn of the better day to which Prof. MacKay is seeking to draw attention.—Montreal Gazette.

The Lure of the Lakes Here Again

The Rice Lake Service to be Resumed at an Early Date—No "Yankee Bonnet"

In these days of automobiles when a spin into the country is so simple, and comparatively inexpensive, a day's recreation can be enjoyed with a heap of satisfaction—that's no fable. But to paterfamilias, who has not been able to reach the price of a motor car, the lure of our lakes offer attractions that give ample scope for healthy and safe enjoyment.

Peterborough citizens enjoy privileges for lake picnics and excursions which too few appreciate. The Rice Lake trip has become one of the most convenient, interesting and least expensive that can be imagined. Everyone knows what makes the difference between healthful work and hard, heart-breaking labour. It is not the work itself. It's the way you've hoked up to the universe in general, and what you've got to look forward to, day after day. And if one wants to keep on the right side of health and happiness, there is always the Rice Lake steamer service to take us on a day's vacation away from the daily grind of life.

Given a beautiful river like the Otonabee and a continuous panorama of lovely scenery all the way to Rice Lake, a well filled hamper, and a good companion, no one need envy the motor car or its bumps.

The "Yankee Bonnet."

People who go up and down the River Otonabee in the various craft are familiar with the shoal, or ridge across the river, about a couple of miles below the locks and which is known as the "Yankee Bonnet." Enquiry has been made as to how the shoal came to be so named. The shoal has been dredged in the centre or middle of the stream, to afford a channel, giving a sufficient depth of water for safe navigation. Some years ago a large quantity of large field stone was cast in, along the crest of the shoal, from the west bank, and for one-third of the distance across the river. For the purpose of diverting the flow of water to the middle of the stream. At low water, as now is the case, the top of the shoal and stone show very clearly. The river at this point is plentifully buoyed, that the mariner, even if he be inexperienced, may not go astray.

Various reasons for the queer name given to the shoal, have been put forward, many of the explanations being made up by the narrator who would wish to appear as posted on such things. It is probable that the explanation given in some matter written by the late Mrs. Traill is the correct one, at least no better has been offered and, as the shoal was named and known by name as far back as 1833 the authority is likely correct.

At the time mentioned, the dam at Hastings had not been built and, consequently the level of Rice Lake and the Otonabee was much lower than is now the case. The Traills reached Cobourg early in the autumn of 1831 and on September 9th drove out from Cobourg to where Gore's Landing now stands. There they embarked on the first steamer plying on the waters, named the "Governor Simcoe," the Indian word for fire boat. In narrating the trip up the river, Mrs. Traill writes as follows:

"Owing to the many rapids and shallows in the river, the steamer was unable to go up the river, the whole way to Peterborough, so a large, unwieldy skow had been engaged to meet us at a point called the "Yankee Bonnet," so named from the fanciful resemblance the topmost branches of a tree growing on the bank had to the shape of the cap worn by the Yankees."

No tree in the neighbourhood now carries such shape, and it has very likely been cut down or fallen years ago, the interval being over 75 years.

Connie Mack to Try Out College Players

Determined to Build Up His Wrecked Baseball Club—Wants Pitchers

PHILADELPHIA, June 5.—Connie Mack is not folding his hands in the Athletics' present crisis. He announced a few days ago that he was going to try young players by the wholesale between now and June 20, when the colleges close.

The big list of injured stars now on the Athletic team has hastened Connie's building-up programme.

A young player named Ryan is scheduled to arrive here to-day. It was not announced where Ryan came from. He will cover second until Lajoie's injuries mend.

A number of college pitchers will report in the next few weeks, and Connie will do everything in his power to steady his tottering pitching staff. "I'm going to build up," said Connie last night, "and there will be a lot of young players tried. Of course, I am concentrating my attention on the pitching staff. I haven't the problems elsewhere. I'm trying to brace the team this year. I am not going to hand any wait-until-next-season alibi to the fans."

The tall tutor said that the only reason he released Pennock was because he was not making good. "Pennock was tried frequently on the Western trip," said Connie, "and never lasted more than an inning or two. As he has been with the team three years, I couldn't experiment with him any longer. I asked waivers on him and Boston interposed and obtained him for the waiver price of $1,500. Pennock is a fine chap and I wish him the best luck in the world."

Mack thinks that all his injured except Schang will return to the game by the end of the week. He hopes to use Oldring in left field to-day. Stuffy McInnis will arrive in Philadelphia from Gloucester, but will not play for several days. It will be nearly a week before Larry is ready, too. The big Frenchman, it developed, was made ill by the blow he received from a foul ball that hit his foot. He has been under the care of a physician.

Mack said that he never saw a gamer exhibition put up by a crippled team like that of the Athletics Saturday. "We came through with two great ninth-inning rallies," he continued, "which speaks wonders for their grit when it is considered that only Barry and Murphy were in their regular positions.

"Harry Davis' fine pinch hit won the first for us, and we could have won the second had it not been for Lloyd Davis' misjudge of Shore's fly. Oldring or Walsh would have caught that ball."

STILL HAS FOOD AND COPPER

Special to The Examiner:

BERLIN, June 4.—"If our epemies are waiting till we are starved out, till we are short of copper, they'll have a jolly long wait."

It was Dr. Walther Rathenau speaking, "the man who keeps Germany eating and shooting," the chief of the raw material department at the German War Office. He continued:

Wants to Show Menus.

"Why don't you go and take some of the menus in our large restaurants, have photographic copies made of them, and verified by your Consuls. Send those abroad, and let people judge for themselves how badly we are starving.

"If you take the yearly statistics you will find that Germany during the last five years has imported an average of over 200,000 tons of copper per year. With our own productions at Mansfield our total supply amounted to close on 250,000 tons. Our exports of electrical goods, machinery, etc., in which copper has been used, did not exceed 100,000 tons a year, so nearly 150,000 tons of copper has remained in the country.

Kitchen Utensils Utilized.

"Much of this has been combined with other metals, but we have experimented, and our chemical developments have reached such a stage of perfection that over 75 per cent. can be reduced again to pure copper. We have thousands of tons of telegraph wires which can be substituted with steel [illegible] other metal. Then go into some of the German kitchens. There is hardly a house where you will not find a certain number of copper pots and pans in shining glory.

More Surprises To Come.

"Look at the amount of copper [illegible] in every house, every hotel, every building. Our mines at Mansfield have turned out close on 30,000 tons a year, but we have been able to increase the output by at least 50 per cent. to about 45,000 tons. Besides, there are one or two sources which our enemies have not figured on. One of them is the wonderful state of development our chemistry has reached.

"The best brains in the land are working on a new product that may give the world in general, and our enemies in particular, another surprise, as did our 42s and our submarines. No, we are not at the end of our tether yet, not by a long way. Germany cannot be destroyed."

FINANCIAL MAGNATES AS PRIVATES

WHILE to the casual observer the picture reproduced above may seem of but passing moment it is particularly of interest to those who follow closely the financial fortunes of the Dominion. The figure at the right hand side next to the officer who has his back turned to the camera is that of Sir Frederick Williams-Taylor, General Manager of the Bank of Montreal; next to him in the rank is A. E. Hold, General Manager of the Royal Trust Co., while the third figure in that of A. D. McTier, General Manager of Eastern Lines of the Canadian Pacific. The picture was snap-shotted during the recent review of the Montreal forces by H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught. The picture distinctly shows the smile of surprised recognition lighting up the face of His Royal Highness as he recognizes Sir Frederick in the ranks as a simple private of the Home Guards of Montreal.

A WELL-FED ARMY.

British Soldiers Get Fat in the Trenches, Says Gifford Pinchot.

Gifford Pinchot, former chief forester of the United States, has returned from a visit to France and England filled with wonder at the marvellous efficiency of the British military organization and the high order of the army's equipment.

Mr. Pinchot says the British army of 2,000,000 men is better equipped and better fed than any army ever put in the field. Two men seldom mentioned in the war news are largely responsible for these conditions, he says.

These men are Sir John Cowans, quartermaster general of the British army, and Gen. Robertson, now chief of staff to Sir John French, but until recently in charge of transportation and subsistence for the British in France.

"Cowans is a remarkable man," said Mr. Pinchot. "He is a man who never seems to have anything to do. I saw him several times in England, and he never gave an indication that he was carrying on his shoulders the burden of keeping the supplies of food and clothing moving across the channel to the men in the trenches in abundance and without fail. Yet this man has managed British transports, supplies, clothing and food in such a way that an English officer told me he missed the jam for his tea only once, even during the trying retreat from Mons.

"Here is an example of the way Cowans does things. When the men in the trenches were suffering from rheumatism and frost bite during the winter he had a commission of doctors and chemists prepare him the formula for a grease the men could put on their feet to protect them from the water and cold.

"The formula was turned over to him at 9:30 on Wednesday night. By 11 o'clock Friday night a train carrying 600,000 one-pound cans of this grease was on its way to Dover ready for transportation to the trenches.

"Gen. Robertson, the second most important man in the British army's commissary department, until his promotion, began life as a footman. He has risen to one of the most important posts in the army by sheer ability. Robertson tired of the life of a footman and entered the army. He was sent to India. There he took the officers' examination and passed. When the war broke out his ability as an executive was so well known that he was put in charge of the second most important post in England's system of feeding and clothing her army."

Sir John Cowans told Mr. Pinchot that the food given every soldier in the British army averages four pounds a day, nearly twice the usual amount of rations considered sufficient. "The soldiers actually get fat in the trenches," Mr. Pinchot said.

CANADA'S VOLUNTEER

Farewell Canada thy woods, prairies and skies.
Now gay with the broad setting sun.
Farewell loves and friendships, and dear tender ties,
I must go and meet Kaiser's Hun.

Thou Kaiser of terrors, thou savage grim foe,
Go frighten the coward and slave,
To teach them to tremble fell tyrant but know.
No terrors hast thou to the brave.

In fields of proud honour our swords in our hands,
Our King and our country to save,
While victory shines on life's ebbing sands,
Oh, who would not die with the brave.

Thou run'st on Belgium, thou strik'st in the dark,
Nor sav'st thou the wreck of a name,
The Belgian hero, a glorious mark,
Who falls in the blaze of his fame.

Roumania and Uncle Sam may join in,
If so the sad war might soon cease,
The great allied army might go to Berlin.
Then the Kaiser would cry for peace,

WEDDING BELLS

BICKELL—CHAPMAN.

A very pretty wedding took place Tuesday, June 1st, at the home of Mrs. Robert Bridges, 37 York Street, this city, when his sister, Miss Annie C. Chapman, was united in marriage to Mr. John Bickell, of Peterborough. The ceremony took place at 11 a.m., Rev. Hugh Cowan, B.D., of Haynes Avenue Presbyterian church, being the officiating clergyman. The bride was unattended, and was given away by her brother-in-law, Mr. Robert Bridges, while the duties of flower girl were daintily fulfilled by her little niece, Miss Mildred Bridges. The happy couple left on the afternoon train for their future home at Peterborough, followed by the good wishes of all their friends.—St. Catharines Standard.

Butter Plentiful On Market To-day

Butter that was quoted on the market to-day at 28 and 30 cents was later offered to grocers at as low as 23 cents. Upon which fact those who have given the market and its utility any thought will ponder awhile. Apparently the supply exceeded the demand, and there were quite a number of producers who said they would not be in next week. Cheese. Citizens are either not eating butter, or buying it from grocers and other local sources, concluding that they might as well give the grocer 28c by a 'phone order than wander to market and pay the same price. Eggs were 20 and 21 cents. Chickens sold at $1.00 a pair and up.

CAPTURED GERMANS UNDER DUTCH FLAG

Captain Rogers, writing from Shorncliffe, Eng., mentions the capture on May 22nd or 23rd, of a German ship which was flying the Dutch flag. It was armed with cannon, and in the haul the British captured between 700 and 800 prisoners. The vessel's object was not learned. Four British vessels were guarding on the day Captain Rogers wrote.

The War Hits Newspapers Fatal Blows

Ten Dailies in Western Canada Have Ceased Publication

An idea of the effect of the war on newspapers may be obtained from the toll taken of Western Canadian dailies since August last. In announcing its amalgamation with The Evening Chronicle, The Daily News, Port Arthur, says:

"The situation has been greatly aggravated since the present depression set in. The war was the finishing touch. No business has been hit harder than the publishing trade. There is a popular delusion that war is good for the newspapers, because more copies are sold; but there is no profit in circulation, except indirectly through the greater value it offers advertisers, who are the main source of revenue. Both The Evening Chronicle and The Daily News have been compelled through shrinkage of advertising to reduce their size to six pages, at a time too, when they have been put to increased expense for telegraphic tolls in order to provide adequate war news.

"Here are some of the Western city newspapers which have suspended publication in the past year, all but two since the war began:

"Fort William Herald.
"Winnipeg Morning Telegram.
"Prince Albert Times.
"Medicine Hat News.
"Brandon News.
"Regina Evening Leader.
"Regina Morning Province.
"Edmonton Capital.
"Lethbridge News.
"Vancouver World.

"The Winnipeg Telegram and The Regina Province remain in the evening field and The Regina Leader in the morning. The Regina Standard and Regina Province amalgamated as an evening paper. The others simply closed their doors. In addition the Saskatoon Phoenix went into liquidation and was taken over by another company."

Mrs. H. H. Crosby Passes Away

Was Daughter of Rev. Wm. Jenkins, First Ordained Presbyterian Minister in Canada.

An aged resident of the city passed away last night in the person of Mrs. H. H. Crosby, aged 81 years, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John Crane, 469 Weller St. The late Mrs. Crosby, who has been a resident of this city for a number of years, was a daughter of Rev. William Jenkins, the first ordained Presbyterian minister in Canada. She was born in Markham Township. She has been ailing for a period of about five months.

A Presbyterian in religion, she was a member of St. Paul's Presbyterian Church. One son, Mr. W. H. Crosby, Toronto, and one daughter, Mrs. John Crane, City, survive.

Mrs. Crosby lived close to Nature in its most beautiful manifestations. She had a passionate fondness for flowers. She was very successful in their growth; they seemed to know that she loved them, and to gratefully respond to the care she bestowed upon them. She thus not only showed her love for flowers, but for others whose happiness she promoted by surrounding them with Nature's greatest gifts. And as is natural, her character was moulded in all ways by the influence of her besetting pursuit.

The funeral will take place on Monday afternoon from the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Crane, 469 Weller Street, at 2.30 o'clock. Interment in Little Lake Cemetery.

Getting a Decision.

"What's the row in your club?"

"Terrible split. We disagree as to the meaning of a certain passage in Browning."

"Well, don't let the club break up. Hire a lawyer, let him read the passage and render a decision as to its meaning, and then let all hands abide by it."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Yearning For Utterance.

Small Frances, aged three, was told that she must not talk at the table—that children must be seen and not heard. One day at a company dinner her mother noticed the child apparently gasping for breath.

"What is the matter, darling?"

"Mudder, my mouf is so full of talk, I can't swallow!"—Judge.

A Doubtful Compliment.

"I can't just make out what he meant," said the conceited man.

"What do you mean?"

"Whether he was praising me or not."

"What did he say?"

"He was agreeing with something I had just said, and he added, 'Nobody in this city knows as much as you think you know.'"—Detroit Free Press.

Apollo Belvidere.

The celebrated statue, Apollo Belvidere, is supposed to be from the chisel of the Greek sculptor Calamis, who flourished in the fifth century B. C. It is called the Belvidere from the Belvidere gallery of the Vatican, in Rome, where it stands. It was discovered in 1503 among the ruins of Antium and was purchased by Pope Julius II.

Byron's Pet Geese.

Even when living in Venice Byron used to number after geese at Michaelmas. Countess Guiccioli states that one year he bought a goose in August so as to be well prepared for the feast. "He fed it every day for a month previously and the poet and the bird became so mutually attached that when Sept. 29 arrived he could not kill it. He bought another and had the pet goose sewing in a cage under his carriage when he traveled."—London Strand Magazine.

German Attempt to Land Troops at Courland Has Failed

The French Maintain Positions Against Terrific Onslaught

RUSSIA SHORT OF ALL SORTS OF MUNITIONS

Neither Cannon, Nor Rifles, Nor Shells, Nor Bullets for Vast Armies---Men Went to Front on Chance of Picking Up Guns of Wounded or Dead Comrades.

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 7.—The fall of Przemysl was half expected in Russia before my departure from that country, says a well-known correspondent. Even if the Russians had had time to fortify the fortress thoroughly, they had neither the guns or ammunition for such a fortification. Indeed the whole story of recent Austro-German success in Galicia and the Baltic Provinces is directly assignable to Russian lack of guns and ammunition. Guns had been sent to the front without ammunition and thousands of soldiers marched without guns to the front to act as reserves and take the place of those expected to be killed or wounded. Such troops of course are valueless except as they are able to find discarded rifles on the firing line. The situation is due to three factors:

MEN, BUT NO GUNS OR MUNITIONS.

Inadequacy of the Russian factories to supply ammunition and guns, isolated the situation of Russia which has only two ports of entry, Archangel where accommodation is wholly inadequate, and Vladivostok, the use of which, owing to the Pacific journey and long railroad communications, makes shipments uncertain and irregular; and the circumstances that the Russian War Office lacked foresight and has been slow to place adequate foreign orders.

To these facts must be added the capture by Germans of large numbers of rifles and guns in their success two months ago. It also is known that the German spy organization has been blowing up powder depots, obtaining a foothold in the largest arms factories of the country and tampering with machinery so that an enormous quantity of ammunition was discovered incorrect in size.

QUALITY OF MEN PROVEN.

It has been proved that the Russian army when well equipped can check the advance of Austro-Germans, as before Warsaw from December 19, since which time the line around that city have been stationary. The Russian army because of the length of the line and the dearth of arms, although having a great supply of men, actually is too small in fighting force to meet the Austro-German advance. Only this explanation makes the fall of Przemysl intelligible. An army is great only in proportion as it covers the fighting line effectively.

In this effectiveness railroad facilities by which troops move rapidly are of first importance. Russia has a firing line of 1,000 miles, not counting Turkey. For this long line Russia lacks arms, equipment, railroads, and officers.

MUNITIONS ON THE WAY.

The importance of the Austro-German victory in Galicia and the fall of Przemysl should not be under-estimated. It is within possibilities that the Russian army may be driven out of Galicia and forced to evacuate Warsaw before Russia shall have renewed its store of ammunition, large consignments of which I understand are already on the way. Personally I believe Warsaw will not be taken, for the Russians fight best in adversity, and have a surprising way of pulling themselves together when everything seems hopeless.

Owing to Russia's isolation it has even been suggested in high quarters that the supply of ammunition among the allies be handed over to a joint Russian, British, and French commission. If the problem of supplying Russia with war equipment is once solved, there will be solved a problem much more important for the outcome of the war than I believe is realized in Britain. The purely military significance of the fall of Przemysl is not great from a political or psychological point of view. The Austro-German advance is more important, but how great it is difficult to estimate.

RUSSIANS' HATE OF TEUTONS.

The Russian people are determined to fight to the end. This feeling also controls the army. Hatred against Germany and Austria is intense and the German element at the court realizes that any attempt at present to bring about separate peace would result in a revolution more serious than that of ten years ago, because the army would take the lead.

Much depends upon a prompt supply of necessary war equipment. Although it is a dangerous prophesy, I believe even if Russia is driven out of Poland, and forced to a position on a new line, Russia will continue to fight as long as the other allies. The dislike of the Russian people for the methods of Germany in the war and their political and commercial dominion is so great they are still willing to make sacrifices to carry the war to a conclusion.

GERMAN TRANSPORTS SUNK BY RUSSIANS

Submarines Defeat Attempt of Enemy to Land a Large Body of Troops in Courland---Russians Lost One Ship

SPECIAL MORNING CABLE:

LONDON, June 7.—By sinking several German transports and another unnamed vessel off the Gulf of Riga, Russian submarines and destroyers defeated an attempt to land a large body of troops in Courland, according to unofficial despatches from Petrograd to-day. The Russians lost one auxiliary ship the Petrograd despatches said.

A large fleet of German transports was concentrated at Kiel, the unofficial despatches said. Under the protection of the German Baltic squadron the transports moved up the Baltic passing through the Cesel and the Gothland Islands, for the purpose of landing troops in Courland region to seize Riga and outflank the Russians operating near Libau. The Petrograd correspondent of the Times cabled that the Germans if successful, might even have attempted an advance on Petrograd.

Gave Austria Fair Warning, Says Italian Premier, Denies "Betrayal"

ROME, via Paris, Jan. 7.—"We entered this, the greatest war in history, to safeguard the highest and most ancient inspirations, the most vital interests of our country," was the declaration of the Premier, Signor Salandra, in an address for the relief of persons in civil life who may be made needy as the result of the war.

"War imposes duties not only upon the combatants, but also open those who remain at home," continued the Premier, "and they must see that the national life is not interrupted. Italians of all classes must not only have a spontaneous and profound feeling, but a reasoned conviction of the justice of our cause and the sancity of our war."

Signor Salandra then reviewed the diplomatic events leading up to the conflict from the time of the assassination of Archduke Francis Ferdinand Italy's former allies, he declared, had no right to say Italy betrayed them, for she never disguised her views on Austrian aggression against Serbia and its consequences.

In support of his argument he read a despatch to the Duca d' Avarna, Ambassador to Austria ,sent him on July 25, 1914, by the Marchese San Guiliano, the late Minister or Foreign Affairs, detailing an interview he had with Signor Salandra and Herr Hans von Flotow, then German Ambassador to Italy.

During this interview, the speaker declared, he and the Marchese San Giuliano pointed out to Herr von Flotow that Austria by the terms of the Triple Alliance treaty had no right to take the steps she had taken at Belgrade without previously coming to an agreement with her allies and that Austria's action clearly showed she desired to provoke war. The Italian statesman therefore informed the German Ambassador, the Premier said, that under the circumstances Italy was obliged to help Austria if the latter nation found herself at war with Russia in consequence of an act of aggression.

Signor Salandra asserted that on July 27 and 28, 1914, the Italian government raised in clear terms the question of the cession to Italy of the so-called Italian provinces held by Austria, both at Vienna and Berlin.

"We declared," said he, "that if Italy did not obtain adequate compensation, the Triple Alliance would be irreparably broken. Impartial history will say that Austria, having found in July and in October, 1913, that Italy was hostile to aggressive intentions against Serbia, arranged with Germany to take Europe by surprise by confronting it with an accomplished fact. The horrible crime at Serajevo was exploited as a present month after it occurred. The Foreign Minister, Count von Berhtold, told the Duca d'Avarna on July 31 last that even if mediation were employed it would not stop hostilities with Serbia.

"It was true, as Count Tisza has pretended, that Austria engaged herself to respect the integrity of Serbian territory. Herr Kajetan Merny von Kapos-Mere, then Austrian Ambassador, told the Marchese San Guiliano on July 30 that Austria could not give such an engagement because she could not forsee that, during the war, she would not be forced against her will to retain Serbian territory. In addition Count von Berchtold declared to the Duca d-Avarna on August 28 last that he was not disposed to give any undertaking relative to the eventual action of Austria in case of a conflict with Serbia.

TRENCH PAPER ISSUED BY THE SOLDIERS

When the soldiers in the European war are not fighting they try their hands at journalism. Not long ago a picture appeared of a printing office and by German troops in Northern France, where a daily newspaper is issued for those fighting in the German trenches. And now a copy has come to America of a paper issued by French soldiers in the French trenches for the delectation of their comrades during "off" hours.

This one, though, is not printed. The modest resources of its publishers do not allow of anything better than mimeographing. It is called L'Indiscret and makes a brave showing with its bold purple ink "news," written in longhand, and a number of pen and ink sketches.

The cover of L'Indiscret informs us that it is the "only daily weekly" of the Ninth Battery of Artillery, below which announcement is a picture of a very business-like looking cannon, presumably of the brand used by the battalion.

The copy which has found its way to America also has quite a spirited ballade, celebrating the prowess of the "poilus" of the Ninth Battery. This states, among other things, that the Crown Prince of Germany is in the habit of trembling at the approach of said Ninth. Another item runs thus:

Evil-minded persons have circulated the report that L'Indiscret had gone into bankruptcy. This is a base calumny. The delay in publishing has been due solely to the lack of paper. Shame to the slanderers!

"We note with sorrow," says another item, "the little interest shown by civilians of R—— in attending the funerals of our poor comrades killed in defence of their country."

Somewhat more cheerful is this:

Inheritance—Our friend R— having just come into some money, and having been promoted, offers a supper to all his friends on L'Indiscret. Evening clothes. Bring your own platter and drinking cup.

A cartoon shows Germany and Austria seated at a table and inviting Italy to share their repast, only to be told, to the accompaniment of disrespectful gestures. "No! I won't eat!" the influence of England is seen in another item headed "Football," telling of a victory of a team from the Ninth Battery over one from the Thirteenth Artillery Regiment.

"This match," we learn, "was umpired with much impartiality by Cowson, editor of The Aero."

On the last page of L'Indiscret is a highly uncomplimentary tirade against the food served in the particular trench or trenches occupied by the gallant Ninth Battery. It purports to be an advertisement of the "Great Provision Firm" supplying the soldiers with eatables and sings the praises of "green and frozen meats, old rancid lard, remnants of old candles for frying, Japanese tea received by an indirect route," &c., &c. The advertisement includes a drawing showing some of these tempting delicacies.

We are told that a concert was held somewhere near the front, at which a "violinist of great talent" was warmly applauded for his rendition of the "Meditation" from "Thais." The issue concludes with this little item:

We learn of the founding of a Don't Worry Club. An evening spent with its members enables us to state that the club is well named.

French Regiment Took 3000 German Prisoners in 3 Weeks

Special Cable to The Examiner:

PARIS, June 7.—The capture of the French of the sugar refinery near Souches is described in a report given out by the official "eye-witness" at the front. This is what he says:

"Violent attacks on the part of the French from both the west and the south were met by a fire on the German batteries and machine guns located on the north side of the refinery. The Germans resisted for some time, but finally were demoralized by the artillery fire of the French, and withdrew. The billets of the factory were found to be filled with German dead, while the French losses were slight.

"Furious at having lost a position which would serve as a base for counter attacks on Ablain, virtually all of which is in the possession of the French, the Germans made a desperate effort to regain it. Amid destroyed walls and great holes in the ground made by large shells, the Germans began their attack at mid-night. In this rapid and confused engagement the French were obliged to withdraw, but a watchful French Major prepared rapidly for a counter-attack. The French company which had momentarily yielded later pushed forward, aided by reinforcements and an intense artillery fire under which the Germans feared their retreat would be cut off.

"When the French counter-attack had attained the refinery itself it was found that the Germans already had withdrawn, and the position was promptly organized by the French. During this work a non-commissioned officer remained for eight hours at his post directing his men, and this in spite of the fact that he had a splinter from a shell in his thigh.

"In a period of three weeks nearly 3,000 Germans have been buried, and more than 3,000 have been taken prisoners by the same French regiment."

FRENCH OFFICIAL STATEMENT.

The French War Office issued the following statement of the progress of hostilities:

"The enemy delivered three violent counter-attacks against the sugar refinery of Souchez and the trenches to the north and to the south of this position were repulsed, and in their first effort particularly they suffered very heavy losses.

"We remain masters of every one of the positions conquered by us.

"We also took possession of a German position to the northwest of the roadside inn known as the Cabaret Rouge, one kilometre (two-thirds of a mile) to the south of Souchez.

"There was great activity on the part of the artillery in the entire sector to the north of Arras.

"Along the remainder of the front there is nothing new."

OUR SERIAL STORY PAGE

Happy Hawkins in the Panhandle

By ROBERT ALEXANDER WASON

That's alius the way with reformers; they're wonderful keen at mindin' other folks' busines, resistin' other folks' temptations, and keepin' other folks' tempers; but if they happen to have any affairs of their own, these affairs are mighty likely to be purty well muddled.

Crusader had been spoiled by a former keeper, and Tom Smith had had a hard time gettin' him civilized, and now Isaac had upset things by goin' out there and gettin' licked. After Isaac had gone, I went in to Crusader, but I didn't rely on my eye of reason, I relied on a leather-covered bat, and I put respect back in that hoss's heart before I turned my back on him, picked up the sleeve, and walked out slow and unconcerned.

Carryin' the sleeve in my hand, I went up to my shack to see how Tom Smith was gettin' along. I heard Isaac and Flames in a war o' words and paused a moment to listen. Isaac had the best of it in quantity, but Flames had him beat a mile in quality. When I opened the door to see what it was all about, the bed was empty—Tom Smith had gone.

"Shut up," I sez, low and heavy, and they came silent in a second. Now, I plainly see what had happened."

"Tom Smith fell asleep and we were sittin' out under the tree there when Baldy Hagus went by after a jug o' water; and he passed the time of day to us and asked why Crusader hadn't been turned out. I told him it wasn't none of our business nor his neither, and then he wanted to know if we had any business, and I told him what we were at. After he'd gone on, Mr. Foster, here, said that he was goin' on down to see how Crusader was gettin' along. I told him he'd better stay away from there; but when he went I sneaked after to see what fool think he'd do. Tom Smith was asleep when I left and gone when I got back. That's all there is to it."

The truth depends on grit rather than morals; a good boy often tellin' a fib to keep from getin' even a small dent in his moral reputation, while a tough kid will shout the truth just as it happened and then look defiant at ye. Flames was so tough that a piece of tin would have been his choice of a pocket handkerchief, provided it would have soaked up as much perfumery as he used whenever he could steal any from Red; and so he told the truth and stuck around to belittle whatever was handed him on account of it. I didn't ask a single question, just jumped for the corral, got a saddle on the clover brand paint-pony as quick as possible and began to scout.

Tom Smith hadn't taken a thing with him, the Haguses were all at work, that is the workin' part of 'em were, old Baldy bein' busy at some repairs on his chariot, and no one had any idee what had become of Tom Smith. I next routed out Jim and told him to take notice, and that I intended to pirute around and would probably wind up at Big Jeff's.

I threw the pinto wide open, but at the same time, examined the trail careful all the way to Dan Cooper's and told 'em there to get me word the minute they heard of Smith, and then I rode on to Big Jeff's. When I got there I took up post in a thicket and kept cases on Big Jeff's doin's for two hours. He didn't seem to have anything on hand that evenin' and spent most of the time sittin' in his doorway pullin' the ears of his mastiff dog. About the only affection the' was any room for in those two was expended on each other and their expressions were as dear-alike as one burro's to his twin.

Finally I went back to the road and came up on a slow lope. "Have you happened to see anything of Tom Smith," sez I, "the boy that was forced into takin' care of Panther Emmons here yesterday?"

"Nope," sez Big Jeff, crusty like. "You all seem to set a heap o' store by that feller."

"He's the best boy in the world," sez I, "so long as he's not drinkin'; but drink poisons him and after he's took just one drink he needs tyin' up."

"He's liable to get tied up, all right," sneered Jeff. "Panther Emmons ain't won much of a reputation for bein' forgivin'."

"Tom Smith has a lot of friends," sez I, lookin' pointed at Big Jeff, "and we'd all take it as friendly on your part if you'd refuse him drink should he come here after it."

"I don't ever want to see him do any more drinkin' in my place," sez Jeff; "but I'd be a leetle mite juberous about refusin' him peless I had the drop on him first."

"By the time he'd get here the drink would be all burned out of him; and he's plumb gentle when he's sober," sez I. "If you was to make a point of it you could easy talk him out of takin' his first drink, and I'd be mighty glad to pay you what profit you'd be ready to make off him. Also, I'd be willin' and glad to pay your man if you'd send me word the minute he came here."

"Now, as far as me bein' able to keep that young feller from drinkin' here," sez Big Jeff squintin' up his eyes at me, "I reckon I could find some way to handle your friend, Tom Smith; but I'm runnin' a store here and aim to make my livin' by it. If I think I'd stand to lose by sellin' him stuff, why that's a matter of business; but when I want to hire out to you I'll make it a point to let you know. My man has enough to do to run this place without ridin' your errands."

"That's fair enough," sez I, as diplomatical as possible. "I reckon that you and I understand each other, and whatever you do in this matter, I'll stand ready to make up to you the first chance I get. I feel the need of a little licker myself, now, and I'd be proud to have you join me."

He got up grumbin' and after we'd drank, and I had failed to see anything suspicious, I mounted the pinto and rode back to the ranch. Just as I rode up to Dan Cooper's, they were washin' up for a late supper, so I joined 'em as none of us ever missed many chances of doin'. Mrs Cooper had done Jim's washin' and mendin' for years, and we all offered to take it over and go after it; but Jim tended to this himself and seemed to thrive on it. Ol' Monody was opposed to bein' idle, and was alius glad of any odd jobs, and he took it till that Jim sent away his washin'. He used to do mine and was an artist at it.

Well, the Coopers hadn't heard nothin' of Tom Smith and so I put out as soon as I had smoked one cigarette for politeness. Just as I crossed the stage road onto our trail, I came upon Baldy Hagus rattlin' up the road in his chariot. I drew up in the centre of the road and he made his shot gun ready. "You seem to be takin' yourself out buggy-ridin' purty late, Baldy," sez I.

"Tell you the truth," sez Baldy, "I'm goin' on an errand for my old woman. When I was a drinkin' man she wouldn't let me out of her sight; but now that I've reformed, she drives me night and day."

Baldy alius advertised that his wife was a hard boss to work under; but the truth was, at she didn't so much as dare to comb her own hair without gettin' his consent. "Well, don't let me keep ye, Baldy," sez I. "I don't want no one to get a tongue-lashin' on my account."

No one had discovered anything about Tom Smith at the Loan Head, and so we dropped him from the team and kept right along, me givin' as much time as I could to the hosses, and gettin' all the work out of Jim I could possibly squeeze.

CHAPTER FIFTEEN.
When Health Meets Health.

I take a heap o' interest in the part of my doin's which followed immediately after, but story-listeners never seem to care for it much. I was nothin' but a kid at that time, and had to rely more on nerve than experience, but luck favoured me, and I made that outfit go a clip which more down the mischief-part of 'em 'til we were mighty little bother to the neighbours. We had a lot more grass than our own stuff could eat to say nothin' of all the free range scattered about, so I scoured the country in search of thrifty young stuff and managed to pick up a lot o' bargains, and also to get acquainted with the lay o' the land and the people on it.

Up northwest of the Canadian the' was quite a scatterin' of small ranchers, fellers who saw the chances waitin' there and who grabbed hold, but who didn't have enough capital to stock up sufficient, nor to keep big enough outfits to hold what they had, and I gathered up considerable stuff there, and after skinnin' their deck, I pointed out to 'em that the only way to do was to band together and regulate things on their own hook until the law would stretch enough to take care of 'em.

A feller named Bradin up on Horse Crick—that is he graze around the head of it, but his house was off to the west a few miles, about thirty-five miles from Jim's—well, he was a slow goin' sort, but a good sticker. He had an ingrowin' prejudice again' resortin' to violence, but he had about reached his limit before I met him. I bought some stuff of him and after we had closed the deal, I told him how much he had lost on it—didn't gloat over him none, you understand, just told him in a friendly way how much it was costin' him to roll down close, because he was afraid to let his stuff multiply for fear the rustlers would market it for him.

"We can't afford to fight 'em," sez he.

"You can't afford to do nothin' else," sez I. "Never in this world did bein' gentle to oppressors do a mite o' good. We don't run much risk down our way, but if ever you start to make a cleanin', I'll agree to furnish you a few fellers who'll stay with ya to the end of the trail. The thing of it is that if we take the law into our own hands brisk enough up this way, the genuwine law'll be all the quicker in payin' attention to our needs."

In all my ridin' I had tried to get some word of Tom Smith, but none showed up, and as I had been workin' harder than I ever any bodily need for, I loosened up by muscles and prepared to get what amusement I could out of the folks about me. The' was still a lot to do to get the Lion Head in a position to cash in accordin' to her capacity; but still I was perfectly willin' to have any one who had seen her when I first did, come and look at her teeth now.

Red had stayed in low spirits a full week after Tom Smith had cut out of the herd, and I reckon 'at this was about Red's record; but he finally did a noble deed, and as was customary, this brought him back his good humour in the quickest time possible. What Red did was to build Isaac a chariot, so he could go from place to place without gettin' trampled on.

Shorty never saw a thing except what was his business, right at the time; but these were about the last things to attract Red's attention, while nothin' else ever got by him. In some way he found out, that a man named Corrigan down east of Elliot had an aged stage mule. This mule was perfectly sound except that he'd get a collar-boil every time he saw a piece o' work harness, and Red he bought the mule for six dollars, and devised a special breast harness which didn't leave that mule a point to kick on. Then Red piruted around until he found the front gear of an old buckboard, and out of this he fashioned a chariot like Baldy Hagus's.

Baldy Hagus had a socket on his left stirrup leather, and could ride as well as though he didn't have airy a wooden leg; but for long jaunts he used to ride in a contraption he had invented himself. It was the front gear of a light waggon with a stiff tongue and a bed, small at the bottom but flarin' out in all directions. He'd hook a pair o' ratty little broncs to this, start 'em to runnin' away, and he'd arrive about as soon as anybody.

Well, Red followed this plan except that he used pole shaves and held 'em up by an old cattle. This mule had worked for several generations as the near leader, and he wouldn't consent to travel anywhere except on the left wheel track when the' was any, so it was more comfortable ridin' out on the open range, for the mule was a free goer and if a stone happened to lie close to the left track, the mule would just miss it, the left wheel just hit it, and Isaac and his outfit would cut some curious figgers.

THE JUBILEE TRUMPET THE SEVENTH TRUMPET

Not as Expected, But Here on Time.

The Message of the Panama-Pacific Exposition—Evidences That the New Day Began Forty Years Ago —Blindness of Fear and Superstition Constricted Our Minds— The Sun of Righteousness Not Yet Risen—What Its Blazing Forth Will Signify — The Night of Weeping Almost Ended—Present Darkening Cloud the Last.

[The matter under this heading is supplied by the Pastor Russell Lecture Bureau, who conduct the Brooklyn Tabernacle (unsectarian) Bible Studies, and who have arranged for its publication.]

Oakland, Cal., June 6. — Pastor Russell, who arrived a week ago to attend the I. B. S. A. Convention, delivered a notable address to-day in the City Auditorium. His text was from Revelation 21:5: "And He that sat upon the Throne said, Behold, I make all things new." To-morrow is to be I.B.S.A. Day at the Exposition; and the final session of the Convention is to be held there in Festival Hall, where Pastor Russell will be one of the speakers.

Referring to the marvels of the Exposition, the speaker declared that they were corroborations of what he wished to point out from the Bible. He had seen the various Expositions, from the Centennial in 1876, and had noticed the great progress marked by each, all of which have testified that we are living in a most wonderful time. This agrees with the Bible. The Bible chronology shows that in 1875 we entered upon a great Sabbath of one thousand years. Six great Days, each a thousand years long, were behind us; and the final one thousand years there began.

The Pastor pointed out, however, that this great Week of seven thousand years will witness, neither the end of God's dealings with humanity nor the destruction of the world, but the completion of the creation of our race. By that time earth will be a world-wide Paradise; the human family, brought to perfection, will have filled the earth, according to the original Divine Program; and propagation will have ceased. Originally man was in God's likeness and "very good." The sex division was merely for the propagation of the race, and not designed to be permanent.—Genesis 1:28; Luke 20:35, 36.

It was never more the Divine purpose that man should contend with sickness, sorrow, pain, weakness and death itself than that the angels should be thus afflicted. The same God that created the angels, and gave them happiness and perfection, created man and properly endowed him at the beginning. The present difference between the perfection of the angels and the decrepitude of humanity—mental, moral and physical—is explained by the Bible alone. It tells that Adam was originally perfect and pleasing to God; and that his rejection by God and his subjection to death and all its concomitants are the results of his disobedience in Eden.—Romans 5:12.

There was no turning-point so far as the Divine Purpose was concerned. The Bible assures us that God purposed human redemption from sin and death from the very beginning. But the first manifestation of that Purpose was the turning-point so far as human observation discerned. That turning-point was the birth of Jesus, who was born into the world, not sinful and imperfect like Adam's race, but expressly born "holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners," that He might become the Redeemer of men and thus make possible their recovery from imperfect, dying conditions. His birth of the Virgin stands re-

For backache, lame or weak back, one of the commonest and most distressing symptoms of kidney inaction, there is no remedy to equal Doan's Kidney Pills for taking out the stitches, twinges and cramps, restoring up the aching back and giving perfect relief and comfort to all sufferers, enabling women who suffer so much from a weak lame back.

Mrs. Blackburn, R.R. No. 1, Fishburn, Alta., writes: "I take pleasure in writing you stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About three years ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back, and was so bad I could not even sweep my floor. I was advised to try your kidney pills. Before I had used one box there was a great improvement as my back was much better. However, I kept on taking them until my back was completely cured. I highly recommend these pills for lame back."

tained, therefore, to the great Divine Plan respecting His death, which really began at Jordan, when He consecrated Himself to death and was baptized by John, and which was completed when on Calvary He cried, "It is finished!"

The next step in the Divine Program was Jesus' resurrection. Put to death in flesh, He was quickened in spirit, still more glorious than before He was made flesh. (Philippians 2:9-11.) The next step in the Program was the anointing of the select body of His followers to be fellow-members of the same glorious company under His Headship. This took place at Pentecost, and the work there begun has continued for more than eighteen centuries. As our Lord there anointed the most holy of the Jews and constituted to anoint all who would be members of the Body of Christ, so in due time He began to anoint the most holy amongst the Gentiles—those who would become members of the same Body, which is His Church.

The Divine Purpose is that the risen Christ, the second Adam, shall have a Bride class, the second Eve—a Divinely foreordained number. These eighteen centuries have been used of the Lord for the selection or election, of this Church to be His joint-heirs in His Kingdom; and as soon as this elect number shall have been demonstrated their loyalty proved, etc., this Age will end and the New Age be fully inaugurated. Many Bible students agree with me that we are very near the time when the Church will be completed, and by the glorious change of the First Resurrection be made like the Lord—spirit beings, "partakers of the Divine nature." (1 John 3:2; 2 Peter 1:4.) This will usher in the next step of the Divine Program—the Messianic Kingdom, with Christ and His Church Bride associated with Him in the power and great glory necessary for the ruling, judging and uplifting of all the families of the earth.

If the Divine Program has consumed so much time in getting ready for the blessing of the world, what a great blessing must be designed! This is fully attested by both the Old and the New Testaments. They speak of the New Dispensation now dawning as Times of Restitution, Times of Refreshing. (Acts 3:19.) They tell us that the earth will yield her increase; and this we see already beginning, as abundantly testified at this wonderful Exposition. They tell us that the knowledge of the glory of God will fill the whole world, breaking the shackles of ignorance and superstition. This we see abundantly witnessed on every hand to-day.

The next step in the Divine Program, which is about to begin, will require, the Bible says, a thousand years, and will accomplish all that God has declared. The earth will be brought to perfection. Even now we see evidences of this in the wonderful inventions of our day, far superior to those of the past in general, since Eden's bloom and beauty were lost.

The point we are emphasizing is that Millennial blessings are not coming to the world by a process of evolution, but as a result of God's lifting the veil from our eyes and permitting us to see what to do and how to do it. The same operation of Divine providence is manifested in all the great inventions of our day. These were not gradually evolved during the past six thousand years, but have practically sprung into existence before our eyes—very many of them during the past forty years, all of them, we may say, within the one hundred and sixteen years from 1799, a period known in the Bible as the Day of God's preparation. (Nahum 2:3.) During this period God has been preparing the world for the Millennium;

Our great inventors acknowledge that their work is not so much the result of personal effort, but rather a kind of inspiration. Their eyes of understanding opened, and things kept secret since the foundation of the world stood plainly before them and were readily put into practical form. It is the same respecting the progress in Bible study and in the understanding of the Divine Plan of the Ages. It came, not by pleading study, but rather as an illumination of the mind by the Holy Spirit; for God's due time blessings come when those of honest mind should know the Truth.

It is difficult for us to imagine that such wonderful conditions as have become common in our day—such wonderful knowledge of the Bible as is now possible to God's people, and such wonderful [illegible] etc., should be only the beginning of God's Messianic. Yet it must be so:

it might be that we are merely on the verge of still greater things—physical and mental blessings for all mankind.

We now see clearly that the horrible doctrines of the Dark Ages so beclouded our mental vision and so stagnated thought as to handicap the world in respect to every matter of progress and intelligence. Our creeds of the Dark Ages deceived us into thinking of the Almighty as a cunning, powerful Being who had planned our injury before the foundation of the world, who purposed to torture eternally more than ninety-nine per cent. of the billions He had created. Under these mental delusions, the Bible came back to God's people after it had been explained by the creeds for twelve hundred years. When our fathers began to study the Bible afresh, their minds were so impregnated with what the Bible styles "doctrines of demons" that they were looking for devilish things and made them out of Scriptural statements which had no such significance.

Christians have long realized that God does not purposed to leave the world forever in a sin and death condition. But they have looked for Divine victory in the wrong direction, because they have accepted the theories of the Dark Ages formulated when the Bible was not in the hands of the people. The theory was that God withheld the Church to establish the Millennium by converting the world from sin to righteousness. An endeavor has been made to follow that theory. Inquisitions and persecutions were invoked to force people into church membership. How successful it was is witnessed by conditions in Europe at the present time.

Great Britain claims 95 per cent. Christians, Germany the same, Russia about the same, while Italy claims that all her people are Christians. In this fashion they have been attempting to convert the world—by calling people Christians who were not Christians at all, and by including their names on church records. By these methods they have counted up a total of 400 million Christians, as against a total of 1,000 millions of earth's population. Thus the world is not yet half Christian, even of the nominal sort; and instead of the heathen coming rapidly to Christianity, we find that they doubled during the last century.

Let us glance at the character of those thus forcibly brought under the name Christian by making them Christians at infants. We perceive that many of these are in jails, penitentiaries and insane asylums; and while we believe that in every nation and denomination there are some true saints of God, members therefore of the true Church of God, nevertheless, taken as a whole, can we not see that what Jesus said of some in His day must be applicable in what to-day is styled Christendom—"Ye are of your father the Devil; for His works ye do?"

We ask ourselves, Are the people of Europe doing the works of God or of the Devil? The Apostle tells us that "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His"; that the fruits of Christ's spirit are meekness, gentleness, patience, brotherly-kindness, love; that anger, malice, hatred, envy, strife, are works of the flesh and of the Devil. "By their fruits ye shall know them," said the Master. Surely we ought to know that some huge mistake has been made when the peoples of Europe have been styled Christendom — Christ's Kingdom — and why they are enrolled as Christians.

How sad was the mistake which occurred when the "doctrines of demons" were brought in! Now we see that the Bible tells a very different story. It tells that God's time for saving the world from sin and death will be during the thousand years of Messiah's Kingdom; and that then they shall have every good opportunity that Divine Wisdom, Love and Justice will arrange on their behalf.

The dead are not in Heaven nor in the Catholic Purgatory nor in the still worse Protestant eternal torture. They are asleep, as the Bible declares. But for Jesus and His work they would be dead in the same sense that a brute is dead. Because Jesus died for sins, therefore there is to be a resurrection from the dead; and therefore the dead are spoken of as being asleep, thousands, waiting for the morning of Messiah's Coming and for the glorious blessings of resurrection promised.

With our minds filled with the fears of the Dark Ages we associate the "trump of God" as though it implied horrible disaster to the human family. But here, the eyes of our understanding opened, we discern more clearly the Bible teachings; we are assured in God that the trumpet of God is symbolical, like the preceding use; that it sounds related to Messiah's Kingdom and to the world's release from the bondage of Sin and Death. Thank God for the Seventh Trumpet, the last trump, the trump of Love!

In the year 1799 which pictured as the Jubilee. Under the Jewish Law arrangement God provided that every fiftieth year should be a Jubilee year, in which all debts should be cancelled and all bondages terminated. This was not only a beneficial arrangement for the Jews, but was a type of the future. It pictured the full forgiveness of sin and the full release of humanity from all the consequences of Adam's disobedience.

At the opening of the year of Jubilee the fact was announced by the priests, who blew upon silver trumpets, proclaiming that the Jubilee had come and that all might return to their former estate. The great Seventh Day, a thousand years long, the antitypical Jubilee Year, began in 1875, according to Scriptural chronology. It is the proper time for all the servants of God, members of the [illegible] Priesthood, to to make known to the people the character of the bondage in Sin and Death, and to announce that it is God's will that they go free from these.

Such proclamations have been going forth from Bible students the world over during the past forty years. The matter has been opposed by many. As among the Israelites there was a nominal priesthood who opposed the Message of Jesus and the Apostles, so there is to-day a nominal priesthood who oppose the Message of Truth, the message that Messiah is about to take His great power and reign.

Meantime, humanity has been increasingly sensible of groaning in bondage and has restlessly been seeking liberty — sometimes wisely, sometimes unwisely. Some employers and teachers have realized the impending change, and have governed and taught accordingly. Others, realizing the change, have invoked still further the powers of ignorance and superstition with a view to continuing the Present Order of things, which God has declared shall give place to the New. Christ is now taking to Himself His great power and is about to begin His Reign; and in our text He tells us that by that Reign He will make all things new.

Happy would it be for all classes if they would recognize that the great Clock in the Divine Plan has told out a change of dispensations; that the New Order is due to come in and the Old to go out. But because selfishness has hardened their hearts, the world is not ready for the Restitution blessings; and hence God, foreknowing this, has foretold the Time of Trouble which even now is at our door.

According to the Divine Word the present great European war is but the prelude to Armageddon, as Armageddon will be the prelude to Messiah's Kingdom. According to the Bible the present war, without bringing special advantage to any nation, but bringing discontent to all, will prepare the world for the most wonderful Revolution ever known, symbolically styled in the Bible "a great earthquake." (Revelation 16:18. Following this revolution will come the symbolical "fire" of the Bible, not a literal fire that will literally burn the earth, but the fire of Anarchy, which will consume our present civilization; and except those days should be shortened, no flesh would survive. (Matthew 24:22.) But our Lord assured us that these days will be shortened—that the Elect will take the Kingdom and establish righteousness and peace on the first foundation of Justice. Man's extremity will become God's opportunity, wisely provided before the foundation of the world.

Conveniently Placed.

A considerable number of Americans and some Europeans connected with the diplomatic service are aware that there are streets in Washington named for the letters of the alphabet. People who live in the capital frequently write I street, "Eye street;" T street, "Tea street," and P street, "Pea street;" but it was left for a car conductor imported from London to ring another change on these elegant street names. A woman passenger—a stranger in the city—had asked this conductor to put her off at Bethesda church—which happens to be on L street.

"L'eye street," chilled the conductor on reaching I street.

"Kay," he shouted at the next corner, and then, at the limit:

"H'ell—all out for the church."

A Weighty Protest

The following eminent American citizens have called upon the American people to stop selling munitions to the belligerents: W. J. Bryan, W. A. Harper, Rev. Lud. Hornsilyi, P. Wendel, Jr., William Wendt, S. J. Tyberdd, Arthur Reichmann, A. A. Hadded, B. Diacoumopoulos, Nat. H. Strauss, and three or four hundred others, all publishers of American newspapers in foreign languages. The un-hyphenated Americans would like to oblige but are too busy.

Could Not Do His Bit

How a man who had served through the Boer War failed to pass the military doctor and committed suicide, was told at an inquest on Mr. Frank Abraham, fifty-one, a retired shipbroker, at Southampton, at Westminster, London. It was said that his failure to fight in the War led to mental depression and one day he entered a rifle range, fired two shots at the target, and then discharged the rifle into the roof of his mouth.

GOODYEAR MADE IN CANADA Fortified Tires FORTIFIED AGAINST Rim-Cutting—by our No-Rim-Cut feature. Blowouts—by our "On-Air" cure. Loose Treads—by gum-dipped rivets. Punctures—by 3 extra plies of tough fabric. Premature and Skidding—by our deep-cut All-Weather tread.

Suppose We Pared

This Goodyear Fortified Tire

Suppose we pared the Goodyear All-Weather Tread. There still would be a fair-built tire left. For this famous tread is double-thick, and the "carcass" beneath is made extra-strong to support it.

That's what men mean when they tell you that Goodyears are built in perfect balance. For what is the good of a heavy tread that you have to discard when the tire beneath gives out prematurely? This fault, in many rival tires, is avoided in Goodyear construction.

Goodyears Rule Because—

Five vital features have put these tires on top in four short years. But these five features do control. And no rival has them.

Goodyear's All-Weather Tread — now double-thick, with deep-cut, close-set, sharp-edged blocks. They grip where average tires slip. They minimize punctures and multiply mileage.

Goodyear's No-Rim-Cut Feature — that fortifies against rim-cutting in the best way science has discovered. This patented method, though widely copied, has never been equalled.

Goodyear's "On-Air" Cure — that protects against blowouts. We give each tire this second cure on beads of air. The air, super-heated, expands and "irons out" any wrinkle the fabric may contain.

No other tire maker goes to this expense. So wrinkled fabric in rival tires causes blowouts.

Goodyear's Rubber Rivets — hundreds of them vulcanized between the tread and "carcass." The exclusive use of this method cost $50,000. It reduces loose tread risk by 60 per cent.

Goodyear's Braided Wire Tape — strike bands of 126 braided piano wires in the heads of Goodyear tires. They make it impossible to force the tire from the rim.

Prices Reduced

Yet despite these extra features—despite the war tax on every particle of raw material that goes into Goodyear Fortified Tires—

On February 10th we made a material price reduction.

This was our third in less than two years, making the saving in all an average of 22 per cent.

This saving is due to the amazing demand for Goodyear Tires that multiplied our output and cut our factory cost per tire. Last year alone men bought in the Canadian Goodyear lines as there were cars in the Dominion.

GERMANY SOUGHT ROOM TO EXPAND

Needed Room For Her Unemployed Millions—Grew to Hate England's Power and Territory

That the German dream, not merely of a Greater Germany, but of the Fatherland expanded into the greatest empire on record, is the real cause of the present colossal war in Europe, there can be no doubt after the reading of "Pan-Germanism," a remarkably able and illuminating book by Robert G. Usher, Associate Professor of History, Washington University, St. Louis, Mo., published several months before the war started.

"For some years," wrote Prof. Usher, "those at all familiar with current international affairs have known that it was the custom in the German navy to drink a toast 'To the day.' Many people have hugged to themselves with glee the secret information that the officers were drinking to the day when war should be declared against England, but few indeed seemed to have realized the significance of the vision before Germany's eyes. The Germans aim at nothing less than the domination of Europe and of the world by the Germanic race.

"It is literally true that Germany has become Bismarckian. His heavy spirit has settled upon it. It wears his scowl. It has adopted his brutality, as it has his greatness. It has taken his criterion of truth, which is Germanic; his indifference to justice, which is savage; his conception of a right, which is sublime.' This nation has forgotten God in its exaltation of the 'Germanic race.' Bombastic as such phrases are, they do convey some notion of the militant spirit which has roused that nation.

A Desperate Situation

According to Prof. Usher, Germany's position had become desperate, due to her rapid industrial growth.

"The population has increased so rapidly that it is already difficult for efficient, well trained men to secure any employment. Not only is the agricultural area of the country exhausted, but intensive scientific agriculture is speedily limiting the possibilities of the employment of more laborers. The south seems to be the natural outlet for the surplus population, and a new and extensive market discovered, for this enormous surplus production, prosperity will be inevitably succeeded by bankruptcy. There will be more hands than there is work for, more mouths than there is food, and Germany must either get rid of the surplus mouths and hands or retail the surplus product by employing them at home, which cannot be done without enabling national ruin."

Vain Search For Outlet

"Already the boundaries of Germany in Europe have been pushed to their farthest extent; more territory can be added only at the expense of other nations, either of her powerful rivals, France and Russia, or of her weaker neighbors, Belgium, Holland, Denmark and Sweden. Nor would the accession of such territory solve the difficulty. All European nations are already attempting to create [illegible] the necessity of an outlet for their surplus population and manufactures. A war for expansion in Europe would be without purpose and could only be detrimental to all. Germany must find some territory suitable for development by her own people which is not already crowded with men and women.

"She is finding the [illegible] part of the fertile plains of western Canada, of the rich valleys of northern Africa, where her people may [illegible] a new Germany [illegible] will

TOTALLY DISCOURAGED BY NERVOUS PROSTRATION

After Many Weeks of Doctoring a Friend Recommended Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and She Was Cured

There is nothing more discouraging than Nervous Prostration. Because of the exhausted condition of the nervous system, weakness and helplessness take possession of the body. The faculties of the mind as well as those of the body are affected and hope and courage disappear.

The patient, often appearing well, gets little sympathy, and few doctors understand diseases of the nerves well enough to treat nervous prostration intelligently. Dr. Chase's Nerve Food is founded on the prescription of a great nerve specialist, and hence its wonderful success in curing ailments of this nature.

Mrs. Edith May Williams, Tilsonburg, Ont., R. R. 3, writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. I suffered for years with my nerves, and at one time I was confined to my bed with nervous prostration for several weeks. I cannot just explain my feelings, but I was weak and helpless and so discouraged and despondent that I thought I would lose my mind. I doctored with several doctors and received but little benefit. At last I became very much discouraged and thought I would never get better. A friend advised me to try Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, and before I had finished the first box I knew that it was helping me. It took several boxes of the Nerve Food to make me well and I can truly say that it is a wonderful builder-up of the nervous system."

It is only wise to prevent such dreaded diseases as Nervous Prostration, Paralysis and Locomotor Ataxia by keeping the nervous system in good condition at all times. When you cannot sleep well, have headaches and indigestion, be warned of approaching dangers and restore the nervous system by using Dr. Chase's Nerve Food. 50 cents a box, all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Company, Limited, Toronto.

Hatred of England

As to the relations between the Fatherland and the Dreamer—

"England Germany hates, disdains and despises. For France and Russia she possesses a whilom respect mingled with fear, but not with love. France she considers a proper prey who has run into evil and who is planning to reach safety; Russia she looks upon as an uncouth stripling who yet almost always has to use his strength and not intelligent enough to avoid being easily deceived."

A Test of Friendship.

A gentleman tried the following peculiar way of probing the ties of friendship: He sent letters to twenty-four intimate friends asking for a loan of £1. Thirteen of the two dozen friends did not reply at all, five declined to lend the money, two promised to send it on the next day and did not do it, one sent his "last 10 shillings," and only three sent the full sum asked for. The supplicant and all the "friends" he had written to are well off.—London Mail.

Held by Etiquette.

When Dom Pedro, then emperor of Brazil, was entertained at the White House he had been told by a confused senator that it would be expected that he, the emperor, should be the last of the guests to depart.

The president's wife, however, informed her other guests that they would be expected to follow, not precede, the royal party, in leaving the house.

The result was that no one dared to go for fear of a breach of etiquette. But at 3 o'clock in the morning a tired woman pretended illness, and the deadlock was broken.

Great is etiquette, but common sense is sometimes allowable.

Niagara Falls.

So far as our present knowledge goes, the earliest printed reference to Niagara falls is in the record of a voyage by the celebrated Jacques Cartier in 1535. Its position was first mentioned by Champlain in a map attached to his voyages, published in 1613. The earliest description of the falls is that of Father Hennepin, who visited them in 1678. His account was published with a sketch giving a full view of the cataract. The name "Niagara" means "thunder of waters" and was given it by the Indians. Opinions differ as to the age of the falls, some placing it at 500,000 years, others as low as 20,000 years.—New York American.

SUCCESS.

The man who succeeds above his fellows is the one who early in life clearly discerns his object and toward that object habitually directs his powers. Thus indeed even genius itself is but fine observation strengthened by unity of purpose. Every man who observes vigilantly and resolves steadfastly grows unconsciously into genius.—Bulwer-Lytton.

A WEAK HEART

When the heart is weak or irregular in action, when the blood is thin and watery, remember the blood-forming qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by its use feed the system with rich, red, vitalizing blood. This is Nature's way of curing weakness and disease. It is the only way to secure lasting benefits.

KING'S FAVORITE HOME

SANDRINGHAM HALL IS PROBABLY WORTH $2,000,000.

The Royal Seat Which Was Bombed by German Airmen Is the Country Residence of Queen Alexandra and Was Bought by King Edward—Yarmouth, the Home of the Bloater.

As by sea, so by air, the Germans seem to fancy the east coast of England for their abortive, if annoying, raids. The attack on Sandringham was peculiarly exasperating—as, no doubt, it was intended to be. Sandringham Hall was not only the late King's favorite residence, but it is his widow's principal one to-day, while, as man and boy, his present Majesty has spent more days in that cheeriest of country houses than he has in any house in all his Dominions. It is curious how little the public generally seem to know about this favorite abode of royalty. The present writer had the advantage some years ago of going over this royal residence, and he characterizes it unhesitatingly as quite the most charming house—we are not talking of a palace or of stateliness, for Sandringham is not the one, nor does it lay claim to anything of the other — of which he has ever seen the inside.

Sandringham was bought by King Edward, as Prince of Wales, in the year 1861, from Mr. Spencer Cowper, stepson of Lord Palmerston, probably the most popular Premier of the Victorian era. The extent of the estate at that time was about seven thousand acres, but the late King added to it from time to time until now its extent is about twelve thousand acres. The price the late King paid for the original property was $1,100,000, but he expended money on it so lavishly, in the way of alterations and improvements, that it is now worth at least double that sum—if, indeed, it is possible to set a marketable value on property which its royal owners have rendered

The late King inspected countless estates before he decided on the purchase of Sandringham. And two main reasons finally decided him in favor of what came to be his best-loved house. First, situate, as it was, in Norfolk, it was a long way from Windsor, so that he would not be too much under his mother's eye when on his own demesne, nor would there be any difficulty of the "two Kings of Brentford" kind. Secondly, the County of Norfolk has always been famous alike for the quality and for the variety of its game—and King Edward loved shooting passing well, although he was never anything approaching the first-rate shot that King George is. Still, under his regime, the pheasant shooting and partridge driving at Sandringham came to mean shooting parties of the largest and pleasantest kind, at which the element of old personal friends was predominant. The soil at Sandringham is of the rather rare kind on which both pheasants and partridges flourish.

In 1871 King Edward replaced the original mansion with the present Elizabethan brick and stone structure, and he largely added to the latter from time to time. Among other additions is the huge ballroom, where, as it has been said, he would entertain "the whole county" at a ball. At Sandringham, indeed, there is almost everything to satisfy the taste of everybody. And the peculiar charm of the place, says one who has often stayed there, is that "while the racing man feels that he is not called on to profess a knowledge of gardens or Sevres china, the garden lover and the art collector knows that it is not incumbent on them to expatiate on the merits of racehorses or the pedigrees of shorthorns." Such is the atmosphere of the gracious English home which the Kaiser's merry men have done their futile best to demolish.

Yarmouth, another unfortified place in Norfolk, which was favored with the attentions of the bomb-droppers, is the second largest town in that county, Norwich (where they make the mustard) being the largest. It contains about 52,000 people normally, but in the summer this population is multiplied many times, for Yarmouth is the most popular holiday resort on the east coast of England. It has one of the finest beaches imaginable, with a sea front promenade of nearly three miles and two remarkably fine piers. It is the principal fishing port of Norfolk. And its herring fishery is of world-wide fame. In one year as many as 500,000,000 herrings will be landed at this one Norfolk port.

The herring industry at Yarmouth naturally finds employment for a very large number of fishermen. Perhaps something like two thousand fishermen live in Yarmouth itself, and another thousand in neighboring villages, while several thousand Scottish fishermen will come down and make Yarmouth their base of operations during the autumn fishing. The curing of herrings is a subsidiary industry, which gives employment to thousands. Annually, about five thousand Scottish lassies will migrate to Yarmouth in the autumn to "kipper" herrings and to turn them into "bloaters." Altogether, in the autumn months the requirements of the fishing industry add about eleven thousand people to the normal population of the town.

Two of the other places on which the airmen of the "baby-killers" dropped bombs are Cromer and Sheringham, both seaside places. The former is the most fashionable watering place on the east coast, standing on high ground and sheltered by wooded and heathery hills. It has fine cliffs. And it is kept exclusive, by reason of the fact that the prices it charges for board, rooms, and the like, are as steep as its cliffs at their steepest point. Cromer has for long been famous for its crab fisheries.

Each Had What the Other Wanted.

An interesting anecdote is told of the meeting of Evangelist Moody and Mr. Gladstone in England. Mr. Gladstone attended the Moody and Sankey meetings and was deeply impressed. Heartily grasping Mr. Moody's hand, the old statesman said to him:

"I wish I had your body."

Mr. Moody immediately replied "I wish I had your head."

"Mr. Gladstone responded, "I mean I wish I had your lungs," to which Mr. Moody again replied, "I wish I had your brains," and with hearty good wishes they parted.

German Shells In Coal.

Swiss factories who have been taking coal from Germany have had an alarming experience. In no fewer than five different Swiss towns, fully loaded shells have been found mixed up with the coal. It is supposed that before being loaded with coal the wagons were used for army purposes and that the shells were overlooked.

The World's Longest Sentence.

"It says here that the longest sentence in the English language contains 140 words," said the old fogy.

"That's wrong," replied the grouch. "The longest sentence contains only one word."

"What is that?" asked the old fogy.

"Life," replied the grouch.—Kansas City Star.

Work it Out.

Those who are tired of railroad travel may find a hopeful remedy in the diversion of a commercial traveler who spends the lagging hours with such problems as this: He consults the time-table, ascertains that his watch is thirty minutes slow, discovers that there is one hour's difference in time and the train is fifty minutes late. What station is it?—Buffalo News.

Makes Her Restless.

"The confidence Mrs. Gadders reposes in her husband is wonderful."

"My wife says she has confidence in me, but I fear it is not the repose ful kind."

"No?"

"It's the kind that keeps her awake at night until she finds out where I've been."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Chinese Beggar Chiefs.

At a Chinese wedding the "beggar chief" is always invited and brings a plate. He begs from all the guests, but in return keeps all other mendicants from the marriage feast. The beggar chief of a big Chinese city makes as much as $15,000 a year, and out of this he pays the common or street beggars to keep away from social gatherings.

What Belfry Means.

The term "belfry" has no etymological connection with "bell," as one would naturally suppose. It is the old French "berfray," from the middle high German "bervrit," and means a place of safety ("bergen," to conceal, and "vride," peace, protection). The word signified originally a kind of tower, and the association with bells, so convenient to English, came later.

Rather Offended.

"I like acting with spirit to it," said the great star, "but that girl has too much spirit to suit me."

"How so?"

"In the third act she is supposed to resist my kissing her, and the vim she puts into it is far from flattering to my personal pride."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

MILITARY EFFECTS FOR CHILDREN'S COATS.

BROWN STRIPED COAT.

The little coat pictured here is suitable for the small girl's school wardrobe. It is one of the new models for spring. The material is self striped brown and tan wool mixture. The wide collar and deep cuffs are banded with dark brown moire. There is a very wide belt, with a very decorative application of buttons.

The new coats for children's spring wear are made in a great variety of attractive styles. Covert cloth, serge, gabardine, poplin and checked fabrics are modish. They are without much elaboration, the trimming being confined to the collar and cuffs. Silks and satins in white or matching colors are most frequently used on these. For later wear silk and satin coats will be permissible for dressy occasions. Taffeta, faille and poplin are considered suitable for these.

Many of the new coats are cut on short waisted lines. The belt is a characteristic feature. The lower part of the coat is given the popular flare. The sleeves are set in as a rule, although some examples of the modified kimono sleeve will be used.

The military influence is seen even in these juvenile coats. Many of them are trimmed with gilt, gun metal or silver braid and buttons. Army and navy colors are favored. One sees models of navy blue, army gray, Russian green and Belgian blue.

Wraps which are very fair imitations of the English topcoat are carried out in covert cloth. Decorative pockets, wide belts and skillfully applied collars and cuffs are features of many covert coats.

Lingerie collars and cuffs are to be very much worn. These will give a charming finish to the simple coats. Linen, pique, organdie and lawn sets are being shown for children's suits and coats.

Using Up Meat Scraps.

A nice pudding may be made with cold meat. Take pieces of minced cooked beef and lean ham, a quarter of a pound of suet, half a pound of flour, a chopped onion, pepper, salt and a little finely chopped parsley. Rub the chopped suet into the flour, add pepper and salt, meat, onion, parsley, and, if liked, a dash of curry powder. Mix these ingredients, moisten with a little cold stock to make it cling together, but it must not be wet. Place in a greased pudding basin, tie over with a pudding cloth and steam steadily for two hours. Turn out to serve and pour gravy round.

Smart Sleeves.

An additional smartness is imparted to the sleeve of the coat suit by the embroidered cloth on the outer side. Either black or colored silk to match the suit may be used for the cloth.

A Quaint Politician.

Lord Sherbrooke was probably one of the quaintest men who ever rose to eminence in English politics. Mr. H. Preston-Thomas, who served under Sherbrooke in the education department, describes him as "half blind and almost an albino. His appearance, with his white hair, massive white eyebrows and pink complexion, was remarkable. He was known in the house of commons as the Whitehead torpedo. He generally rode a white horse of uncertain temper, but he was also one of the earliest men of note to use a bicycle, and I often saw him careering about London on this, despite his defective eyesight."—London Chronicle.

So Pleasant.

It was a club dinner and Mrs. Anderson, a social climber, was seated next to Mrs. Murgridge, a society woman of prominence. Wishing to engage in conversation with the social leader, Mrs. Anderson remarked:

"I understand that you have a son who is studying music, Mrs. Murgridge."

"Yes, my son is a great musician," replied the social leader, rather coldly. "He is now studying in the Paris Conservatory."

"Really! How nice!" replied the social aspirant. "It must be so pleasant to be able to sit among flowers all day and not disturb any one with the practicing."—New York Times.

Hair Pulling a Disease.

Hair pulling isn't confined to marital disputes. There is a curious affliction, more of nerves than of skin, called trichotillomania, which causes people to pull out their own hair. In the Journal of the American Medical association a specialist describes two cases which he treated.

A young woman of twenty-seven was in the habit of pulling out her eyebrows; a schoolboy of fourteen tweaked the hairs out of the left side of his head. The hair pulling was involuntary; irresistible impulses, coming suddenly, caused them to do it. Rest, freedom from worry and a tonic containing arsenic produced noticeable improvement in both cases.

"Sardonic" Smiles.

The expression "sardonic smile" is as old as Homer. It means literally to "grin like a dog" and bears reference to the hideous contortion of the facial muscles produced by eating the sardonian, a plant of Sicily, which was said to screw up the face of the eater, giving it a horrible appearance.

Mahan, in his history of England, says: "The island of Sardinia, consisting chiefly of marshes or of mountains, has, from the earliest period to the present been cursed with a noxious air, an ill cultivated soil and a scanty population. The convulsions produced by its poisonous plants gave rise to the expression of "sardonic smile," which is as old as Homer."

Girls With Beautiful Faces or Graceful Figures

Canadian girls have a world-wide reputation for beauty, but, at the same time, there are girls in our cities who possess neither beauty of face nor form, because in these instances they suffer from nervousness, the result of disorders of the womanly organism. At regular intervals they suffer so much that their strength leaves them; they are so prostrated that it takes days for them to recover their strength. Of course, such periodic distress has its bad effect on the nervous system. The withered and drawn faces, the dark circles and crow's feet about the eyes, the straight figure without those curves which lend so much to feminine beauty are the unmistakable signs of womanly disorders.

When a girl becomes a woman, when a woman becomes a mother, when women pass through the change of middle life, are the three periods of life when health and strength are most needed to withstand the pain and distress often caused by severe disturbances.

At these critical times women are best fortified by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription, an old remedy of proved worth that keeps the entire system in excellent condition.

Mothers, if your daughters are weak, lack ambition, are troubled with headaches, lassitude and are pale and sickly, Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription is just what they need to surely bring the bloom of health to their cheeks and make them strong and healthy.

If you are a sufferer, if your daughter, mother, sister need help get Dr. Pierce's Favourite Prescription in liquid or tablet form. Then address Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., and receive confidential advice from a staff of specialists, that's free. IN MIDNIGHT BLUE AND SAND.

By Anabel Worthington.

7171

This pretty model was developed in the fashionable tones of midnight blue and sand, a combination extremely smart just now. The skirt was sand color etamine and the underblouse allover lace in the sand tone. Midnight blue taffeta was used for the jacket and trimming pieces. The jacket is a particularly good feature from a fashion standpoint. It is a trifle short waisted, a belt covering the gathers which allow the lower edge to spring out in a modish way. A suspended strap effect is produced in the front by the low cut, but in the back the jacket extends almost to the neck.

The underblouse is perfectly plain, fastened down the front with tiny buttons and having long or three-quarter length sleeves, as preferred. An upstanding ruffle of lace finishes the cuff of the long sleeve. The circular skirt is in two pieces, with a seam at centre back and lapped edges at the front, where the opening occurs. The trimming bands of the taffeta are set on by hand, and very lightly, so as not to look set or stiff.

A less expensive development but one equally pretty would be a skirt of cotton crepe with waist of crepe or net and jacket and bands of taffeta or rutine. Other good color combinations are white and pink, white and gray, sand and brown. For medium size the skirt requires 3¾ yards of 45 inch material, the jacket and bands 1 yard of 45 inch material and the underblouse 1⅛ yards of material 40 inches wide. The pattern, No. 7,171, can be obtained in six sizes, from 34 to 44 inches bust measure.

When ordering remember to give your name and address as well as the number and size of pattern required, and age of a child.

Price 15 cents, or 2 for 25c.

German Zeppelin Is Destroyed By British

The French Now Hold Nearly All Labryinth

THE FRENCH CAPTURE MORE GROUND AND REPULSE ALL COUNTER ATTACKS

Gain More Enemy Positions in the Labryinth and Nearly All the German System of Intricate Defences at This Point Are Now in the Hands of the French Who Have Checked All German Counter Attacks With Heavy Losses to the Enemy.

PRISONERS AND MACHINE GUNS TAKEN

SPECIAL CABLE:

PARIS, June 7.—By wrecking German fortifications with heavy artillery fire the French have captured more enemy positions in the "Labyrinth" southeast of Neuville, and now hold practically the entire system of intricate defences. The Germans have counter-attacked with great fury on the north side of the "Labyrinth." The attacks have been repulsed, the Germans leaving many dead and wounded before the French positions. The enemy has brought up reinforcements and has begun a determined attempt to recapture the ruins of the Souchez sugar mill. During the night the Germans attempted to shell the French troops out of the refinery. French guns replied with great energy and succeeded in silencing the enemy batteries, but a succession of infantry assaults immediately followed. Thus far all these assaults have been repulsed. The Germans are also shelling the "Red Cabaret," a roadside inn captured by the French on Friday, and are spraying shrapnel at the French trenches near Neuville. In the region of Hebuterne the French have taken a number of prisoners and mitrailleuses.

LIQUID FIRE SAYS BERLIN.

BERLIN, via Wireless, June 7.—French troops have resorted to the use of "Liquid Fire" according to an official statement from the War Office this afternoon. The German trenches near Baugois were sprayed with fiery fluid. The attack was unexpected and many soldiers in the advanced works were burned alive before they could retreat. The War Office admitted this afternoon that the French penetrated the German advanced trenches northeast of Soissons.

OTTAWA, June 7.—It is understood here that the British Government is considering the making of cast iron shells which could be manufactured by many factories in Canada which now have not the plant for steel ammunition. The statement is made that the Germans use cast iron shells and find them to be cheaper and just as effective. British shell castings are at present made of steel.

LONDON, June 7.—"England warmly clasps the hand of Italy and welcomes the gallant sailors and soldiers of the Kingdom in the struggle in which the liberty of the world depends," declared Premier Asquith in a speech in the House of Commons this afternoon. The Prime Minister asserted that for half a century no shadow of discord had appeared between Italy and England. Italy, he said, always had been considered one of the custodians of the best traditions of Europe.

LONDON, June 7.—British imports for the month of May, 1915, showed an increase of about 15 per cent. over the same month last year, the United States being heavily drawn upon.

OTTAWA, June 7.—Following are the casualties this afternoon:

LONDON, June 7.—All the new ministers of the British Coalition Cabinet appeared on the front benches in the House of Commons this afternoon.

Premier Asquith announced that the response to Field Marshall Earl and others, were cheered by the whole House when they rose to speak.

Premier Asquith announced that the response to Field Marshall Earl Kitchener's appeal for 300,000 recruits had been satisfactory.

A full announcement of the Government's policy regarding recruiting would be made later, the Premier said in response to a question whether conscription would be introduced.

NEW YORK, June 7.—That "not a gun nor even a gun carriage" was on the Lusitania when that ship sailed from New York May 1, was again reiterated to-day by J. F. Leitch, who was the Lusitania steward referred to in Gutva St. Hal's affadavit presented to the State Department by the German Ambassador, which said Leitch was the man who showed him four mounted guns on the Lusitania. St. Hal has disappeared.

LONDON, Eng., June 7.—Two British aviators bombarded a German airship shed at Evere, north of Brussels, and destroyed it by fire. Whether a Zeppelin was inside the hangar is not known to the Admiralty.

Following its new policy of withholding certain details of Zeppelin attacks the Admiralty did not specify the exact localities attacked in last night's raid.

ROME, June 7.—Servian troops have invaded Central Albania occupying several towns in the lower Dibra region.

PTE. COCKERILL IS WOUNDED

Lisburn Street Boy With the 2nd Battalion Appears on To-day's List

Pte. Allan Cockerill, 25 Lisburn Street, of the 57th detachment of the 2nd Battalion, appears in to-day's list of casualties as wounded. In a letter received by his mother, Mrs. Thos. Cockerill, written on May 24, Pte. Cockerill says that he got a small wound in the back at Langemarck, and also got a good dose of gas. To-day's list merely states that he is wounded and gives the address of the next of kin as Northampton, Eng. Pte. Cockerill's parents, however, live in Peterborough. Unless this is a belated official report of his wound at Langemarck the local boy has been injured in later fighting. His letter of May 20th said he was quite well then.

SUDDEN DEATH OF PETERBORO' MAN IN ROCHESTER

Clarence Staunton, Recently Back From England Where He Tried to Enlist, is Dead—Brother is on Active Service

PARTICULARS LACKING

A telegram has been received announcing the sudden death of Clarence Staunton in Rochester, New York. No particulars as to how deceased met his death has been received.

Clarence Staunton was the sixth son of the late W. A. Staunton of this city. He received his education at the public school and Collegiate Institute. Subsequently he was employed at the Canadian General Electric Company's plant. He left Peterborough about three years ago. A few weeks ago deceased was in England, where he enlisted with the 26th Chester Regiment, only to be discharged as physically unfit for service. He returned to Rochester much disappointed at his inability to serve the Empire. Deceased was about thirty-two years of age. He is survived by four brothers and four sisters, namely, Captain W. R. Staunton, of Port Arthur; W. J. Staunton, of Los Angeles; A. E. Staunton, of Peterborough, and Corp. H. J. Staunton, of the 48th Highlanders, First Canadian Expeditionary Force. The sisters are Mrs. T. W. Wood, of Orillia; Mrs. J. P. Archer, Campbellford; Miss A. M. Staunton, Toronto, and Mrs. S. F. Touchburn, of this city.

Deceased was unmarried. The remains will be brought home to Peterborough for burial. Judging by the nature of the message received concerning his death, it is assumed that deceased met death as a result of an accident. The affair occurred in Rochester.

T.A.S. CENTRAL BOARD HAS MANY ACTIVITIES

Annual Picnic, Summer Camp, Changes at Rooms and Other Matters on Their Slate

A meeting of the T.A.S. Central Board was held yesterday afternoon. There was a good attendance of members. His Lordship Bishop O'Brien was present, and expressed his pleasure with the growing success of the amalgamated movement. The Central Executive has a number of important matters under consideration, the first of which is the annual picnic, for which committees will be appointed at a meeting on Wednesday night. During the next few weeks the grounds will be put into first-class condition. A floating wharf for canoes and other purposes will be built and anchored along the shore, near the club house. It will also be of use for swimming by campers at the park.

Three steamers have been secured: the Islanda, Rainbow, tug and barge. In this respect the service to the park will be fast and commodious. Other details will be gradually evolved.

The Young Men's Athletic Club is proving very satisfactory. A four-team Parish League will be opened on Tuesday night by the baseball section.

Bishop O'Brien has expressed the hope that the members will carry out the summer camp idea on a larger scale than last year. It is generally understood that the camp will be enlarged this year, but there are detailed arrangements ready. Some of the members have been talking of camping with their families at the Park if a boat service could be secured.

The Central Board has decided to combine the library and the ladies' room at the Lyceum, and to convert the present library into a lounging room for the men.

PTE. B. DEAN OF 16TH BATTALION DIES FOR EMPIRE

Well Known Peterboro' Boy Who Enlisted in Winnipeg, Has Been Killed in Action—Relatives Notified

HAD MANY FRIENDS HERE

Yesterday we received the sad news that another of the flower of the youth of Peterborough had given his life in the discharge of duty on the battlefield. Mrs. H. B. Dean received a telegram from the Adjutant General's Department, [illegible] her son, Charles Alfred Weller Dean, of he 16h battalion, had been "killed in action," words that say so little and mean so much. Private Dean, who was known by his intimates and almost everybody else as "Barker," was only 23 years of age. He was somngst the first of the Canadians to offer for active service abroad, having enlisted with the Cameron Highlanders of Winnipeg early in August of last year. In Winnipeg he was manager of the Manitoba Electric Garage, and when the first call for soldiers came he sprang into the ranks and went into training with his regiment at Valcartier, going with the first body of Canadian troops to the front. During his training in England Private Dean was compelled to go in hospital at Shorncliffe with a split rib. After being in the hospital three months he crossed to France with the first draft of Canadian troops after the battle of Langemarck. After his arrival in France, the family received two or three letters from him, the last being on the 17th, and they contained reference to his experiences in the trenches.

The late Private Dean was born in Lindsay, but came to Peterborough in early life and received his education here. He was a graduate of the Collegiate Institute, and during his school course and in after years he gained a popularity, that made him a universal favourite, his general good nature being always in evidence. He showed early favour to military duties, while still at school, becoming a member of No. 6 Company, 57th Rangers. After leaving school he took a position with the Tait Electric Company of Montreal, Toronto and Windsor, leaving the company's service to go to Winnipeg a little more than a year ago. While at school he was a member of the Collegiate Rugby Club and was also interested in baseball. Jhysically he was well knit and of robust constitution, capable of prolonged exertion without fatigue, and was well fitted for "roughing it"—in a way the conditions of active service demanded. In sport, as in all his social relations, he showed the characteristics that made him beloved and popular. He was successively a member of St. John's Sunday school and a member of the congregation, and at yesterday's services touching reference was made to his connection with St. John's.

Private Dean leaves behind him to more deeply mourn his loss, his mother, Mrs. H. B. Dean; one brother, Mr. Warren W. W. Dean, accountane of the Bank of Ottawa, and two sisters, Miss Hazel and Miss Lillian. These are not the only ones that will deplore his early death, for the community generally will sympathize with the bereaved family in the bereavement they and the city have suffered.

WINNERS OF THE REVIEW CONTEST

The prize-winners in the Review competition, for which a trip to the Panama Exposition was given as prizes, were Miss Irene Booth, Miss Marion Gorman, Miss Johnston and Miss Miller. The young ladies are to be congratulated upon the success of their efforts.

Continued Drought Will Hurt Farmers

Unless rain arrives within a short time, farmers predict burned fields, dried meadows and rosy dreams unpleasantly disturbed. Hay is already beginning to show the effects of drought, and milk dealers say the fields are slowly parching. Under such circumstances let us hope the weather man will not be hopelessly remiss.

UNITED STATES' REPLY TO GERMANY NOT SENT YET

Note is Ready and Will Go Forward When President Gives Word—That is All the Information Available at Present

SPECULATION RIFE

SPECIAL TO THE EXAMINER:

WASHINGTON, June 7.—(By John Edwin Nevin)—While President Wilson's note to Berlin remains unsent, indefinite rumours of a possible move that might end the European struggle is being circulated through Washington diplomatic circles to-day They were so intangible that it was impossible to locate their authorship. The rumours, apparently, had their origin however in the offices of the international banking houses, which is naturally interested in the restoration of early peace. The note, itself, was once more back in President Wilson's hands. It was stated that the President was highly displeased over the wholesale speculation as to its contents. A sugrested reason for the delay was that the President may be expecting further word from Berlin. It is known here that the Berlin Foreign Office has been closely watching events in the United States since the original note was received here on May 30th. The only positive official word was that the note was complete and would go forward when the President said the word. Secretary Bryan had an hour's conference with the President this forenoon. At its conclusion he said he had nothing to give out.

In Hot Corner For 18 Days

Bombardier Colquihorn of 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, Writes His Parents

Bombardier George Colquhoun of the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, writing on May 18th, to his parents, in Peterborough, says: "We have been back on the firing line four days for a rest but are going into action again to-night. We are really in action all the time, but what we call a rest is a place where there is not much fighting going on. We were in a very hot corner for eighteen days and I guess we will be in as hot a corner once again, though it cannot be any hotter. We are in a very good place now, but it is not going to last.

BRITISH AIRMEN DESTROY GERMAN PIRATE OF THE AIR

Dropped Six Bombs on Big Dirigible From Height of 6000 Feet and Zeppelin Exploded and Fell

ANOTHER RAID MADE

SPECIAL CABLE:

LONDON, June 7.—A German Zeppelin raided the east coast of England last night, dropping incendiary and explosive bombs. Five persons were killed and forty injured, the Admiralty announced. Two fires were started.

British aviators attacked and destroyed a German Zeppelin this morning in Belgium between Ghent and Bruges. "The British airmen dropped six bombs on the Zeppelin from a height of six thousand feet," said the official announcement. "The Zeppelin exploded and fell."

The destruction of the Zeppelin followed one of the most thrilling air battles the world has ever known. The British airmen shot upward to a height of 6,000 feet and hurled six bombs at the great dirigible which zig-zagged in flight to escape the attack. Scarcely a second after the last bomb went shooting down, a terrific explosion rent the airship. It crumbled in the centre and darted toward the earth.

The force of the explosion caused the British biplane to turn completely over. For nearly a minute the aviator struggled desperately while his machine slid rapidly toward the earth. By an almost superhuman effort he regained control of his levers, and righted the biplane less than 200 feet from the ground. The rapidity of his descent, however, carried the biplane to earth with a rough jar. The landing place was behind the German lines. The mechanician sprang out, "cranked" the propellors, nad the biplane was off before the astonished Germans in a neighbouring field could get the range with their guns.

The aviators who bombarded the Zeppelin shed north of Brussels returned safely, the Admiralty announced.

Peterborough Presents Possibilities Unsurpassed."

MONDAY, JUNE 7, 1915

PROBABLY 1930.

There is a rumour, so far unconfirmed, that the Grand Trunk and Canada Pacific railways are to begin the erection of a new union station in Toronto. Thirteen years ago a site for such a building was purchased by the railways; and if they continue the masterly inactivity—take as long in building as in beginning—of the past, the completion of the new station may synchronize with the close of the present half century. If the two railways operated their railways with as much indifference to public convenience, the present decrepit and debilitated union station would serve. Corporations do not pay much deference to serving public convenience that is not directly conducive to dividends.

ITALY'S MOTIVE.

We are sometimes treated to criticisms of the sordid motives of Italy in entering the war—the mere lust of regaining territory. But there was a deeper and a higher reason that influenced Italy. She is in the fight for, in large part, the same principle that influenced Britain's entry — protest against the outrage of Belgian neutrality. Italy spurned the temptation of the offer of Germany and Austria, of the territory she coveted, if she would consent to the German annexation of outraged Belgium. It is stated that the only terms on which Italy would discuss the maintenance of neutrality were the evacuation of Belgium, and the guarantee of the integrity of Serbia, terms which the robber nations would not listen to. Italy was also determined to break loose from German economic influence, which involved political and moral, or rather immoral, influence. She did not wish her national life to be poisoned by German ideals. Italy may be glad, and justifiably glad, to get back her ancient territory, but at the bottom of her declaration of war is, the protest against German methods, and Germanizing influences, which are hostile to the integrity of everything humanity holds dear.

SUNDAY REST.

Yesterday, Rev. W. L. Armitage, a former Peterborough rector, spoke in two churches in the interests of the work of the "Lord's Day Alliance," which he declared had been instrumental in giving one day's rest in seven to 500,000 Canadian workmen who would have otherwise been forced to work seven days in the week. Apart, altogether, from religious considerations, the sanctity of the Sabbath day, Sunday, as a day of rest is well worth maintaining. From an economic point of view alone, there is profit in one day's rest in seven. Men who work six days a week and even machinery that runs six days a week, are better from a day of rest. On the average more work results would come from similar bodies of men doing the same work, working six days with a day's complete rest, than would come from continuous seven days' work. The seven days' men, jaded and worn, would work with less spirit, less effectiveness, than the six days' men, who come to the week's tasks refreshed and strengthened by a day of rest. If workmen were slaves, and employers were slave drivers, neither would get the best results from seven days' continuous work. Periodical rest is the universal law of nature. We have the changes of season to give a needed rest to growth, and the frail body of man, not to speak of his immortal part is the better all round from one day's rest in seven. The all-wise Creator hallowed the Sabbath day solely as a day of rest — "and rested the seventh day wherefore"—on account of resting — "the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." A day of rest was divinely decreed and this very fact involves alike the duty of resting one day in seven, and the religious duties connected with the divine institution of the day.

BIG DIVIDEND IN WAR TIME.

We give short shrift to traitors or aliens guilty of acts against our interest in prosecuting war. These men are individually dangerous, but not half as great an evil as those who take advantage of the war situation to make inordinate profits at the expense of the consumer and the general public. A manufacturer who made bad boots, and good profits, in equipping our soldiers was bad enough, and unpatriotic enough, and German enough, to satisfy reasonable conditions of depravity; but the manufacturers that make almost cent per cent. profits out of the war situation at the expense of the general consumer, is worse. The milling industry has ground immense profits out of Canadian wheat. It is stated that at a recent annual meeting of a big milling company, dividends of 28 per cent. were declared. The profits of this company had far more than doubled during the war-time year. These profits were for the just past business year of the company, $1,047,997, as against $418,169 for the previous year, an increase of nearly 250 per cent., while the dividend rate increased from 3.7 per cent. to 28 per cent. Such increase of profits in a years when war conditions adversely affected nearly all other departments of business, seems to demand explanation. These immense profits were not shared with the grain grower, and it stands to reason that the consumer got anything but a benefit. It is evident from the trend of the market that there has been manipulation in wheat prices, and these profits show that the manufacture of wheat has been unduly profitable. It seems to be incumbent upon the government to take some steps to prevent such an abnormal condition. We should expect the government to take steps to the grain grower, the middleman and manufacturer, and the interests of the consumer. While our soldiers are making the greatest possible sacrifices on the field of battle, while nearly all of us are making great sacrifices to help promote the success of the war, it seems—well—incongruous that a manufacturing company, should not make sacrifices, but tremendous profits, out of the war situation. The British Government has taken extraordinary measures to protect the national and imperial interests involved in the war; and our Canadian Government might do something to prevent the exploitation of a food necessity in the interests of a few individuals, and against the interests of the people of the country, and of the Empire as a whole.

THE UNDERLYING COURAGE.

On the Transylvania, which sailed Friday afternoon after word of the Lusitania's loss had been received, were a number of nurses from the Royal Victoria Hospital at Montreal, going over to nurse the wounded Canadian soldiers. Four of these nurses called up their parents on the long distance telephone and told them of the disaster, asking if they should still sail. All were told to put their trust in Providence and do their duty. It is this sort of incident even more than the courage of persons confronted by actual danger that testifies to a martial spirit among peace-loving citizens.

Whatever the outcome of the present serious situation, it is a satisfaction to reflect that here in our own country as in Canada the moral temper is not likely to fail to respond to any real need.—New York Times.

FORMAL OFFICIAL STORY OF THE BATTLE OF LANGEMARCK

The "synoptical review" of the operations of the third Canadian battalion at the battle of Langemarck, as given by the officer commanding Lieut. Col. Rennie of Toronto, in a letter to Sir Henry Pellatt, is one of the unique stories which have come from the front. Lieut. Col. Rennie in his letter sends copies of the various orders received from brigade headquarters and transmitted by himself to his command, with the briefest description possible of events as they transpired during the three days that his regiment was under heaviest fire.

Col. Rennie speaks by the order book. He cuts out all the adjectives He strips the fighting of all theatricals. In the terse language of the brigade and regimental order, he describes the movements of his battalion; particularly of the two companies under Major Kirkpatrick which were sent forward about a mile towards St. Julien.

Word came from Division Headquarters that a point one thousand yards to the east towards St. Julien was to be defended by two companies. Companies A and B under Major Kirkpatrick were detailed. The fact that to reach this new position they had to cross over half a mile of fire-swept zone and then dig themselves in, calls for only a brief mention from Col. Rennie.

Few of this detachment returned. The casualties of killed and wounded were great. Major Kirkpatrick and several of his officers, and practically all the remnant of his men, were taken prisoner. Lieut. Colonel Rennie briefly disposes of the tragedy of his event in these laconic words: "No further report has been received from Major Kirkpatrick as to the position of himself or his command."

This "synoptical review" is not a human interest document on the surface, but it contains a wealth of human interest when it is analyzed, is simply a chronological story of orders received and carried out under the most intense and distressing conditions under which men can fight. It is a revelation to those who believe that battles consist of dashing attacks on the enemy and of irresponsible acts of valour. It is simply and plainly a recital of the orders received by the commander of the third Canadian Battalion from his brigadier and of the orders he gave to his own command.

The advance party were able to hold their trenches even at great odds and under heavy fire. It was seen possible to connect up their position with battalion headquarters by field telephone, and it is notable that the last order transmitted to them was an order to retire to conform to the general line. This means retirement from their trenches, and it was during this retirement that the greatest casualties were suffered, and that, with the exception of a few men who were able to reach the general line, the remnant of the command was taken prisoner.

Col. Rennie details these movements with as much sangfroid as if he were recounting a Thanksgiving Day sham fight. He is speaking from regimental orders. It is unnecessary for him to say that orders were carried out regardless of risk and regardless of loss, and he does not even attempt to describe the dangers or the tragedies of the day.

His narrative, however, is most interesting. It is different from every other story yet received about the Canadian fight, for it shows how every movement of troops is part of a greater movement; how every unit of the force acts in unison with all other units; how the whole body is under the intimate direction of brigade and division commanders, even in the stress of most severe fighting. and how, while each commander has his individual responsibility, the chain of authority remains unbrok-

Mr. Rowell's Idea of the Essentials

Special to the Examiner

TORONTO, June 7.—Mr. Rowell knows how to deal with essentials, and to put subordinate matters in their proper place. At a time when some people are trying to foster a slight tendency towards shadowiness in the Ontario temperance situation, Mr. Rowell has turned on the glare of the searchlight and showed up facts as they are. His Fenwick speech was referred to in one of the Toronto papers as "decidedly noteworthy" and it was.

Mr. Rowell did not criticise the new License Commission's work. That was not what he was discussing. It was the essentials of the temperance situation in which he was interested. His attack was on the Government of Ontario which, by the admission of its own leader, prefers the "zig-zag path" in temperance legislation, and which has kept dodging around on this very sort of path.

What Mr. Rowell pointed out was this: The Ontario Government, in spite of the urgings and offers of the Opposition to support them, in spite of the world crisis of the war, in spite of remarkable examples from other countries and from other Canadian Provinces, refused definitely to deal drastically and in a Province-wide scope with the drink traffic; they refused, for example, to close all the bars and shops, permanently; they even refused to close them during the war; they would not even let the people of the Province, by a referendum, say themselves what they wanted done; still more—they would not even shut bars and clubs at seven, eight, nine or even ten o'clock at night. All these proposals of Mr. Rowell and the Opposition they had rejected this session.

The outstanding fact to-day, according to Mr. Rowell, is that Ontario still has the open bar and that the Government, by refusing to close it, is responsible.

Ennismore Court of Revision

The Court of Revision of the Township of Ennismore was held in the Town Hall, Ennismore, May 5. All members were present.

The minutes of last meeting were read and signed.

Two appeals were heard at said Court, which were handed in by John Brick and Edward Sullivan, alleging too high an assessment on buildings, with the result that John Brick's assessment was lowered $50, and Edward Sullivan, lowered $100.

The matter of having wire fences erected on road sides on certain roads in the Township, was left over for further consideration.

After considerable commenting on snow shovelling bills, the following accounts were drawn on the Treasury, for snow shovelling;

John Young, $56.00; William Haggart, $18.00; James Sullivan, $16.10; Clayton Telford, $13.45; March 9th, Patrick Y. Crowley, $13.50 miscellaneous, John Carr, for burying nuisance on the public highway, $1.00; American Road Machine Co., for repairing grader, $8.87; William T. Cavanagh, balance of salary as assessor for 1915, $16; Review Printing Co., $18.90.

It was unanimously agreed by the Council that the Court of Revision would be kept open until the lawful period of time expires.

The Reeve was empowered to purchase a steel road drag and leveller of the best kind.

The meeting adjourned to meet again at the call of the Reeve.

INDUSTRY.

There is no art or science that is too difficult for industry to attain to. It is the gift of tongues and makes a man understood and valued in all countries and by all nations. It is the philosopher's stone that turns all metals and even stones into gold and suffers no want to break into its dwellings.—Lord Clarendon.

OUR DAILY SHORT STORY

PLANS WENT WRONG

Trick of a Spectacular Speculator Foiled by an Honest Man.

By H. M. EGBERT.

"The Alpaca Oil company, sir, is the biggest thing in Texas today," said "Colonel" Ware, looking up at Ormsby from his plate of asparagus. "And what is more, our friends believe in us and are doing all they can to help us—most of them."

There was no mistaking the challenge in the colonel's words. Ormsby looked across the table at Mildred and then fell into a brown study.

Ormsby was assistant editor of "The Financial Observer," a staid, accurate, old-fashioned financial paper, with fifty years of undiminished reputation behind it. That was why it was trusted as few financial papers were. Nobody had ever doubted the honesty of the "Observer" or imagined that it was representative of any special interest. During the editor's absence on a prolonged sick leave Ormsby had been in full control. He was only twenty-six, but he had won the editor's and the owner's confidence as being proof against all influence.

But other influences than money may be at work in a man's mind. Mildred Ware and Ormsby were acknowledged lovers. And "Colonel" Ware was a speculator—a spectacular one. He had won and lost half a dozen fortunes. Just now his whole fortune was placed in Alpaca oil. He was not a dishonest man, but it was known that he was not above turning a sharp trick or two. And Ormsby had not yet been able to ascertain whether Alpaca oil was a genuine investment or a colossal fraud. And he had challenged Ormsby to further his interests with the stock.

The "Observer" had delayed offering its opinion upon this stock, and in that it had exceeded its customary caution, for Alpaca oil was the sensation of the week. The rush for shares had been phenomenal; it had forced up the stock from 55 to 108 since Monday. People were demanding the "Observer's" opinion. And while Ormsby was pondering it Ware had flung out his ultimatum. The few quietly spoken words meant, in effect, "Boom my stock or relinquish Mildred."

"Then Look at That"

Ormsby knew that Mildred understood the situation. He knew, too, that while she would wait for him for any number of years she would not leave her father to marry without his sanction. And they were anxious to be married. They had loved each other for two whole years.

Ormsby kissed her good-bye and went down to his office with a heavy heart. That editorial must be written soon.

"There's a man waiting to see you, sir," said the office boy as he entered.

"Show him in," said Ormsby, and a moment later he was looking into the face of his visitor. The man was of a type that Ormsby knew well and instinctively distrusted; the shady, shabby adventurer, who hangs round newspaper offices, offering surprising information for a small sum. Ormsby was not surprised at the man's opening words.

"The 'Observer' hasn't touched on Alpaca oil yet, I notice," he said.

"Well, sir?"

"It's a swindle, isn't it?"

"If it were a swindle the 'Observer' would say so."

"Would it be worth a hundred to me if I prove to you that it's a swindle?" sneered the man.

"No, sir," said Ormsby. "The 'Observer' does not pay for information from outside. I wish you good-evening."

The fellow leered at him and sat down at the table. He pulled a shabby pocketbook from his coat.

"What would you say, young man, if I was to prove that for nothing?" he asked. "Old Ware did me a bad turn once and I'd be glad enough to get even with him."

"I should say that your facts were probably malicious and inaccurate," said Ormsby.

"Then look at that," said the man, handing Ormsby a photograph. "Taken three days ago by me, at the risk of my life. They've put armed guards round the oil-hole since the flow dwindled down."

Ormsby started. He knew the photograph of the oil gusher, as it hung framed in the colonel's office, with the huge spout of oil playing over the countryside. What he saw was a tiny oozing dribble, and an armed man pacing beside it, rifle in hand.

"Looks good, don't it?" sneered the man. "Read these."

The most cursory survey of the papers and letters flung down on the table showed Ormsby that his suspicions were more than justified. A lengthy perusal convinced him that the man's charges were entirely true. A letter signed with Ware's name, and in his inimitable writing, disclosed the fact that the whole scheme was a trick on a confiding public, to rake in thousands. And when Ormsby put down the papers and stared haggardly at the fellow he knew that his castle in the air lay ruined upon the ground.

Ten minutes later he had begun the most impassioned article that he had ever written. He denounced Alpaca oil as a fraud, he showed up Colonel Ware as an unmitigated scoundrel. Each word might have been written with his heart's blood, for each seemed to place a mile between Mildred and himself. When he had ended they might have been separated by illimitable space.

He finished the editorial, sent a proof by the boy to Manton, instructing his subordinate to have the article set as soon as Manton's formal acknowledgment came over the wire, and hastened home. He fell asleep after hours of agonized wakefulness.

When he awoke he sat up in bed, wondering why his head ached and all his life seemed hopeless. Then he began to remember. The news must have become general property long ago. Doubtless a panic reigned on the street. He pictured chaos in a hundred homes, the colonel's fury, Mildred's tears. Then, putting on his dressing gown, he telephoned his office.

"Hello, Blake," he called to his assistant, "what price is Alpaca oil this morning?"

"It's being quoted at 119," answered Blake without hesitation.

"What!" shouted Ormsby. "What about that editorial in the paper?"

"There's nothing about Alpaca oil on our editorial page," said Blake.

"Then those scoundrels have omitted to print it," shouted Ormsby, beside himself.

"Just a minute, please," said the man at the other end. "Here's Mr. Manton. He wants to talk to you."

A moment later the owner's voice came over the wires.

"Hello, Ormsby," he said. "Say, what in thunder did you mean by that piece about Alpaca oil? I caught it just as I was going to bed and stopped it just in time. Why, that's the biggest proposition that's listed today. It'll touch 150 before the week is out."

"You must be mistaken, Mr. Manton," said Ormsby. "I have positive information that—but wait! I'll be down in an hour. Can you wait for me?"

"Come up to my house," said Manton curtly, and hung up the receiver.

Ormsby, smarting and indignant, dressed himself hurriedly and snatched a few mouthfuls of breakfast; then he took a street car up to Manton's house at Carrington Park, a fashionable residential district. He arrived fuming with indignation. He was shown into Manton's study—to find not only Manton but Colonel Ware and Mildred. The colonel was looking sour and Mildred despondent.

"Ah, Mr. Ormsby," said Manton, "you nearly got us into a fine scrape. The 'Observer' has never made so bad a break as you seemed bent upon making for us last night. Lord, if I hadn't caught that editorial of yours in time! I placed such trust in you, Ormsby, that I've passed everything you've written automatically for weeks. But I happen to be interested in Alpaca oil and—"

"Then I'll write you my resignation, sir," said Ormsby.

"Well, it isn't as bad as that," grumbled the owner. "But—"

Colonel Ware took two or three strides up and down the room. He looked at Mildred, whose lips were trembling; then all at once he stopped and thumped his fist down on the table.

"Manton," he said, "I'm pretty tough, but I can't stand for this. I'm the culprit. I meant to tell you, but I didn't know how you'd take it. That boy isn't to blame."

"What do you mean, Colonel?" inquired Manton stiffly.

"You remember George—shabby little fellow with a lisp who used to spy on the Knack properties? Well, Manton, it may not have been quite straight, but I meant to let you fellows in on it. I tried to work Mr. Ormsby to give us a fair write-up. When he wouldn't I sent George to him with some fake papers and photographs in hopes he'd write just such an article as he did. If that had got into the paper our stock would have been down to 40—and I'd sold half my holdings to buy it in then. Next week, when it was found that Alpaca oil was absolutely sound, it would have jumped to 100 again and I'd have cleared $75,000. And as it is I've skinned out about $20,000 to the bad. And you can thank your stars, Manton, that Alpaca oil is sound, or that article would have blown us all skyhigh."

"Then the mine is good?" gasped Ormsby.

"None better in Texas, sir," said the colonel shortly. "And since you've skinned me out of $20,000 with your confounded honesty I guess you'd better take care of Mildred for me. I don't think I'm a fit father for her, somehow."

When You Were a Boy

WHEN twenty-five to fifty years ago you were a boy, the chances are that you never saw a gymnasium nor a swimming tank. You probably had to hang about the streets when twilight and darkness fell. When you "didn't want to go home" you indulged in foolish horse play. Like others, you may have learned to swear, to "chew" and smoke, and you have had your first experience in the hearing and telling of dirty stories. You were corrupted and corrupting, and the scars of those early days may remain on your soul to this day.

A Typical Y.M.C.A. Youth!

You envy the boys of to-day with their Y.M.C.A. privileges, where they can see the magazines and periodicals and hear sound manly teachers and teachings; where they can have physical training under the direction of a trusted instructor, and where every association is clean and wholesome

They ought to grow up to be young men of strong character, so you say, and their memories of their youth will not be marred and soiled as perhaps the memory of many who read this advertisement.

As the citizens of to-morrow—the men who will take your place in doing the world's work—they have assets which you may have lacked. A body physically sound and full-powered aspirations and ambitions.

Friend of pure boys. Isn't it in your heart to say God-speed to the Y.M.C.A. Perhaps this institution is saving your boy or the son of a boyhood friend.

Give money—if you can't give more. Your money stands for you, it is the equivalent of the time you would like to give. It is the practical expression of your conviction that the Y.M.C.A. is a "good thing for Peterborough." Give as much as you can as a thanksgiving for the arrival of a better day than may have been your day, so many years ago. Men, women, for the love of the ever-growing youth of our city, support the "Y."

We need $12,000 to sustain and help the work. We will tell you in the next few days how we hope to raise it by your help and the help of others.

You have given well and liberally in the past to all good public objects. This is one "Give again."

SAYS GERMANS OUTSIDE OF CITIES ARE STARVING

NEW YORK, June 7.—"Persons outside of the large cities of Germany are suffering greatest hardships. In many rural communities the Germans are starving to death. They are eating roots and herbs. Bread is now impossible for them to get. The residents of Berlin do not know conditions as they exist outside of that city and the people in the country do not know what is going on in the large cities."

That was what Mr. Lisaant Beardmore, who said that he had been a lieutenant in the Twenty-third battalion of Canadian troops, stated yesterday when he reached New York on board the steamship Philadelphia, of the American line, from Liverpool.

"Among the farmers and the country people there is a growing desire that the war come to an end, and the Kaiser is being blamed for conditions and the reverses which the German arms have met," he declared. "As the food situation becomes worse—as it is bound to do—it is safe to predict that the German government is going to be face to face with a sentiment on the part of the people that is distinctly revolutionary."

Mr. Beardmore said he was an opera singer and was appearing in Wagnerian operas at the Kroll Opera House, Berlin, when war was declared.

"I was placed under surveillance with all other foreigners in Berlin and was compelled to report to the military authorities twice a day," he declared. "Finally, when the order was issued that foreigners should be placed in concentration camps, I escaped, and, disguised as a peasant, managed to get to the Swiss frontier. As I was crossing the lines I was challenged by an Austrian sentry, and when I ran he fired at me.

"I got into Switzerland and finally made my way to Paris. Then I went to London and am now on my way to my home in Toronto."

RICHARD HALL & SON LIMITED

Jury Found No Cause to Censure Any Person For D. Guiry's Death

Investigated Automobile Accident on Chemong Road in Which Elderly Ennismore Farmer Was Injured and Died From the Shock He Sustained.

SYNOPSIS OF EVIDENCE

We, your jury empanelled to inquire into the death of the late David Guiry, do find that the deceased died in St. Joseph's Hospital, on Wednesday, June 2nd, 1915, from the effects of an automobile accident on the Chemong Road; and we do find from the evidence that no blame can be attached to any person.

The above verdict was returned at the inquest on Saturday night into the death of David Guiry of Ennismore, on Wednesday, June 2nd, following an automobile accident on Monday, May 31st, near the Gilmour Memorial Church, on the Chemong Road. John Young of Ennismore, who owned the car, was driving it with David Guiry the other occupants.

The jury was composed of T. B. McGrath, foreman; Coleman Blewett, Thos. McQuillan, Ed. Huff, John T. McCoy, Herbert McKee, J. M. Brooks, Joseph Picard, J. F. Thornton, Wm. Curtin, M. Caldwell.

Dr. T. N. Greer, Coroner, presided, with G. W. Hatton appearing for the Crown, and B. D. Hall repersenting Mr. Young.

The witnesses were James Corkery, Dr. J. B. Mann, John Young, Rev. R. J. McLaren, James Guiry, and Ald. J. J. Duffus.

The Jury was out about thirty minutes.

James Corkery.

The first witness, James Corkery, said he and the late David Guiry were returning home on Monday, May 31st, with John Young. They left Blastorah's Hotel, Hunter street, about 6 p.m., driving around to the Duffus Garage. Without leaving the car they returned to Blastorah's. Witness went to O'Donnell's grocery at the corner of Hunter and Aylmer streets. Mr. Young went into Blastorah's hotel.

"I thought he was capable of driving the car," witness replied to Mr. Hatton.

"Did you express yourself as being afraid, when you drove around town?"

"I did not say I was afraid."

"Were you afraid?"

"Sometimes I was and sometimes I wasn't."

"I was afraid he wasn't capable of handling the car."

"Was it because of Mr. Young's condition?" [illegible]

Witness said his feeling gained strength by that. This was before they left the city. He was afraid on the way out, because of the speed at which he said the car was traveling.

"Before the accident, I think it was going 18 or 20 miles an hour; once faster."

"Did you think it was thirty-five miles?"

"Not over that."

"Did you warn Young?"

"Yes; several times."

"Witness sat alone on the back seat; Guiry was with Young, in front."

How Accident Happened.

"We were going fastest just before the accident. The car got unmanageable. He twisted it across the road and back again; then it hit the mail post on the west side of the road. I think it hit the mail box. Any way the car ran around it."

"Were you unconscious?"

"Yes; I was thrown out."

Mr. Corkery said that the car was on its side, the front wheels facing south west and the hind wheels against the post."

"Had you been drinking that day?" Mr. Hatton asked.

"No, sir."

"Young had been drinking?"

"I didn't see him."

"From his condition, what would you say?"

"I'd say he wasn't sober."

Witness said he had been in the hospital for a few days and felt a little sore from the shaking up he received.

To Dr. Greer.

Questioned by Dr. Greer, witness said:

"I was going down street. He asked me if I was going home. I said I wasn't going that day."

However, witness accepted the invitation and also got Mr. Guiry.

Asked as to how he arrived at the speed of the car, witnessed said he guessed it. If there was a speedometer he did not see it. Mr. Young did not seem to be able to shut off the power.

"Did he seem to be driving in a reckless manner?"

"Yes; very recklessly."

"And you remonstrated with him?"

"Yes."

To Mr. Hall.

Witness said the car was going 18 or 20 miles up the hill just at the 4th line of Smith.

"Mr. Young did not let go of the wheel, or anything like that?"

"No."

"When did you first notice that Mr. Young was not in a fit condition to run the car?"

On Reid Street, going up the hill. Afterwards he slowed down. He was showing the old gentleman how the car worked.

Witness said the car was not zigzagging before the 4th line hill. It was the speed he was afraid of.

Dr. J. B. Mann.

Dr. Mann said he was called to the accident a few minutes after six o'clock. Mr. Guiry had two fractures in the left leg, one about three inches below the knee, and the other a few inches above the ankle. He had also a skin tear along his nose. At the hospital, Dr. Mann and Dr. Cameron discovered that one of his ribs on the right side, was broken. The direct cause of death was the shock from the accident. His kidneys did not act from the time of the accident until his death. This would be as a result of the accident.

Dr. Greer—"Were you talking to Mr. Young?"

"I spoke a few words to him."

"Was he sober?"

"To all appearances he was. I did not pay much attention to him; I was taken up with Mr. Guiry and Mr. Corkery."

John Young.

To Mr. Hatton, Mr. Young said: I came into town about 9.30 that morning, and remained around the city until about 5.30. I bought the car last August. I made considerable trips into the city.

Witness said he had been over the country in the car."

"You felt quite capable of handling it?"

"I thought I was pretty safe; I was cautious."

"Were you around the hotels much?"

Witness said his business in Peterborough occasioned him to call at hotels to meet persons.

"I was in three hotels that day—the Palace, King George, and Munroe House; I left my car in my own yard and had dinner in a restaurant."

"Had you a drink in each hotel?"

"I don't think so."

"I went into the King George Hotel about 10 a.m. I had two drinks there."

"Witness said he had business to attend to in various parts of the city. He did not have a drink in the Munroe House.

"I had a glass of lager in the Palace Hotel about 5 o'clock.

"What did you have at the King George?"

"I think I had two glasses of liquor."

Witness said he did not think that what he drank affected him, especially as six hours had elapsed between drinks.

"Do you remember going into Duffus' Garage?"

"Yes."

"Do you remember Mr. Duffus saying: 'Can you make the bridge (Chemong)?'"

"Somebody said it; I don't know who it was, and I did not reply."

Dr. Greer: "That was beneath your contempt; you could make the bridge alright?"

Mr. Hatton — "Do you remember Mr. Corkery warning you on the way out?"

"I do not; I talked only with Mr. Guiry."

The Car Lurched.

"I thought I was driving fast, as I ordinarily do. The car took a lurch to one side. I was on the job and brought it back."

Witness said he hit the mail box on the car's fourth lurch.

"How was your steering gear?"

"Up to that time it had given no trouble; not since last Fall."

Witness noticed the steering gear, about four minutes before the accident.

"Then it made the four lurches in four minutes?"

Dr. Greer—"You could go quite a distance in four minutes?"

"Were you showing Mr. Guiry how fast you could travel?"

"No."

"Was the 'throttle' wide open?"

"No."

Witness said the car was on its side and had turned about three-quarter ways around. The mail-box post showed only a slight mark, about a foot from the ground.

"I did not put on the emergency brake or shut the gas off. I thought I could control the car from the wheel as I was only going about 16 miles an hour.

"Had you a speedometer?"

"No."

"Then you were just guessing about the speed?"

Witness said he lived twelve miles from the town and usually made the trip in 45 minutes. That evening he was travelling about the same speed as usual.

Mr. Young said he was explaining how a car emphasized the extra work a horse had to do going up a hill. The hill would slow up the speed, but as soon as the top was reached a car would spurt ahead, illustrating the extra work on the hill as compared with a level stretch of road.

"Which wheel hit the post?"

"I think it was the right front wheel which was broken. When you go through an experience like that you don't remember much of the details."

To Mr. Hall.

To Mr. Hall, witness said Mr. Guiry said "not a syllable about the speed of the car."

Mr. Guiry had seen me drive every week.

"I had a glass of lager with Mr. Guiry at Blastorah's, before leaving. He bought it."

To Dr. Greer witness explained that the "jerks" or lurches occurred over a distance of about sixty yards. He did not mean "four minutes" but four short intervals—moments.

Rev. R. J. McLaren.

Rev. Mr. McLaren, Pastor of the Baptist Church at the 4th line corner, said he lived near the scene of the accident. He saw the car when it came opposite his window. There was quite a cloud of dust and witness did not see the car strike the post.

"After I did what I could to help the men who were hurt, I examined the car. The right front wheel was broken."

Other damages were detailed.

Mr. Young attempted to explain what had occurred. He seemed somewhat dazed at first; otherwise he seemed all right. I could not say he had been drinking. I did not notice anything; I was only talking with him a few minutes.

To Mr. Hall.

"You remember Mr. Young asking you to telephone for an ambulance?"

"Yes."

"And to Mr. Guiry's people?"

"Yes."

Witness said he did not see anything wrong with Mr. Young.

James Guiry.

Witness said he was a son of the deceased David Guiry. All he knew of the accident was what his father had said to him at the hospital.

He said: "We came flying up the road, going this way and that way, and the first thing we knew we hit a post." It seemed difficult for him to talk and I did not ask him any more questions.

J. J. Duffus.

Ald. Duffus said he reached the scene of the accident about 6.30 o'clock, on his way to his home at Chemong. The damage was not heavy—one wheel, the wind shield, two lamps and one fender were injured.

"I would say the car was all right when I saw it in the afternoon. If the car was going twenty to twenty-five miles an hour witness would expect the damage he found.

"How do you account for the right wheel being broken?"

"I can't account for it at all."

To Dr. Greer—"If it turned over at less than twenty miles it wouldn't look like good handling.

Witness said that if it hit a post it would make a difference.

Steering Gear Sound.

After the accident I found the steering gear all right. My brother drove the car back to the city. I examined the gear when I first saw the car and it was all right.

"The hub was pushed right out of the right wheel. One-third of the spokes were broken. This damage might have been caused by the wheel striking the post, or by a sudden swerve of the car with the momentum acting on that wheel."

A YEAR INDOORS.

"For thirteen months I was so bad with chronic indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were unstrung, the heart bad and smothering feelings came on till I thought I would choke. Doctors' treatment failed me, so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I thank for my present good health. I am now doing my housework and have a family of ten."

COURT STANLEY A.O.F. ATTENDED KNOX CHURCH

Last Night and Were Addressed by Rev. Jas. A. Mackenzie—Discussed the Infirmities of the World

"We then that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves."—1st verse, 15th chapter of Romans.

This was the text chosen by Rev. Jas. A. Mackenzie, preaching at Knox church last evening to the members of Court Stanley, Ancient Order of Foresters, who attended divine service there as a body.

"St. Paul in his Epistle to the Romans devotes a great deal of space to the discussion of the doctrines," said the speaker. "After he has discussed the doctrines at length he turns to the morality. The first fact with which he deals is the world's infirmities. Here is a fact with which we are all familiar. I ask myself what is the meaning of the world's infirmities? They are physical, mental or moral weaknesses. We know there are mental weaknesses, often brought on by illness. Then there are infirmities that are chronic—that cannot be freed this side of the grave, except by the grace of God. It is heartrending to see a soul, longing to take part in the activities of life and unable to do so. This can be seen by a visit to our hospitals. We are told that there are mental infirmities. Some of these are present from birth; some are acquired, you have seen those overtaken with loss of memory. Then there are those acquired from the parents—moral infirmities—those that only the love of Jesus Christ can eradicate. There are also those infirmities which overtake us from our immoral practices. It is not enough sometimes to have good parentage. Misguided practices impair health.

Spiritual Infirmities.

"I will also speak to you of spiritual infirmities. There are many of us who are strong physically, but whose souls are not strong. We know of those whose intellects are bright enough but they are not illuminated by faith. We know of those who have good morals but they have no real vision. They have good morals themselves, but their wisdom never reaches out. We know to-day that we have spiritual infirmities. There are days when our vision of God is clouded.

To Be Met by Strength.

How are these to be met, We have the answer in our text. They are to be met by strength. The strong must bear the infirmities of the weak. Although there have been many infirmities put into the world, there is also a lot of strength from God. If the wanderers are to be brought back from sin this must be done by those who are morally strong. We have a God who fills lives in this world with strength to bring back those who should never have wandered. You will never be appealed to be a message from one who is weak. But you will be appealed to by one who is strong.

If you have a weakness it will be combatted by strength. The world to-day is leaning on those who are strong. The world to-day is seeking that qustude that comes from the Truth of the Almighty.

Problem Can Be Solved.

Friends do you realise that in your fatherly strength, in your spiritual power, the possibilities for redemption in the world never dreamed of? There are wonderful possibilities right here in Peterborough. How many have we here to-night who have listened to the preaching of the Word of God for years Yet we are still nibbling with the drink problem; we are still nibbling with the question of graft and corruption in politics. These problems can only be solved by the concerted and united effort of the people in the name of Jesus.

The Price to Pay.

The third point I wish to speak about to-night is the price we have to pay. We cannot please ourselves; there must be self-sacrifice. Does the doctor go into the sick room where there is a contagious disease and a slip might mean death to him, because he wants to go? No he does not. The same is true of the ministry. Do you think the minister would be the places in which he often is forced to go, always because he wants to be? Do you think the soldiers are fighting in Europe because they want to fight? They are all trying to do their share towards the curing the infirmities of the world.

Help By Strength.

Gentlemen, I know this is the spirit of your Order. It is this spirit that prompted twenty-three of your number to go across the waters to fight the cause of the Empuire. If our lives are modelled after this manner, the reward is to be great. Learn to bear the infirmities of others, strengthen them and by strength help them replace the infirmities with strength. Do not make little of these with infirmities. I pray for God's blessing on all those whose lives are modelled after this fashion."

Lodge Attend Murray Street

Rev. J. R. Webb Delivers a Practical Message to the Canadian Order of Foresters

One hundred and twenty-five members of Court Peterborough, Court Langton, and Court Little John, Canadian Order of Foresters, attended Murray street Baptist church last evening. The occasion was the annual church parade. It was one of the best of its kind ever held in the history of the organization. The members foregathered at the lodge rooms, Simcoe street, where the parade was marshalled and the march to the church commenced. The visiting lodges, together with the regular congregation, combined to fill the church almost to capacity. An interesting and practical sermon was delivered by the Rev. J. R. Webb. His text was taken from the second epistle of Paul the Apostle to Timothy, first chapter, sixteenth verse, "The Lord give mercy unto the house of Onesiphorus, for he oft refreshed me, and was not ashamed of my chain."

An Act of Brotherhood.

The extract constiutes a portion of the second epistle unto Timotheus, ordained the first bishop of the church of the Ephesians. It was written from Rome, when Paul was brought before Nero the second time. Prior to this Paul had frequently availed himself of the hospitality afforded by the house of Onesiphorus. After Paul was imprisonsd in Rome, Onesiphorus sought him out and visited him while in prison. This the speaker declared constituted an act of true brotherhood such as might be exemplified by men of to-day. In the words of the speaker, there are men in the world who are ready to lavish help on their fellow men when they don't need it yet when they are down and out as Paul was, they close up like a clam.

The Prayer of Paul.

Continuing Mr. Webb said: "The Foresters, Oddfellows, Masons and other similar organizations are not in a class with the Christian church, and yet they put the Christian church to shame because of the noble spirit of brotherhood that is manifested in them. Many a time I have been a witness to the many kind acts performed by the Canadian Order of Foresters. They can be compared to those of Onesiphorus who was not ashamed of Paul when the chain was upon him. My prayer for your society is the prayer of Paul, may the Lord be merciful upon your house, that is your organization. When thousands of Foresters are dying on the battlefields of Europe may the Lord have mercy on your society and may its foundations be strong enough to withstand the strain. In conclusion I would say, let each of you prepare yourself for the day when you are called upon to go forward. It will not be sufficient to perform brotherly acts of kindness. Your heart must be right within you.

At the conclusion of the service the lodges returned to the Simcoe street rooms where a hearty vote of thanks was tendered Mr. Webb. Mr. John Hardwick, district deputy, also announced his resignation. It will be necessary to appoint a successor at an early date.

Rudolph Was Wise.

A man who was a regular patron of a certain restaurant said to the waiter:

"Rudolph, instead of tipping you every day I'm going to give you your tip in a lump sum next Christmas."

"Thank you, sir," answered Rudolph, 'but, sr, would you mind paying me something in advance, sir?"

"H'm. It's a funny request," said the patron, "but here—here's five dollars for you. What's the matter, do you need the money, or don't you trust my memory?"

"Oh, no sir," smiled Rudolph, pocketing the bill. "It isn't that, only I'm leaving here today, sir."

What Becomes of Old Newspapers?

What becomes of the thousands upon thousands of newspapers that are discarded by readers on street cars, railroads and in the homes? The question must naturally obtrude itself on the minds of many in the hurrying throngs to and from business, who note the disorderly litter that collects at terminal stations.

Waste newspapers, as indicated by the Scientific American, are used almost exclusively in the manufacture of the cardboard or pasteboard which goes to form the paper-board box in which dressmakers, shoemakers and department stores, generally, deliver dresses, suits, shoes, etc., and one of the largest factories in the United States for the manufacture of this kind of cardboard is located just outside of Philadelphia, Pa.

Long trains of freight cars come in loaded with bales of waste newspaper, the collection of many cities, which have been assembled here for conversion into the clean sheets of cardboard that will be used later for fashioning a box fit to hold my lady's gown of daintiest chiffon or tulle.

The preliminary operation of unpacking the bales of material which have been put together by waste paper dealers is not an agreeable operation to witness. As the mixed newspaper is sold by weight, waste paper dealers are not overcareful in the sorting of the material, and tin cans and other heavy materials may be surreptitiously introduced and some stage of the process of packing the small bundles which are turned in by individual collectors of the material.

After a rough preliminary sorting in which the heavier adulterants are removed, the mass of paper is ground to pulp in a special beating and washing machine. The mass in then led over strainers and the odds an ends of tin, bone, wooden toys, iron and woollen material that have escaped the attention of the first sorters are removed.

A special furnace is maintained for the incineration of these foreign materials, the ash of which is utilized in other industries. It takes a lot of beating, pulping and weighing to transfer the heterogeneous mass of mixed papers, which has the appearance of so much useless rubbish and waste, into the clean cardboard material into which it is ultimately fashioned.

The average suit or shoe box has a story of its own; and is not the simple, prosaic article it looks. If my lady who unpacks the container of dainty shoes, slippers or garments, as received from the store, which reconstruct the materials of which the box is composed, she would be more amazed than the subject of a fairy enchantment; for forests have gone to the making of the newspapers which form the substance of the box, the earth has given up clay to its fashioning, and interwoven with it are the streamers, firecracker cases and the various apparellings of many a carnival.

Added to all this there might stand revealed daily a thrilling story of life's comedy or tragedy as told in the day's news.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

HOW THE GERMANS USE SMOKE CLOUDS

Special Cable to The Examiner:

LONDON, June 7. — The Morning Post's Petrograd correspondent describes the new German method of using smoke clouds in their fighting.

"In the fighting of the Bzura-Rawka sector recently," the correspondent says, "the Germans prepared a twenty-mile front piled the straw linings of their trenches and timbers and all kinds of debris, which had been well watered with hose. These piles were all lighted simultaneously, giving forth incredible volumes of dense smoke. Thereupon a tremendous artillery fire began from the German positions, and following up on the rolling clouds of smoke came a German attacking column, with muffled faces, toward the Russian position. At many points where the trenches were too close together for the effective use of the bonfires, bombs like biscuit boxes were thrown into the Russian lines. These emitted dense poisonous fumes.'

WEEK-END TRIP OF THE TEMPLE BAND

Visited Campbellford and Delighted Crowds at Various Meetings

Adjutant McElhiney and the Temple Band, altogether forty-five members of the local corps of the Salvation Army, visited Campbellford over the week end. They were greeted enthusiastically by large crowds on Saturday night and at the various meetings on Sunday. On Saturday night there was a sacred concert in the music hall, at which Rev. G. A. Brown of Campbellford, was chairman, who was presented by Adjt. McElhiney. Saxophone trios and quartettes by Bandsmen Langford, James, Moyna, Brown and Wells; band selections; instrumental quartette by Bandsmen Calvert, S. Richardson, F. Robinson and Bandmaster Beer, vocal solo Miss Ivy Beer, cornet solo Herb Payton, recitation F. Gray, the male choir and others provided an array of talent which delighted the audience and drew a large crowd to the Sunday night meetings at which Mayor Armstrong presided. This programme included a horn solo by Bandsman Sargent, piano duet by Misses Pearl Payton and Ivy Beer and numbers by the other talent mentioned above. Mayor Armstrong was presented by Mrs. McElhiney. The band returned this morning after a very pleasant visit to the little factory town.

57th REGIMENT AT ANNUAL CHURCH PARADE

Big Turnout at St. John's Church Yesterday Morning—Overseas Men Paraded With Their Old Comrades.

FAMILIAR FACES MISSING

The annual church parade of the 57th Regiment yesterday to St. John's church was marked by two noteworthy features, the absence of many familiar figures from the parade and the presence of a number of khaki-clad soldiers who are on active service. One could not help recalling the church parade of last year, and the officers and men who marched with the regiment then. From commanding officer down through the regiment well known faces were missing, many of whom have been seen in the ranks of the Rangers for the last time. Lt.-Col. Clegg, Major Mills, Major Bennett, Capt. Ackerman, Sergt.-Major Howarth, Capt. Carruthers, Capt. McPherson, dozens of the non-commissioned officers and scores of the men who marched to St. John's church last year were missing yesterday — from the band, the bugle band and throughout the eight companies of the regiment, the absence of those old comrades could be noticed.

The turnout was a splendid one, and the Rangers looked smart and trim in their white helmets and scarlet coats. In addition to the officers of the Regiment other local officers were in line as well as a number of Peterborough officers who are on active service. Capt. Lieut. C. R. Cameron of the 57th and Lieut. Gerald Beckham of the 3rd Prince of Wales Dragoons, who are with the 39th Battalion, C.E.F. Other officers were Lieut.-Col. Miller, Major Cameron, A. M.C., Lieut. Douglas Huycke and Lieut. Meredith Huycke, 34th Field Battery, and Lieut. E. Meredith.

Peterborough's quota to the overseas forces were well represented in the parade by the men of the 39th Battalion, 20th battery and 8th C.M.R. home on leave, and members of the new 59th Battalion. The party was in charge of Corporal John Coppock of the 39th Battalion.

Two members of the 57th Detachment in the First Contingent, who were invalided home from Salisbury, Pte. Levoir and Pte. Curtis, were present at the service, motor cars having been sent for them.

The service was heartily entered by the men. The choir was composed of members of the regiment, and the lesson was read by Lt.-Col. Walker, O.C. Familiar hymns, including "Onward Christian Soldiers," "Holy, Holy, Holy," and "Near my God to Thee," were sung, and in conclusion "O Canada" and "God Save the King" were rendered by the regiment and congregation.

Major Davidson, chaplain of the 57th, delivered a brief but impressive sermon, basing his remarks on part of Acts, 27th chapter, 23rd verse: "Whose I am and whom I serve." The speaker reminded the soldiers that they had more reason than ever to be proud of the fact that they were members of the 57th Regiment. He referred feelingly to the death of old comrades at the front. Their names would live in memory, he stated, and in this connection he referred to the death in South Africa of Pte. Dan. Spence. Major Davidson reminded the members of the regiment of the privilege and honour they had in serving their King and Empire, and in conclusion pointed out to them that not only were they servants of the King but they were also in the service of God.

An impressive feature of the service was the reading of the list of Peterborough men who have given their lives for the Empire. The total was twenty-five. At that time word had not been received of the death of Pte. Barker Dean.

Writes From Old Country

Peterboro' Boy is With the Divisional Ammunition Column

In a letter to his mother, Harold Kennealy, who left here with the First Canadian Contingent and was later transferred to the Division Ammunition Column, R. A. Details, refers to a riot that took place not far from Weybridge, England, when a number of places where Germans are domiciled, were smashed up. Kennealy, whose home is at 269 Thomas street, left Peterborough with the 34th Field Battery detachment. After transferring to the ammunition column he suffered injuries by jumping off a motor truck, that prevented him from accompanying the First Contingent to France. He is out of the hospital and in training with the ammunition column. His letter reads as follows:

Weybridge, May 18, 1915.

"We are all moved from Netheravon now and we had some trip through the country. We were back and forth four times towing the dead trucks to Weybridge.

We are all working here in a big garage owned by Major Watney, and we have one bunch of cars all ready and sent to Shorncliffe. Some of the fellows left with them and there is still another bunch to go, but we may be here for a couple of weeks yet.

Weybridge is a very pretty little place on the Wey river, nineteen miles from London. It is a very pretty little river and the people go out boating on it.

We have a very nice church out here and parade to church every Sunday morning. I am batman for the captain here and we stop at a very nice place, the Heath Club, and the people are very nice around here.

They had a little riot not far from here the other night. —The people smashed up some places where Germans are living.

How is everything at home and how is Laughlin getting along. Tell him to drop me a line.

Hoping to hear from you soon,

HAROLD.

CITIZENS COMPLAIN OF THE DUST EVIL

Deputations May Wait Upon the City Council This Evening.

When the City Council convenes this evening it may be called upon to explain why more adequate provisions have not been made for abating the dust nuisance. From all over the city emanate complaints concerning the belatedness of the City Council in coping with what has developed into a serious situation. Citizens who claim to have an understanding capacity are at a loss to understand why the Council should have delayed action so long. This is the 7th of June and only on a few of the main streets has any attempt been made to subdue the dust nuisance. Some of the sufferers threaten to wait upon the City Council this evening and demand an explanation.

EXPRESS VEHICLE WAS DEMOLISHED

Outfit Owned by Gerald Dunford Figured in Street Car Collision

An express outfit belonging to Gerald Dunford, 238 Rubidge Street, figured in a collision with a street car on Saturday evening, with the result that the vehicle was demolished and the horse so badly injured that it may not recover. Hobert Dunford, who was in charge of the outfit, had a miraculous escape from serious injury. As it was he suffered a number of slight cuts, together with Herbert Fields, who was on the vehicle at the time. The accident occurred at the corner of Park and Sherbrooke streets shortly after eight o'clock. The express wagon was travelling east across the intersection when it was struck by a Canadian General car travelling south. Eyewitnesses say that both horse and waggon were carried a distance of fifty or sixty yards before the car came to a standstill. The occupants of the vehicle were extricated from underneath the debris and were found to have suffered only slight cuts in addition to a severe shock. The horse was so badly injured that it may not recover.

Dog Mortality High.

There were a number of people around at the time and many of them declare that the car approached the crossing without ringing the bell. The corner is regarded as a dangerous one, as many one-time dog owners will voluntarily testify as to the dog mortality at this particular point. Gerald Dunford, the owner of the outfit that was wrecked claims that Saturday night's episode is the second of its kind so far as he is concerned. Another express waggon was sent for and the remains of the one damaged was loaded and removed from the scene. The street car escaped uninjured, with the exception of a pane or two of glass broken.

The development of water power in Norway has made electricity cheaper than steam in that country.
